TO set it apart from all the other adventures in contentment, and the other adventures in friendship, and the other wanderings along the friendly road, this new book of David Grayson's bears a distinct and unmistakable phrase of definition upon its title page: "Hempfield, A Novel." The phrase might have gone further, "Hempfield; An American Novel" would not have been too much to say. For this newest "adventure" by the author of "The Friendly Road" will take its place among the group of novels that, however they may differ in faults and virtues and style and character-drawing and ultimate "aim," are alike in being really American, through and through. "Hempfield" is the story of a group of persons who owned and edited and printed a newspaper in a country town. It is not a Western story, as so many so-called "great American novels" have been. It is not a story of hustling business success, or insidious political corruption, or determined social climbing. It is not a problem novel, or a "novel with a purpose" at all. And its slight plot moves quietly across simple lives. But it is no less distinctively an American novel for all that. And for all its simplicity, its lack of excitement, its contented dealing with small things, there is nothing dull in "Hempfield," and nothing "slow." From beginning to end, this small-town chronicle is interesting.

David Grayson's novel is really another of David Grayson's adventures in friendship and contentment. It is told in the same narrative style, the story of some of David Grayson's friends and of things that happened to them, and of what they did. We are told that the writer, wandering into "town" from his farm one happy Spring day, goes to the office of the local weekly paper to find out who is the author of an editorial that has caused him much joy. The editorial was an irate and scornful attack on "A Man Named Wright Out in Ohio Who Thinks He Can Fly." And from "David's" momentary curiosity comes his knowledge of the history of the events that follow—the meteoric flight of the Hempfield "Star." The novel is not a story of the town, but simply of the town's weekly newspaper, and of the people who managed its destinies. And they are such a gallery of friends as one might wander far afield in hope of meeting, and with whom one is unforgettably glad to spend even a half hour on a weary day.

There is, first of all, the old Captain who wrote the editorial. To the Captain, flying machines and woman suffrage are alike contrary to the course of nature, and the Republican Party is still the grand old party of Lincoln and of Grant, and Democracy still the symbol of the "rebels" against whom he fought at Antietam. There is nothing modern about the Captain, although he does write "trenchant" editorials on such up-to-date subjects as Theodore Roosevelt and William J. Bryan. He is a warrior and an editor of the old school, and a very American old school at that. But Anthy and Nort and Ed Smith are modern enough, in their differing ways, to make up.

Ed Smith is a hustler who is especially employed to make the fading "Star" of Hempfield twinkle with something like its old light. Ed Smith thinks and dreams and breathes success—practical, tangible, visible success, on a solid cash basis. Norton Carr is a rich man's son who has tried out—and tired out—various sorts of "experience," and whom a queer chance brings to Hempfield in the guise of a tramp. Nort works out his own salvation in Hempfield, and it is ultimately he, and not Ed Smith, who works out the salvation of the "Star" as well. For Nort is a hustler, too, a hustler who loves hustling for its own gay adventurous sake, and who dreams of success without bothering about the question of a cash basis. Nort is a modern American character, as "true to type" as is Ed Smith. And both are very living individuals.

As for Anthy—Anthy, a girl just out of college, owns the "Star"; she edits it, she directs it, she sacrifices everything that she can sacrifice to make it go. Anthy's feet, and in Anthy's own soul, the battles of the paper and of its various "sub-editors" are fought out. And Anthy is one of the realest and most lovable heroines of contemporary American fiction.

There are only a few characters in the book, and there is not much incident. It is the real achievement of the author that he makes this quiet chronicle so interesting a tale. And although his story is sweet and tender and full of an invincible human optimism, its sweetness is never cloying, and its belief in the best of things and people never irritates. His optimism has vigor and enterprise to back it. And he writes with sympathy and charm.

And such a story as this, the record of the accomplishments and the struggles of an inconspicuous group of people in a New England country town, is a very American story in all literalness, a picture of a phase of American life, a series of vivid sketches of a few American men and an American woman, a glimpse of the reactions of American politics and American social standards in this modern day. The book has no "local color"; with few changes, what happens in "Hempfield," which is presumably in Connecticut, might equally well have happened in South Carolina, or Kansas, or Oregon. And for its lack of sectional localization, the feeling that it is distinctively American clings the more. The book aims at no reform, flings forth no banner of "rugged realism." But it is a pleasant and lovable story of our own country and our own day.

THE FOOLISH VIRGIN

THE FOOLISH VIRGIN. By Thomas Dixon. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co. $1.35 net.

FOR the scene of his new novel Mr. Dixon has chosen first modern New York, and then the mountains of North Carolina. Mary Adams, his heroine, is a school teacher, the daughter of a country clergyman unable to support his large family. So Mary has made her way to New York, where she has been living for five years at the time the story opens. She dislikes her work and dreams constantly of the wonderful Knight, the "one man created for her," whom she expects to appear some day, marry her, and provide her with a home and an income for the rest of her life. She makes one acquaintances in New York, because her one friend, Jane Anderson, an artist, moves in an unconventional set, and Mary prides herself greatly on her objection to the unconventional. Therefore when Gordon, a famous artist and Jane's friend, sends her a message through Jane, asking her to sit for his new picture of the Madonna, she refuses, pluming herself upon her righteous indignation; she considers that it would be a very dreadful thing indeed for her to be alone with Gordon even for half an hour, because although she knows him to be what Jane calls him, "the gentlest, truest man I've ever met," he is married. A few days later a young man comes up to Mary in the reading room of the Public Library and speaks to her. He has "short, thick, red hair," a massive jaw, and very small hands and feet; and he interests Mary very much. She accompanies him to the Park, and is easily persuaded to spend the next day, which chances to be Sunday, motoring with him. He tells her that his name is James Anthony, and that he is an inventor.

So they motor to Long Beach, and have dinner there. He calls Mary "Kiddo," kisses her frequently—without any objection on her part—and they agree to meet again on the following day. In a week they are engaged, and although Jane accurately describes Jim as a "coarse, ugly, illiterate brute," tells Mary a few plain truths, and begs her not to marry him, she insists that he is "a diamond in the rough" and becomes his wife without loss of time. After spending a little while in Florida they motor to the North Carolina mountains, and stop for the night at the cabin of an old woman who turns out to be Jim's mother. He gives Mary a black handbag and tells her not to open it; this she proceeds forthwith to do, and discovers through the jewels it contains that Jim is a burglar. He admits the fact, and that he has come there in order to induce his mother, who is unaware of his identity, to help him hide his plunder. Having first assaulted and nearly strangled Mary, he has a talk with the old woman. "Blood dripped from every word."

But Mary is not the only one who has troubles. Of the three other women in the book, one fell in love with an "unprincipled scoundrel," but was wise enough not to marry him; the second tells how her drunken husband "threw me down on the floor and gouge my eye out with his big claw," and the third discovered that her supposed husband had another wife living; also he used to amuse himself torturing their child. To balance these attractive gentlemen there is a doctor who is a model of all the virtues, and explains Mary's duty to her in a way she finds quite satisfactory. However much opinions may differ as to the merits of Mr. Dixon's novel, few will deny the appropriateness of its title. It is written in his usual style, and has the customary happy ending, all financial obstacles to which are obligingly removed by the discovery of a mica mine and invention of "new machinery for its working that doubled the market output."

EMMA McCHESNEY

EMMA McCHESNEY & COMPANY. By Edna Ferber. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $1 net.

ACCORDING to all the rules of precedent, one should by now be thoroughly tired of Emma McChesney. Miss Edna Ferber should be especially tired of her, and Emma herself should be tired of life.

But Emma has always been a defier of precedent. She was, you remember, the pioneer among traveling saleswomen, and the travelers for rival firms shook their heads gravely and prophesied a sudden termination to the career of the Buck Featherloom Petticoat Company's charming young agent. Woman's place, they said, was the home—this woman's place, especially.

Her historian has told us, however, that Emma's ingenuity and perseverance brought her victory over all her rivals, including Fat Ed Meyers. Also it has been revealed to us that her undomestic occupation did not hinder her success in an operation peculiarly domestic—that of making a man out of that somewhat unpromising subject, her son Jock.

But now comes her greatest exploit. She appears, more vivacious and attractive than ever, as the heroine of a new book—the third in which she has figured. We find her "cleaning up" Buenos Aires with the same easy power that she had been accustomed to exercise on the dry goods buyers of East St. Louis; we find her (in one of the most humorous and original love stories that has appeared for years) becoming the wife of our old friend, T. A. Buck, her employer; we see her reveling in the new-found joys of a home life undisturbed by business cares, and later, after leisure had grown irksome to her active brain, yielding to the Call of the Petticoat, and triumphantly reentering the world of commerce, and finally—amazing spectacle!—we see her in the rôle of an eminently practical but (of course) doting grandmother.

Now, the extraordinary thing about this series of stories is the cumulative humanness of their heroine. We have had too many series of stories about types—chorus girls, confidence men, engineers, cowboys, and the rest. As a rule the central figure of such a series is the same in the thirtieth story as he was in the first, with this important exception, that he is more of a confidence man or a cowboy, or whatever it is, and less of a personality—more of a type and less of a human being.

There is one thing which every writer of a series of type stories should get into his mind, that is that in real life, and especially in real life in the United States, there is no such thing as a type. For instance, there are no people who are, body and soul, waking and sleeping, eating, drinking and making love, traveling salesmen. There are vegetarians, Christian Scientists, Republicans, people who like Conrad, Kelly-pool players, admirers of post-impressionism, of Dr. Henry van Dyke and of little neck clams with mignonette sauce, who make a living by salesmanship. But their occupation is their only bond; they must be catalogued, not primarily as salesmen, but as human beings.

This psychological fact, which has escaped the attention of many of our most industrious contributors to the magazines, has not eluded Miss Edna Ferber. The Emma whose adventures fill this entertaining volume is the same Emma who first stepped daintily into the hearts of the public from the pages of the American Magazine. But the years have

RUSSIAN NOVELIST TELLS HIS OWN STORY

Maxim Gorky's Record of His Childhood Gives a Picture of "Oppressive Horrors" in Russia About Which We Know Little

MY CHILDHOOD. By Maxim Gorky. New York: The Century Company. $2.

THIS arresting credo appears almost at the end of Maxim Gorky's record of his childhood. It ought to be an introduction to the book. And it must serve as text to the reviewer and as prologue to the review.

As I remember these oppressive horrors of our wild Russian life, I ask myself often whether it is worth while to speak of them. And then, with restored confidence, I answer myself: "It is worth while because it is actual, vile fact, which has not died out, even in these days—a fact which must be traced to its origin, and pulled up by the root from the memories, the souls of the people, and from our narrow, sordid lives."

And there is another and more important reason impelling me to describe these horrors. Although they are so disgusting, although they oppress us and crush many beautiful souls to death, yet the Russian is still so healthy and young in heart that he can and does rise above them. For in this amazing life of ours not only does the animal side of our nature flourish and grow fat, but with this animalism there has grown up—triumphant in spite of it, bright, healthful, and creative—a type of humanity which inspires us to look forward to our regeneration, to the time when we shall all live peacefully and humanely.

The consideration of Gorky's book must start from Gorky's apologia—an apologia not for his own life, but for the life of all Russia in the telling of his own life's beginning. This is indeed a book of "oppressive horrors," told with the simplicity and directness with which they registered themselves upon the mind of a child, and made unforgettable to us as—our platitudes about "volatile, quick-recovering childhood" to the contrary notwithstanding—to a child they must be. And here and there one finds flashes of tenderness, of insight, of sheer poetry in the hearts of brutish-seeming men, that, if it cannot lift us all to the heights of the author's confession of faith in the soul of his nation, makes us understand something of how that faith can be.

It is, of course, unnecessary to state that this "autobiography" of Maxim Gorky is not simply the story of a famous author's childhood, but a picture of Russia. It is not the Russia of oppressed peasants and persecuted Jews and threatened uprisings and abortive intrigue, but that other less hopeful Russia with which several other writers have made us vaguely familiar—the matter-of-fact, dull, quarrelsome existence of the "lower bourgeoisie." Gorky's grandfather, with whom his childhood was spent, was a small manufacturer of dyestuffs in Nijni-Novgorod; his father was a soldier's son; his stepfather was a surveyor; his neighbors any number of things, lower class folk in a town. None of these people were successful, but for most of the years of his childhood none of them were pinchingly poor; that kind of experience came later in the life of this "bitter pen." And the "oppression" of their life was from within. The "horrors" of the boy's childhood were not persecution and hunger, but quarrelings and beatings and lying, distrust and drunkenness and avarice, personal brutality in various forms, utter lack, in almost all the people about him, of personal self-control. The men who surrounded the little boy were like children in their undisciplined rages and their undisciplined self-indulgence; and they were like children, too, in their love of simple pleasures, of legends and wonders, of music and dancing, in their quick response alike to beauty and anger and pain. This is the Russia that Gorky shows us as he knew it when he was a child. This is the Russia in which he finds youth and health and hope for a peaceful and humane soul. And he describes it, people and things and events, with entire literalness.

The book opens with the record of a little boy's impression of what are the most haunting horrors of everyday existence—a man's dead body and the birth of a child. His brother was born, and died immediately, in the room where his father lay awaiting the ceremony of burial. That is Gorky's first memory. But into it, to lighten its awfulness for the child and for the reader, came at once the absorbingly interesting figure who is the "heroine" of the book—the child's grandmother.

Maxim Gorky's grandmother was fat and jolly and simple of soul; she could not read or write; she sometimes drank too much vodka, and she loved snuff; she believed in devils and angels and the constant presence of heavenly powers to help her through the day, and in her superstitions and her religious belief and her love of legends and history and the poetry of the people, she exercised an immeasurable influence upon the lonely and imaginative child who spent his most impressionable years at her side; she was always doing some kindness, and she occasionally lost her temper; but no piece of heroism was too great for her to undertake with entire simplicity, and no insult was too galling for her to forgive. As a piece of Russian portraiture, an enduring place will go to Maxim Gorky's grandmother.

By no means lovable, the old grandfather is unescapably interesting, too. He lost his temper and beat the child until he was unconscious; and then he went to his bedside and told him wonderful stories of heroes; the next week, and on all the weeks after, he systematically beat him again; but he taught him to read and write; he made him learn the Psalter and read long portions of the ancient prophets; he prayed like an ancient Jewish rabbi, and he spoke at times like an ancient Jewish poet, (and it may be noted that this is itself is very interesting, in the presentation of so orthodox a family of Russians;) he was a person of disgusting brutalities, and he was very like a child. And he, and his sons and his daughter and his neighbors, are drawn with irresistible distinctness. Here is a description of a woman who scarcely plays a part in the book at all, but who made so strong an impression upon the child that he could never forget what she looked like and how she made him feel:

> The old green woman often appeared—looking just like a rotten paling in an old fence. The eyes seemed to be sewn on her face with invisible threads, and looked as if they would easily roll out of their bony sockets, as she turned them rapidly in every direction, seeing and taking notes of everything—raising them to the ceiling when she talked of God, and looking down her nose when she spoke of household matters. Her eyebrows looked exactly as if they had been cut out of pieces and stuck on. Her large, protruding teeth noiselessly chewed whatever she put in her mouth with a funny curve of her arm, and her little finger stuck out; while the bones about her ears moved like little round balls, and the green hairs on her warts went up and down as if they were creeping along her yellow, wrinkled, disgustingly clean skin. She was always so very clean, like her son, and it was unpleasant to go near them. I hated the old woman with an intense hatred, and many blows did that feeling cost me.

And alongside of descriptions like this must be put the charming picture of a gay evening of music and dancing and thrilling tales. The volume abounds, too, in sketches that are strange, and foreign, and picturesque.

"My Childhood" is a notable book as a picture of Russian life, notable exactly as a Russian novel is notable. But it is valuable, of course, as Maxim Gorky's life, too—in nothing more than the broken record of his education—the Psalms that he read, the stories he listened to, the training that eye and ear and imagination unconsciously received. Maxim Gorky is one of the great writers whom we think of as having had no training in their trade, as having been a vagabond and little else, until he suddenly began to write the record of what he saw. This story of his background, giving him, with all its horrors, some real "education" for his later work, is an important piece of literary history.

For the rest, we end as we began, with the author's own word:

> I imagine myself, in my childhood, as a hive to which all manner of simple, undistinguished people brought, as the bees bring honey, their knowledge and thoughts about life, generously enriching my soul with what they had to give. The honey was often dirty and bitter, but it was, all the same, knowledge—and honey.

A CUBAN IN MEXICO

MI VIAJE A MEXICO: A PROPOSITO DE LA REVOLUCION. Por M. Fernandez Cabrera. Prologo de Conde Kostia. Epilogo de Felix F. Palavicini. Habana: Avisador Comercial.

SENOR CABRERA is a brilliant young author and newspaper correspondent who was sent to Mexico by the Heraldo de Cuba to write a series of articles on the revolution and its leaders. These articles are now published in book form with a highly appreciative introduction by Conde Kostia of Havana, and a still more enthusiastic epilogue by Felix F. Palavicini of Vera Cruz. To a large degree the book justifies the praises of these friendly critics.

The author landed at Progreso, stayed many days in Vera Cruz, made the acquaintance of all the Constitutionalist leaders, and finally journeyed with Carranza and Obregon toward the City of Mexico, at last making his way alone through the Zapatista lines to the Mexican capital. He found the city intimidated, desolated, the streets almost deserted. Here he interviewed various leaders of the factions, including President Gutierrez, who two days later fled to San Luis Potosi, carrying with him "his gigantic humanity and 10,000,000 pesos from the public treasury." It was a dangerous interview, and Señor Cabrera adds that the man's brutal eyes still haunt him and freeze his spinal marrow. His return journey to Vera Cruz was full of adventures, and he relates them with all the romantic gusto of youth.

Señor Cabrera is heart and soul in sympathy with Carranza and his followers. He is convinced that the First Chief is a great man and a sincere patriot, and his character sketch of him has a feeling of enthusiastic worship that is more or less contagious. He says:

> The Mexican revolution is not the product of insane ambitions, of race fatalism, of what an audacious Foreign Minister called "the management of 11,000,000 brutal Indians by 200,000 white knaves." . . . Venustiano Carranza is the revenger of the most tragically ferocious tyranny known to the ages—the tyranny of crime over murdered liberty. The revolution is, therefore, something other and more than Don Venustiano; it is something other and greater than any man, however lofty; but Don Venustiano is the man of the revolution!

The author's denunciations of Huerta are as emphatic as his praises of General Obregon and all the men connected with Carranza's cause. His character sketches of these men are a valuable feature of the book. He believes that the Constitutionalist cause is irresistible and will triumph in spite of General Villa's "dark vein of genius." His attitude toward "Yankee" intervention is much the same as Don Venustiano's. He thinks Mexico can settle her own problems.

Señor Cabrera writes with all the faith and fire of youth, and with the tropic imagination of his race. His command of pure Castilian is as noteworthy as his wealth of imagery and his knowledge of the literature of other lands.

GEORGE BRONSON-HOWARD.

Bronson-Howard has written the great novel of the year. "God's Man" is a thrilling narrative of the New York of now, one of the few works of fiction that deserves to be called a novel, in the sense of the word when we speak of Dickens, for instance. The scene is New York and Long Island time, present day; purpose, to show through the lives of three young men the social injustice of modern civilization. "God's Man" is powerful, dramatic, absorbing, original in both substance and style. Thirty-five speaking characters live in its four hundred and seventy-five pages and appeal to every emotion.—Adv't.

One of the most winsome of our contemporary essayists writes: "Social talent is a true and rare thing; the essence of it is a reverence for the talents of others, a spiritual hospitality which discovers that other people are remarkable."

Mr. Putnam might well have been the instance of Mr. Chapman's generalization. For it is only the possessor of that golden gift, the social talent, which could have made possible two such volumes as "Memories of My Youth" and "Memories of a Publisher."

The author records what he can remember of the people with whom he has had personal relations on both sides of the Atlantic during the fifty years since 1865, and he gives also his own views in regard to certain questions of the day in which as a citizen he has taken his part, such as Free Trade, Honest Money, Civil Service Reform, Copyright International and Domestic, and matters connected with municipal, State, and national politics.

WHEN THE WAR IN EUROPE IS ENDED

C. Ernest Fayle's Interesting Analysis of Problems That Will Come Up for Solution in "the Great Settlement"—Recent Books on the War

THE GREAT SETTLEMENT. By C. Ernest Fayle. With maps, and a preface by Lord Esher. New York: Duffield & Co.

It is rather early to make new maps of Europe on the basis of a complete victory by the Allies, but it seems to be a favorite pastime with English writers. The most exhaustive discussion of peace treaty problems that has thus far appeared is C. Ernest Fayle's "The Great Settlement," written under the auspices of the Garton Foundation for Encouraging the Study of International Polity. This book deserves attention on account of its able presentation of the basic principles involved in any wise settlement.

How can national boundaries be readjusted at the end of the war so as to insure permanent peace in Europe? The author makes every other consideration subservient to that test. One of the first great facts that he comes up against is an intense nationalism, the new spirit of solidarity in each nation, which was one of the prime causes of the war. The Congress of Vienna failed to secure permanent peace because it set up artificial boundaries and disregarded the national principle. This principle, therefore, should shape the new frontiers as far as possible.

If the Allies are victorious, Mr. Fayle thinks they ought to restore Poland, with autonomy under the Czar; give back Alsace-Lorraine to France, and create a southern Slav State, which would add to the existing Kingdom of Serbia the southern districts of Austria-Hungary. His aim would be to unite all the Slavic populations of that region, so far as they desired it, into this one new Balkan State. Austria and Hungary, shorn of the smaller groups which they have been oppressing, should then be left unmolested, to exist together or separately, as they may choose. He thinks that the new Slavic State would not be subservient to Russia.

"Italia Irredentia" should go to Italy. Turkey should be pushed out of Europe, and Russia should have Constantinople and access to the sea, in spite of any supposed danger to the British route to India. The whole welter of interests, races, and religions in the Balkans is discussed intelligently and in detail.

Mr. Fayle says it is nonsense to talk of crushing Germany, or permanently disarming her. The interests of peace demand that she shall not have any just cause to plan a revenge. He is not in favor of seizing any of Germany's African colonies, though he thinks the South African Union may demand an edge of German Southwest Africa, and some arrangement should be made for a Cape-to-Cairo railway through German East Africa. The Japanese have taken control of Kiao-Chau, Germany's foothold in China, and that is gone forever. For the rest, however, the author urges that nothing be done to impede Germany's colonial expansion, and that no obstacles be put in the way of the Bagdad railway scheme.

But perhaps the most interesting phase of the author's peace plan is his opposition to levying a large war indemnity. He admits that in case of defeat Germany and Austria could be made to pay $10,000,000,000 in installments, and that the African colonies could be held as security; but even that sum would not begin to pay for the cost of the war, and Mr. Fayle questions whether it would be a wise business policy to demand any very large financial contribution. Germany has not the stored-up capital to meet such an emergency, as France had forty-odd years ago. She would have to borrow, and the United States is the only neutral country capable of subscribing such a loan. On this point the author says:

> The surplus capital of the world will be badly needed at the end of the war for the purpose of restoring the position of industry and commerce, and the raising of an immense indemnity loan in America is neither probable nor—from the Allies' point of view—desirable. Such a loan would necessarily compete with the requirements of British traders in the money markets of the world. It is true that the British Government would receive the money without the payment of interest; yet it may be doubted whether this advantage would counterbalance the effect of its diversion from commercial channels.

Still more important, however, is the bearing of an indemnity upon the question of a lasting peace. The only effective safeguard against a new outbreak of German militarism must come from a changed attitude of the German people toward the military clique. Defeat would discredit the war party, and a heavy burden of direct taxation will work in the same direction; but if the Allies demand an enormous indemnity, the resentment of the German taxpayers will be deflected from their own discredited leaders to the allied Governments. Thus a large indemnity might be dearly purchased if it gave those most responsible for the present war the one instrument by which they could maintain their hold upon the German people.

Another thing: A great war indemnity on top of gigantic national debts might drive Germany and Austria to repudiation, a catastrophe which could not be viewed without the gravest apprehensions by the whole financial world. An indemnity must be exacted to compensate Belgium. The author suggests that this be made a first charge on the German and Austrian revenues for a term of years; but he thinks the Allies' demands for money should not go much further.

A feature of Mr. Fayle's peace plan is an alliance of all the European powers, including the Teutonic nations, entitling the signatories to act together against any one or two that violated the peace of Europe. He advocates also a system of organized non-intercourse, the "outlawry" of a recalcitrant power. He thinks this could be used with tremendous effect, especially if the United States would join the agreement.

The book in the main is business-like and practical, as well as large minded and ethically sound.

THE SOUL OF EUROPE

THE SOUL OF EUROPE. By Joseph McCabe. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $3.

Europe has no individual soul as yet, despite the title of Mr. McCabe's book, but he thinks that one is being evolved from the souls of the various nations now at war, and these he undertakes to analyze and describe. As he is an Englishman, he modestly omits the British soul from his catalogue. The rest are all here, from the German soul to that of the unspeakable Turk; from the alert mind of France to the groping spirit of the unawakened Slav in Russia and the Balkans.

Mr. McCabe has no use for the scientific theories about long-headed and round-headed racial stocks, as all four types are inextricably mixed in every nation in Europe. He also discards as foolish and mischievous superstitions all the claims of particular races to innate superiority over others. His wanderings all over Europe have convinced him that one nation has essentially the same capabilities as any other, and that the backward ones are so mainly because of some definite historical or environmental reason. The Turk, for instance, has as good stuff in him, and as kind a heart, as the Italian or the Englishman; but he has been kept back by isolation, ignorance, and a villainous government. The Balkan peoples are still living in the Middle Ages for similar reasons. Mr. McCabe, therefore, has devoted himself mainly to a study of the psychology of each nation in terms of its history and environment.

The savage strain in the German soul, as revealed in the Belgian atrocities and the sinking of the Lusitania, is not a natural German trait, says this author; like the ludicrous claims that Jesus Christ, Dante, and Michael Angelo were all of German stock, it is simply a product of a school system in which the children have been saturated with militaristic ideas for political purposes. The present generation has been soaked in a pernicious literature, partly provided by fanatics, partly by interested merchants, manufacturers, and soldiers. Being fully prepared for a "defensive" war, the people thus educated were easily won to the idea of an "offensive" war. A little diplomatic rhetoric, says Mr. McCabe; a little lying about perfidious England, a little emphasis on the barbaric Slav, and the whole nation, including Socialists who had sung the "Internationale" for twenty years, thronged to decorate the trains which bore their sons to the grave.

War-time prejudice is not altogether excluded from Mr. McCabe's estimate of the Kaiser; but, as a whole, his book is tolerably free from it. The chapter on Russia is anything but complimentary to the Czar, who is described as "a nervous, delicate, mediocre man." The author holds that the average Slav is not barbaric and would not endanger the advance of culture if set free from a corrupt and tyrannous bureaucracy.

One of the most satisfactory chapters is that on France. The author declares that the solid and central trait of the French character is intelligence—swift, flashing, accurate "common sense." He denies that either frivolity or imagination is an outstanding French quality, agreeing with Miss Betham-Edwards's view that "the French nation is the most serious in the world." On historical grounds he shows that the French nation is more largely Germanic than Celtic or Latin. Incidentally he makes the questionable assertion that Alsace and Lorraine would probably vote to stay with Germany by an overwhelming majority, but that they must be given back to France in order to cripple Germany and thus help to insure peace to Europe.

While not without its faults, the volume contains a large fund of information on all the warring nations, and is written in an attractive style.

AUSTRIA'S DEFENSE

WHOSE SIN IS THE WORLD-WAR? By Count Julius Andrassy. Translated from the Hungarian by Ernest J. Euphrat. New York: New Era Publishing House.

Austria-Hungary's version of the responsibility for the war does not differ materially from Germany's, but Americans will welcome this calm statement of it from one of her political leaders. The translator of the book has not quite mastered the English language, but that is a surface detail.

Count Andrássy, a Hungarian, is a former Cabinet Minister and a son of the famous Andrássy who was Minister of Foreign Affairs at Vienna a generation ago. He frequently cites his father's acts and utterances to show that Austria's policy in the Balkans has not been one of territorial aggression. He lays the blame for the present war primarily upon Russia, taking it for granted, of course, that Austria-Hungary should have been allowed to make Serbia a vassal State. He strikes at the weak point in Russia's armor thus:

> We had not mobilized a single soldier against her, and had called out only eight army corps, just what we considered sufficient to defeat the Serbian Army, estimated at 400,000 men, and Russia replied to that by admittedly mobilizing against us and starting her troops in the direction of our frontiers.

The author's conviction is that Russia, cut off from further Asiatic expansion by Japan, was preparing for conquest in Europe at the expense of Austria-Hungary, and intended to use Serbia as a tool. She feared that Serbia would desert her if she allowed the smaller State to be humiliated. On the other hand, Austria-Hungary feared Serbian and Russian aggression. These reciprocal fears caused the war. Count Andrássy continues:

> Owing to her own offensive purposes Russia could not permit that we be relieved from the danger of a two-sided attack. Therefore, she started in the war jointly with Serbia in order not to subject herself to the danger that somewhat later the struggle take place minus Serbia. Our solitary purpose was to insure our internal peace by putting a stop to the aggression within our borders, Russia's, however, to keep it up and thereby to improve the prospects of a later war. For this reason did war become imperative.

Count Andrássy contends that if Germany had forbidden his country to defend herself against Serbian agitators she would have signed the death warrant of the Hapsburg Empire and ultimately her own. The Slavic power, he says, would have been extended to the Adriatic, enveloping both Teutonic nations and ultimately crushing them. In this he undoubtedly expresses a prevalent fear, but no convincing proof of such a danger is offered.

Austria had no intention of annexing Serbia, says Count Andrássy. The answer to that statement is—Bosnia-Herzegovina. The author's defense of the annexation of the latter provinces simply indicates what was in store for Serbia. Would he not, a few years later, have been saying what he does of Bosnia-Herzegovina:

> It would be absurd even to assume that we should spend millions on a province which we only hold subject to a notice to quit.

The logical weakness of his whole case is typified in his defense of Prussian militarism. If Germany chooses to maintain a great army, he says, what business is that of her neighbors? He continues:

> Whoever does not like the prominent part the army plays in Prussia should not imitate those ways, but maintain the rule of the civilian class in his own State. There are many who do not like the anti-religious tendency and the socialistic republic of the France of today, but would it occur to any other State to attack France just to drive her into more sympathetic political ways?

Such a parallel, of course, is nonsense. Count Andrássy's book contains nothing that will alter the world's judgment.

HUMAN SIDE OF CAPTAIN SCOTT'S VOYAGES

Thrilling Narrative of Adventure Compiled from Earlier Books and Diaries of the Famous Explorer of the Antarctic

THE VOYAGE OF CAPTAIN SCOTT: Retold from the "Voyage of the 'Discovery'" and "Scott's Last Expedition." By Charles Turley. With an introduction by Sir James M. Barrie. Illustrations in black and white and color, and a map. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.

THERE are no new facts to be made known about Captain Scott's two voyages to the Antarctic. If the events of his life are not bright in the memory of the public at large, it is because the splendid pathos of his death outshines them all, and belittles their importance. In recounting what is practically the story of Captain Scott's life, Charles Turley makes no claim to original discovery or to the setting forth of something hitherto unknown; his book is, as is stated on its title page, a retelling. He has taken the facts of Scott's voyages, as they were published in the two earlier books and in Scott's diaries, and woven them into one consecutive record, to be contained within the compass of one volume. The book, which was written at the instance of Lady Scott, brings the history of Captain Scott's achievements within reach of interest and attainment for a great many people who might never undertake anything so large as the two big volumes of the earlier records. And it is safe to say that it loses little or nothing in the fact that its story has been told before. It is a story that has needed retelling, and that has needed to be retold in just such a way as this.

It is nearly four years since Scott died, and the world has laid tremendous claim upon our interest since; but reading this book now, in this autumn of nineteen-fifteen, it is impossible not to feel that this should be one of the most read, one of the most really "popular," books of the coming Winter. It is vivid, human—we come back to the earlier adjective—splendid. And for the way in which he has massed his material and told his story, Mr. Turley deserves the highest praise.

It must not be supposed, however, that this record of the voyages of Captain Scott is "just like" the two books from which its facts are gathered, or that it is a mere condensation of the earlier volumes. Mr. Turley has, from beginning to end, emphasized what may be called—for want of a better word—the "human" side of his narrative. He has written about Captain Scott less as a heroic scientific explorer than as a man. He has not neglected the heroic qualities—it would be of course impossible to write about Captain Scott as other than a hero—but he has given us a very human and intimate and lovable portrait of a heroic man. His story is full of jollity, and sweetness, and consideration of little, personal, significant things. Scott working out plans with his men, Scott having a "regular picnic" over a good dinner after weeks of actual hunger, Scott, "managing" so as to spare the ponies, risking his life to save a dog—these pictures stand out very clearly throughout the book. We are left with a vivid acquaintance not only with a man who dared much, achieved his aim, and died courageously, but who was a good man to work with, and live with, and suffer with.

Scott knew every one of his officers and men intimately and personally, and loved them all. He never failed, in his letters and diaries, to point out not only how fine his fellow adventurers were, but the very different ways in which each one's fineness worked itself out. "Bowers is a little wonder." "Cherry-Garrard is clean grit right through." "It is extraordinary to think what pains Atkinson will take to do a kind thing unobtrusively." Day has the sweetest temper and all sorts of nice characteristics." "I believe Bill Wilson really is the finest character I ever met." These are a few of his comments on the men who started out with him on the southern journey. And again and again in the course of his narrative Mr. Turley has occasion to refer to Scott's consideration for the animals used on the trips. As readers probably remember, Captain Scott did not want to use dogs and ponies at all, because of the suffering that the long marches entailed; it was only to absolute necessity that he surrendered his wish to spare his beasts. And throughout both his expeditions, whether he was climbing down a crevasse to rescue a dog that had fallen, or shifting burdens so as to spare a pony that was tired, his thought for his animals never failed.

Mr. Turley's book has a very decided merit in its unfailing cheerfulness. The one thing that no one ever forgets about Captain Scott is that he died on his journey back from the pole, that he and the four companions who attained the goal of their ambitions never got back to the shelter of their camp. The other fact that is in every one's mind is that he reached the south pole at last, only to find that another man had got there a month before him. There are sentences in Scott's diaries that most of us will remember always. And there are heartbreaking sentences. The end of his story is a heartbreaking thing. There is no ordinary "tragedy" about it: there cannot be "defeat" in the death, or the disappointment, of a man whose constant triumph was so fine. But it remains heartbreaking. No thought of its magnificence can make it anything else. And it would have been very easy—it seems as if it would have been almost inevitable—for Captain Scott's biographer, writing months after his death, to dwell upon that pathos, to forecast the sadness of his story's ending, to let some hints of it creep into the narrative even of the earlier voyage. Mr. Turley never does. His story moves on from week to week and from one journey to another, full of adventure, of bravery, of effort and achievement—absorbing, thrilling, fine. Never for one moment does he descend to sentimentality, never does he foretell the end of the adventuring, or allow any shadow to dim the bright spirit of his heroes and the glory of his tale. He tells a story of heroic living, and when he comes to the end he tells us very simply how his heroes died.

Sir James M. Barrie's introduction is a little collection of personal memories, and a short summing-up of Captain Scott's early life. It is very brief indeed—only twelve pages—but it is so fine and so charming a picture that every one ought to read it—but then, every one ought to read the whole book! "Con" Scott, as he was called, was a delicate boy, dreamy, thoughtful, very modest, but always very brave, and ever as a little boy unusually considerate of others. The iron constitution of his adult years was partly of his own making, the result of rigorous training, one of the outgrowths of his hatred of "slackness." He trained himself to "hardness" and to self-control—not an easy thing, for he was a hot-tempered youngster. Barrie says, significantly: "The faults of his youth must have lived on in him as in all of us, but he got to know they were there and he took an iron grip of them and never let go his hold."

"The Voyages of Captain Scott" is rich in excellent illustrations, the most notable being a new portrait of the naval Captain, and a charming photograph of him as a 15-year-old boy.

LETTERS ON AN ELK HUNT

LETTERS ON AN ELK HUNT. By Elinore Pruitt Stewart. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1 net.

THE Woman Homesteader has made as many friends as she has readers, and they are all as glad to receive her letters as her former employer, Mrs. Cooney, must have been. By the bye, how, in the midst of her active and strenuous life, she found time to write at such length is as puzzling as were "Miss Byron's" epistolary feats, which Sir Leslie Stephen estimates must have occupied eight hours a day. Be that as it may, very spontaneous and pleasant are Mrs. Stewart's letters. They show such ability in selective discernment and picturesque description that the reader is somewhat irritated by the one or two localisms, especially the unpleasant "plumb" for "entirely" or "absolutely" to which she so tenaciously clings. Instead of giving color to her letters, they are out of keeping with their literary quality. As to their spirit and charm, these are well described in the words of a writer in The London Athenaeum, who said of her former book:

"The reviewer recalls no other collection of letters so compact of health, mental and physical, of sincerity, and of simple happiness. To a world living in the shadow of carnage and suffering it offers a message of the sunny simplicity and kindly good sense of which are delightfully bracing."

We hope Mrs. Stewart will continue to write to Mrs. Cooney, and that the good lady will not fail to pass on the letters to a public which needs just such tonic.

FICTION

THE prevailing looseness of thought on a subject of such popular interest as fiction is admirably set forth in the first of a series of articles by Professor WILLIAM LYON PHELPS appearing in the October number of The Bookman. That vaguely indicated person known as the General Reader, as well as more than one professional critic of literature, furnishes us, every now and then, with a list of "best fiction" that, by its odd assortment of titles, suggests a very ill-defined notion in the list-maker's mind of the kind of book regarding which he is manifesting his preference. As a matter of fact, the novel is made to do service in so many fields that it is in danger of losing, or at least neglecting, its own peculiar province. Professor PHELPS brings us pointblank to a consideration of the subject with admirable terseness. "I should define a high-class novel," he tells us, "in five words—a good story well told." That really sums up the whole matter and should work as a much-needed corrective with the increasing number of writers who, under the outward guise of fiction, are furnishing us with moral essays, treatises on psychology, political tracts, and cumbersome histories. In Professor PHELPS's hands, "a good story well told" as the definition of a novel plays some odd pranks with established reputations. Thus, we are told that "Mrs. WARD has never written a novel in her life, and only once came near it, in 'David Grieve.'" Her undoubted popularity is not owing to the excellence of her fiction. "She is a serious, earnest, thoughtful, deeply read woman, with a passion to improve the world; she once wrote a treatise on religious reform, and called it 'Robert Elsmere.'" There is no mistaking the popularity of the latter book, but its vogue has had nothing to do with its quality as fiction. "As people are more interested in religion than in any other subject in the world save two, her book had a prodigious success—exactly paralleled a short time ago by WINSTON CHURCHILL'S 'The Inside of the Cup,'" a book that in its turn is said to be lacking in living characters, real story, or any of the charm of fiction. Professor PHELPS notes that "a perfect illustration" of the "good story well told" is hard to find in our current fiction, and he considers that the fact has its pathetic sides, since there are so many people who are turning to fiction for genuine entertainment and not finding it there. In the elaboration of his subject the two types of fiction—"romance" and "novel"—engage Professor PHELPS's attention, eliciting definitions that help further to rectify a prevailing misuse of terms. As we might expect, SCOTT furnished, in "Quentin Durward," the typical example of romance, "the story where the chief interest lies in the events." The typical novel—"a story where the principal stress falls, not on the succession of incidents, but on the development of the characters"—is found in "The Mill on the Floss." The successful fusion of the two types Professor PHELPS finds in "Henry Esmond," a novel which, we are told, "if a secret ballot could be taken, might possibly be voted the greatest work of fiction in the English language." Personally, Professor PHELPS tells us, he "does not care much whether he reads romances or novels." As between romanticism and realism, however, he decides that "alluring and diverting" though the former may be, the latter "makes in the end a deeper and more lasting impression on the mind." Whether or not one agrees with Professor PHELPS in his selections of typical works of fiction, his paper in its main contention will be generally accepted as a masterly analysis of a subject of increasing importance in our literature. The degeneration of fiction into special pleadings in religion, morals, and science threatens the stability of the novel as a distinct form of art, and adds but little to the world's sum of knowledge in these three domains of human thought.

THE name of HENRI FABRE, the French entomologist, who died last Monday at the age of ninety-two, has only recently found its way into our literature—but it is safe to say that it will never be forgotten. We call FABRE an entomologist, but of course he was much more than that. Entomology, in the hands of the typically "exact scientist," is not a particularly enlivening subject for the lay reader. As expounded by this old Provençal it became a fairyland of marvels, a world that afforded entertainment and instruction alike to the learned and the ignorant. The secret of FABRE's genius seems to have been its utter sincerity, its abnegation of self. He deliberately chose poverty because it was only thus that he could devote himself to the study of the insect multitudes that attracted him. The history of science has no finer example than his of careful, unwearied observation of the minute complexities involved in the lower forms of animals. The accuracy of his methods, and the importance of his discoveries excited the admiration of such men as DARWIN. But FABRE was an artist, as well as a scientist, and thus he was able to give to the world the results of his studies as few, if any, of his profession had done before him. As yet we have had only small, detached portions of his great "Souvenirs Entomologique" in translation. The whole work, say the publishers, will find its way into English literature.

A WRITER in a recent number of The Dial asks the following question regarding "Poetry; A Magazine of Verse": "What would Walt think?" One finds it so difficult to keep up with the latest fashions in "verse" that the question brings with it a sort of eleventh-hour hope that Walt's thought on the matter will, in some recondite way, be revealed, and that, in consequence, such effusions as the following, entitled "Cousin Nancy," taken at random from the current number of Poetry, will be explained to us:

Miss Nancy Ellicott
Strode across the hills and broke them,
Rode across the hills and broke them—
The barren New England hills—
Riding to hounds
Over the cow-pasture.

Miss Nancy Ellicott smoked
And danced all the modern dances;
And her aunts were not quite sure how they felt about it,
But they knew that it was modern.

Upon the glazen shelves kept watch
Matthew and Waldo, guardians of the faith,
The army of unalterable law.

Mr. HOWELLS recently wrote of his emotions regarding vers libre—which he happily described as "shredded verse"—but it is doubtful if he had had anything quite so elusively imaginative as "Cousin Nancy"—who "strode across the hills and broke them"—upon which to try his fancy. It was "Walt," however, who started the vers libre fashion, (unless we grant that honor, as some do, to LANGLAND, the English poet of more than five centuries ago,) and so the interesting question regarding "Cousin Nancy" and all of her free verse relatives should be referred to the authority indicated by Poetry in its question: "What would Walt think?"

LIFE AND WORK OF A FAMOUS VICTORIAN

Collected Edition of Walter Bagehot's Writings Recalls a School of Political and Scientific Thought That Still Makes Itself Felt

THE WORKS AND LIFE OF WALTER BAGEHOT. Edited by Mrs. Russell Barrington. 10 volumes. Longmans, Green & Co.

IN the middle period of Victoria's reign there appeared a group of writers characterized by common traits, and forming, as it were, a school of their own. Their views were sound rather than profound; they were more lucid than subtle; they appealed less to the imagination than to the common sense of their readers. They were critical rather than constructive, and above all they were uniformly Liberal in politics. Though not directly Comtean, they were Positivist in their dislike for anything metaphysical or mystical. Among these writers may be mentioned Leslie Stephen, W. R. Greg, H. S. Maine, Frederic Harrison, Charles Pearson, R. H. Hutton, John Seeley, and G. H. Lewes, now an almost forgotten name but for his association with George Eliot. Their nearest analogue in the sphere of the novel was Anthony Trollope and the nearest representative voice in the poetic field was that of Arthur Hugh Clough. Above them all loomed the figure of John Morley, now Viscount Morley of Blackpool, with his sombre enthusiasm for his no-faith, and it was in the pages of the Fortnightly Review, edited by him, that many of their most characteristic utterances appeared.

Of this Fortnightly school of writers, as it might be called, Walter Bagehot was in some ways the most characteristic figure. He shared in the typical qualities of his compeers, their common sense and lucidity, their Liberalism and Positivism. He was, in the main, the economist of the school, but his interests ranged over the border line of economics into sociology and anthropology, and in early days he attained some distinction as a literary critic and retained to his last days a strong interest in the fundamentals of belief. He was best known during his lifetime as editor of The Economist, and his views on finance and commerce were respected both in the "City" and in the Cabinet. He was, indeed, one of those figures so characteristic of English official life who are consulted, though they hold no official position, by the small circle of heads of public departments that really rule England.

His three Opera Maxima were closely connected with his life work. In his "Lombard Street" he explains with admirable lucidity the operation of the London money market, which he had to watch so closely as editor of The Economist. His work on the "English Constitution" was the first which explained its actual working, with which he was so closely connected. His series of essays entitled "Physics and Politics" applied to the life of primitive peoples, just then being studied by men like Maine, Lubbock, and MacLennan, the principles of natural selection which Charles Darwin had recently introduced into the world of thought. All three were full of illuminating apercus, but they were scarcely epoch-making in their influence on English speculation, though their main doctrines—the need of a larger banking reserve in "Lombard Street," and the all-importance of the Cabinet and the imaginative appeal of the monarchy in his "English Constitution"—have been adopted by all later writers on the subject.

Bagehot's sister-in-law, Mrs. Russell Barrington, has collected together in ten stately volumes all his writings, and has supplemented them in the tenth volume by an elaborate biography, putting us in full possession of all the critical events in his career and of the personal influences which made him what he was. Curiously enough, she had been preceded in this task by an American admirer of Bagehot's work, Mr. Forrest Morgan, who issued in 1889 a uniform edition of his writings, published under the auspices of The Traveler's Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn., and so thoroughly was the work done by Mr. Morgan that it included at least four-fifths of the present edition. This edition is now out of print, and Mrs. Barrington is desirous of reviving her brother-in-law's fame and reputation, and puts forth her edition explicitly as an attempt to gain a just appreciation of Bagehot's powers and contribution to English thought and letters.

It seems, indeed, an appropriate occasion to try and place Bagehot in his proper niche in Victorian literature. It cannot be said that this place is a very high and distinctive one, though his writings can still be read with much interest and instruction. His literary criticism is far below that of Leslie Stephen in insight and knowledge, though, as we shall see, it has merits of its own which are neither literary nor critical. His books were lucid expositions of their themes and had many original suggestions which have been accepted by later writers, but they were wanting in what might be called architectonic power, and neither in economics nor in constitutional theory made any epoch. His miscellaneous essays were often ingenious and suggestive, but, on the whole, not above the level of The Fortnightly in its best days. Altogether his work had fulfilled its mission, and it is doubtful whether this revival of it can enhance the reputation which Bagehot had got as economist and publicist, a reputation secure enough in its way, but not of the highest order.

Mrs. Barrington is continually speaking of the "genius" of her brother-in-law, yet the term is inapplicable to his powers, whatever interpretation we may give that much abused term. It implies a swift and penetrating grasp of the essentials of the subject, and unexpected and imaginative modes of expounding it. The penetration and the grasp were there in Bagehot's case, but he was distinctly wanting in the imaginative synthesis which is the true character of genius. This is sufficiently indicated by the very slow method of his approach to his subject. No first-class thinker or writer was ever so long-winded in putting his points. One cannot call Bagehot tedious; he diversifies the longeurs of his analysis by anecdote and epigram, apt quotation, and illuminating side remarks, but nothing can disguise the comparative paucity of illuminating thought and the many pages taken to expound a single position. His thoughts may be golden, but he spreads his gilt very thinly over his gingerbread. An adept précis-writer could give the really essential parts of his chief works within a comparatively few pages. All this may help toward lucidity, but it does not leave that impression of a richness of knowledge and imagination which characterizes the true genius even in exposition.

I have said that his criticisms were neither literary nor critical, and this seemingly harsh judgment needs some explanation. In his studies of men like Scott or Dickens, Beranger or Hartley Coleridge, Bagehot directed his attention not so much to their literary production as to those elements in their mental makeup which led to these productions. His method was, therefore, psychological rather than critical or literary. It is characteristic that in dealing with Shakespeare he is not concerned so much with the works as with the man. Bagehot knew his own limitations and his forte. He came of a banking family, and, as the late J. P. Morgan surprised the world by revealing, the essence of a banking business lies in a knowledge of character. In this aspect of his work Bagehot was indeed distinctive, though with limitations, and perhaps the most valuable part of his critical writings consists of careful studies of enigmatic characters like Bolingbroke the brilliant or Althorp the dull. Like all his school, he was rather contemptuous in his attitude toward Disraeli, but his keen grasp of character enabled him to do justice to the many merits of that remarkable personality, and the pages devoted to it in these volumes should not be neglected by those who would understand that Sphinx-like individual.

In order to prove her thesis as to the genius of Bagehot Mrs. Barrington has collected together some of the earlier writings that have escaped Forrest Morgan, and has devoted a whole volume of this edition to a selection of editorials from The Economist. As a rule, nothing is more dreary than canned editorials, and Mrs. Barrington ran a great risk in attempting to revive Bagehot's Economist leaders. Wisely, however, she has not attempted to revive Bagehot's comments on the fleeting phenomena of British commerce and finance. She has restricted her choice to the editorials of a more political character, and especially those dealing with the critical stages in the lives of personages distinguished in British politics of the mid-Victorian period. Many of these editorials stand resuscitation better than might be expected, but it cannot be said that they add much to our knowledge of Bagehot's powers, which are sufficiently indicated by the more elaborate and considered treatment of the same or kindred themes. Certainly these editorials fail to confirm Mrs. Barrington's claim as to the genius of Bagehot. They are full of sound, British common sense; they are well informed, as might be expected from Bagehot's position in the world of politics and finance; they are lucid and suggestive, as was everything that Bagehot wrote—but there is no sparkle in them, nor any of those profound glimpses into the depths which we associate with the name of genius.

As regards the other additions to the previous collections, one may dismiss at once the three essays written in early youth, which are far from betraying any exceptional promise. The review of Mill's "Principles" is commonplace in the extreme and shows little of Bagehot's later power of connecting the views and tendencies of the chief British economists with the events of their lives and the circumstances of their social environment. Again, the series of papers on the Depreciation of Silver, which was reprinted by Bagehot himself, is only of interest to economists who could probably obtain second hand one of the two thousand copies printed by Bagehot himself. Circumstances have so changed during the forty years since it was written that it is of little value except historical. Mr. Morgan was well advised in omitting it from his edition.

Mrs. Barrington has made a final attempt to prove her thesis as to Bagehot's brilliant powers in the elaborate biography which fills the tenth volume of this edition. Like all biographies written by members of the biographer's family, it is mainly a hodgepodge of letters of little or no value, of anecdotes mainly of family interest, and is characterized by the same want of proportion which is almost invariable in such cases.

The early years are dilated upon out of all proportion to the more significant period after his powers are fully developed. One new point is brought out by Mrs. Barrington which was naturally concealed in the earlier memoirs written by his life-long friend, R. H. Hutton. Bagehot's mother was subject to fits of insanity, during which she was often attended most affectionately by her son, and this tragic experience gave, according to Mrs. Barrington, an undercurrent of mystical gloom and solitariness to his whole life. This enables us to understand the interest he took in Cowper, on whom he wrote one of his best essays. One would have thought it would have given him greater sympathy for Charles Lamb, whose life was equally shadowed by the insanity of his sister, but curiously enough Bagehot appears to have preferred Hazlitt to Lamb, much to the displeasure of his friend, Crabb Robinson. At the end of the memoirs Mrs. Barrington prints letters from many of Bagehot's distinguished contemporaries, like Gladstone, Lord Avebury, Lord Bryce, Sir Robert Griffin, and Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff, but all these insist rather upon Bagehot's judgment than upon his brilliance, and this is the general impression left by a repersual of his works.

It has not been a pleasant task to subject Mrs. Barrington's excessive claims on behalf of her brother-in-law's "genius" to a considerable discount, as he himself would have put it. The true aim of criticism is to bring out the distinctive characteristics of an author and for the most part those deserving of praise, otherwise his work would not be worth criticising. There is, indeed, much to praise in Bagehot. His sound common sense and his full information on the topics about which he wrote in later life give an air of reality to his exposition on topics like finance and administration, which in the hands of others like Sir G. C. Lewis or John Stuart Mill tend to become unnecessarily abstract. If, as Matthew Arnold contended, it be the true function of cultured criticism to see things as in themselves they really are, Bagehot was indeed a capable critic. He did not see all of the things in writing on subjects other than economic and administrative, but what he saw he saw accurately and he could describe what he saw in social phenomena with effectiveness and often with point. He often hits off a whole social stage in a

That is why no one can really be tired of Emma McChesney—or Emma Buck, as we must call her now. She is too radiantly alive to be tired of life, too radiantly alive for us to be tired of her. She is made, it seems, not of paper and ink but of flesh and blood. She is not a type, she is a fallible, changeable, lovable human being. May she live to be a great-grandmother, and Edna Ferber live to tell us all about it!

ROSAMOND FAYRE

THE WOOING OF ROSAMOND FAYRE. By Bertha Ruck (Mrs. Oliver Onions). New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.35.

IN her previous novel, "His Official Fiancée," Mrs. Onions proved her ability as a light comedy author. With pleasing deftness and ingenuity she can devise an unusual and striking situation, full of humorous possibilities, work it out gracefully, cover it all over with humorous sparkles, touch it up with high lights and romantic colors—and there it is, dainty and iridescent as a cobweb in the morning sun and as gayly and light-heartedly amusing as a kitten chasing its tail. But she needs to watch herself very carefully or she will spoil her joyous promise with too much indulgence in saccharine romance and with too easy satisfaction in the conventional ideas, situations, and style of that kind of novel.

Both these faults are present in her new book and vitiate somewhat its otherwise sparkling and entertaining comedy. Her heroine, Rosamond, is serving as secretary to a nice girl who is much absorbed in very modern kinds of good work.

She is so much absorbed that she instructs the secretary to write her weekly love-letters to her fiancé, off at the other side of the world. If she has time she reads them and if not they go anyway. Rosamond does her best to make them prim, precise little letters, just like the kind her employer would write, but despite herself, since she is a very feminine girl, something of her own personality slips in and once she fills the letter with rose petals. The young man feels a new response springing up in his heart to the new quality in the letters and he rushes home. Complications result, of many and varied kinds, but the author finally straightens them all out with everybody happy, having in the m an time afforded the reader a good many ages of sprightly entertainment. Nearly all the characters are portrayed with a good deal of humor, and one buxom lassie who plays in a pantomime is to be specially remarked for the cleverness with which her breezy personality is caught and set forth in her speech.

As do so many of the recent English novels, "Rosamond Fayre" ends with its last chapters engulfed in the early months of the war. But even these are bright and gay upon the surface, although one catches underneath, like a secret sob, the deep note of passionate patriotism.

THE ISLAND OF SURPRISE

THE ISLAND OF SURPRISE. By Cyrus Townsend Brady. Illustrations by Walter Tittle. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.35.

THE crucial situation in this novel is one more proof of its author's prolific and ingenious inventiveness. A young man and two lovely girls, members of a yachting party journeying lazily through Southern Seas, land for a few hours on an uninhabited little island, are caught by a storm which drives away the yacht and fall over a cliff. When they return to their senses the man has been injured by the fall so badly that his memory of the last six years is completely gone. Each one of the girls, and they are both lovely and attractive, claims him as her husband. The first half of the book leads up to this situation, the story having started in New York and traversed thence, with scenes along the way on railroad trains, in Chicago, Kansas City, and San Francisco, in the course of which the reader has become acquainted with the real relationship between the three. The latter half of the story is taken up with the developments of the extraordinary case in which the harassed young man finds himself. These include an attack by a swarm of Papuan savages in which the three have to fight desperately for their lives.

Dr. Brady's reputation as a writer of swiftly moving and colorful tales of romance and adventure will hardly be added to by "The Island of Surprise," whose unique plot is not quite convincing and whose important situations are often not plausible, even for a romantic tale. There is overmuch verbiage also, as there is likely to be in novels that are dictated—a method of work Dr. Brady has elsewhere explained that he uses. In the opening chapters of this book the hero writes a novel by the same method and through his mouth the author praises it warmly.

EVE DORRE

EVE DORRE: The Story of Her Precarious Youth. By Emily Viele Strother. Frontispiece in color by Grace Cochrane Sanger. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.35.

EVE DORRE tells the story of herself, and, although the reader will agree with her title that hers was a "precarious youth," she has made out of it a charming, idyllic little tale, clean and sweet as the breath from a rose garden, but told with such simplicity and truth that it is entirely free from sentimentality. Eve is an American girl who is taken to Paris, with her brother, when they are both tiny children, by their widowed mother. The reader gets only glimpses, although they are frequent and always vivid, of this mother, and she quite merits the description of "that surprising woman" which her daughter sometimes applies to her, in the course of her depiction of a strong and dominating personality, impulsive and erratic, full of faults and foibles, but true and sweet enough to inspire and hold the love of her children.

The story of how these two children grow up in Paris, somewhat as if that city were a cross between a Coney Island and a wilderness, Eve tells in a mirthful spirit and with loving memory, making one feel that she and her brother, with their menagerie on the tiny balcony of a Paris apartment and their secret excursions by night on Paris streets, enjoyed a happy childhood. One of the story's most charming features is the way the author opens one door after another into the intimate home life of French people, showing a phase of it that one rarely gets even in French novels, making them seem warmly real and human, and always delightful, notwithstanding the occasional tolerant mention of human frailties.

An episode in Eve's young girlhood which takes place at a resort in Germany is told with delicious naïveté, through which twinkles a sense of humor, the humor with which the mature person can look back upon youthful experiences and laugh at them, although remembering and recognizing the utter seriousness with which they were regarded at the time. This same kind of humor brightens all the book and brings many a smile to the reader's lips. Eve and a young German officer believe that they fall in love with each other. He is handsome and stolid, and she is full of aspirations, in love with music and nature and beauty; and the report she makes of their conversational duets is both realistic and amusing.

A little later love that is the real thing comes to her in Paris, an art student with an American mother and a French father being the hero in her romance. They tumble irresponsibly into love, and finally, notwithstanding some obstacles that come near to ending in tragedy, they carry their romance through to marriage. The account of the events attending upon that ceremony gives the author opportunity for some very pretty descriptions of Parisian marriage customs among the people, the same customs which, imbued with gayety and poetic spirit, she insisted should be the manner of her own bridal. Afterward follows the story of the first happy years of married life, and then an epilogue telling of the coming of the war and of the absorption of herself and her artist husband and their manly young son in the work it has brought, written in that spirit of exalted patriotism combined with earnest, practical effort with which the whole French nation faces the foe.

The little story makes a very frank, clear, and seemingly unconscious portrayal of a gay, winsome, lovable young woman. The simplicity and naturalness with which it is done often suggest the skill, the artistic insight, and the nothing-too-much of French literary art. Sometimes there is an offense against good taste, more often there is a lack of care in writing, and occasionally one comes upon a detail so unplausible—the sort of thing that might really have happened to somebody, but ought never to be used in fiction, because truth, without half trying, can be more impossible than fiction can dare to be—that it would better, for the sake of the artistic effect, have been left out. But it makes, on the whole, an unusual and wholesome little story having much beauty and idyllic charm.

ALLOY OF GOLD

ALLOY OF GOLD. By Francis William Sullivan. New York: Robert M. McBride & Co. $1.35.

WORTH PRYCE is an engaging youth as he steps into Mr. Sullivan's story on the fourth page, and he shows himself, as the pages increase, to be also a lovable and interesting one. He has just returned to his native New York City after growing-up years spent abroad with his mother, and he brings with him the pure gold of youthful idealism, its happy belief in others, its ready confidence in everybody's good intentions, and its warm-hearted insistence upon taking all things and all people at their own roseate valuation. But the pure gold proves too soft to be workable and useful in the hard give and take of everyday life, and under the blows of reality it crumples up and flattens out. Knowledge of people as they are and of the world as they make it is bitter enough to his lips, but it puts into the pure gold of his character at the beginning the alloy it needs to make it hard enough to be useful under the blows of circumstance. Wise old Francis Bacon's remark—did he write from introspective study of himself?—that "The alloy debaseth the metal but maketh it work the better," quoted upon the title page, gives terse statement of the author's theme.

The action takes place in New York City and on Long Island, and the people all belong to that small but highly illuminated section of the populace which believes amusement to be the serious business of life and views itself as society with a large S. The setting is made up of their activities and functions, dances and dinners, teas, tennis, receptions, clubs, and stag parties. But these are all duly subordinated to the action, and the reader sees them only as a rich, gay background to the personalities in whose making or marring of their fates he is interested. There are, however, some very attractive descriptions of scenes upon Long Island estates in which the author deserves the credit of making the reader feel the beauty of the setting without thrusting it upon him.

The young hero, Worth Pryce, comes into this gay, bright, and seemingly happy world and enters with eager expectancy upon his inheritance of wealth and social position only to find, after a few months of enjoyment, that it is full of baseness and evil. His chosen friend deceives him and misuses the money he has loaned; the girl he loves with a youth's reverent adoration uses him as a cloak for a base intrigue; even his dead father, whom he has idolized as a knightly man without reproach, he finds to have had feet of the dirtiest kind of clay.

Mr. Sullivan writes, evidently, with earnestness and the desire to portray life truly, to be true at once to its material manifestations and to its spiritual recognitions and imperatives. In both this and his previous novel, "Children of Banishment," a tale of the Northern woods of unusual worth, written with poetic truth and feeling and evincing much knowledge of human nature, he has steered clear of tinsel and sensationalism and has written with dignity and artistic restraint. But in this new book it must be said—what was not true in his first—that his theme has ridden him too hard, to the detriment of his story as a work of art. "Alloy of Gold" contains much that is good and charming and full of promise; he has a deft and vivid touch in character delineation; his sense of dramatic values is keen, and he can write good English—which too many American, and also English, novelists cannot. But it is to be hoped for his own sake that in future novels he will find some way of working out his stories without letting even a pretty girl preach quite so much.

RECENT BOOKS ON MUSIC

LETTERS TO AND FROM JOSEPH JOACHIM. Selected and translated by Nora Bickley, with a preface by J. A. Fuller Maitland. New York: The Macmillan Company. $3.75.

THIS volume is derived from the three in which Joachim's correspondence is published in German, and there are additions drawn from the correspondence between Joachim and Brahms, published separately. The intention is obviously to allow the letters themselves to present a more or less continuous narrative of Joachim's life. They begin with a few of his boyish letters, from his "infant prodigy" days, and take us through his years as solo player and conductor at Hanover, then through the last part of his career as director of the High School for Music in Berlin. Many of them are written from England, to which country he was an annual visitor in the Spring for many years.

The earlier letters give a glimpse of his relations with Schumann, already touched, but not yet felled by his tragic fate. His intimate relations with Brahms and Clara Schumann stand forth distinctly. These relations were temporarily clouded by misunderstandings which have not been concealed by the editor of this volume. Julius Otto Grimm, Waldemar Bargiel, Hermann Grimm, Hermann Levi, Ernst Rudorff, and Philipp Spitta are among the others of his chief correspondents. His letters to his wife have an infinite pathos—the joy of the earliest over the happiness reflected in their first married life—then the sudden cessation of letters to her and of the mention of her name; for they were separated and were never reunited.

Much of artistic interest is discussed in these letters, naturally, and there is light thrown on some important incidents, as on Joachim's break with Liszt and the school he represented; on the inception of some of Brahms's and Bruch's compositions; on the early history of the Berlin High School. There is much that is illuminating as to the character and personality of Joachim and some of his correspondents. It may be said that Joachim's uprightness and sincerity and absolute artistic rectitude command admiration, and that a certain narrowness of his artistic nature is revealed. Mme. Schumann presents herself as a widow intensely devoted to her husband's memory, a strenuous artist, if not a broadminded one, and with certain personal traits that cannot be called sympathetic.

GLUCK AND HIS OPERAS. With an account of their relation to musical art. By Hector Berlioz. Translated by Edwin Evans, Sr. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

These essays and criticisms by Berlioz are drawn from his volume called "A Travers Chants," which in turn was largely made up of his contributions to contemporary periodicals, especially the Journal des Débats, of which he was the accredited critic. Berlioz's reputation as a critic is paired with Schumann's, among creative musicians; and a wider opportunity for English-speaking people to become acquainted with his critical writings is very welcome. What Berlioz has written here about Gluck's work, his art and theories in general, and about the operas of "Orphée" and "Alceste," in particular, as they were produced in Paris at the time he was writing, is filled with rare sympathy and understanding, warm appreciation, and high enthusiasm. It is creative and constructive criticism of the first order; and as such is worth the careful study of all music-loving people. It may be said that Berlioz is not always accurate as to historical matters, and that his judgment is not invariably to be accepted as final in them.

THE MYSTICISM OF MUSIC. By R. Heber Newton. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

This little book is based upon two "lecture-sermons" delivered twenty-four years ago, but the material was shaped for publication as late as last Winter, just before Dr. Newton's death. For him music was the voice of God, the secret of the universe. "'Holy music' comes to us as a prophet from Samaria, revealing to our age of darkened spiritual vision the mystic faith which the church has imperfectly breathed through her dogmatic creeds and ecclesiastical institutions in the suffering soul of man." And having discussed various relations of music to the religious sense of man, Dr. Newton returns to the thought with which he began, that music is the "sign of love," as Richard II. said, listening to strains outside his dungeon walls. All will not derive edification in an equal degree from Dr. Newton's reflections; to a certain cast of mind they will be stimulating and fruitful.

The Life and Letters of John Hay

By WILLIAM ROSCOE THAYER

This authorized Life of one of the greatest diplomats and men of letters is probably the most important American biography of the decade. The first volume is largely devoted to his life as private secretary and chief confidant of Lincoln, and gives a fresh and remarkably interesting picture of the great President and of the Civil War. The second volume deals principally with Hay's diplomatic career and throws a flood of new light on our foreign relations and on the character and conduct of his famous contemporaries from Lincoln to Roosevelt.

STANDARDS IN JUVENILE LITERATURE

William Heyliger, Well-Known Writer of Books for Boys, Discusses Miss Blanchard's "Plea" and Gives the Author's Point of View

New York Times Review of Books:

As a writer of books for boys I have been greatly interested in the letter of Grace Blanchard of the Public Library, Concord, N. H., appearing in a recent number of the BOOK REVIEW. Miss Blanchard complains that there is too heavy a flood of juveniles, and calls a halt to "series" books. Librarians in general, I fancy, will agree with all that Miss Blanchard says. The "series" is a library nightmare. The point that Miss Blanchard misses is this—that the "series" type of book has been forced, to a large extent, upon the men and women who write it.

Juvenile literature—may I say literature?—is seldom given the attention to which it is entitled. Any time a reviewer uses as much as one-quarter of a column to say anything about juveniles, that which he says is generally derogatory. I read five publications that seriously review books; yet, looking back over a period of five years, I cannot recall an extended, cordial review of a single juvenile. Surely some good books for boys or for girls must have been published within that period of time.

Let me speak particularly of writers for boys. I know that part of my subject better. The writer for boys faces a market that must buy its books by proxy. When the boy desires a volume costing $1 or more he must appeal to some adult member of his family. He cannot stroll down to the bookshop, browse around, find his book and walk out with it. Could he browse around the matter of titles and series would be of small moment—if he forgot his title he could search and find. However, he is forced to buy by proxy, and there's the rub.

Lacking the opportunities of publicity that seem to come to the writers of every other type of literature, even minor poets, the juvenile writer dare not use a general title. It would be too vague. So he takes advantage of the gang spirit of the boy or of his capacity for hero worship. The result is a series running "Lansing Boys on the Diamond," "Lansing Boys in the Woods," &c., or perhaps "Bob Drake at School," "Bob Drake, Class Leader." Call that last book "The Class Leader" and it would have to search for its friends. But "Bob Drake, Class Leader," means something to every boy who has read a Bob Drake book.

Purely from a library standpoint, Miss Blanchard is justified in her complaint against the "series." I have written the series books, though no series of mine has run more than six volumes. As a writer for boys who takes juvenile work seriously I am beginning to doubt the artistic wisdom of the series. For one thing, the series handicaps you in plot and character treatment. You are bound by what your characters have done in the past. Yet boys demand more than one volume of a hero who takes their fancy. I believe I shall ultimately compromise by limiting any series I may write to three volumes. That should be good news to Miss Blanchard, provided I am fortunate enough to have any call for my books at her library.

Miss Blanchard wants to buy for her boys and girls some interesting modern stories. Where is she to find them? Surely she cannot sit down and read the mass of juvenile stuff that comes from the presses. She must make her selection in one of three ways—blindly and by chance, from published reviews, or from the A. L. A. booklist.

Let us go back to the question of reviews. How many juveniles are adequately reviewed? The average criticism of a book for boys is worthless because the reviewer looks at it from the adult standpoint. The only person qualified to judge a book for boys—I do not mean now the book that is thinly or thickly vicious—is a person who understands boy nature thoroughly. Last month the newspapers were filled with laudations concerning the work of the late Harry Castlemon. His books are fine and wholesome. He deserved all the good things that were said about his work. But how many of these good things were said about his books at the time that he was penning them? Men writing in newspaper offices could look back with delight upon the days when they read Castlemon, and those same men wrote the tributes. Back through the years those writers saw Castlemon's Frank Nelson books—with the eyes of a boy. For the moment, in memory, they were boys again. I wonder would those men enthuse over a modern juvenile.

We have writers today who are doing work as fine and as wholesome as was Castlemon's. For instance, let me cite two writers, Arthur Stanwood Pier and Clarence B. Kelland. Mr. Kelland's humor is clean and bubbling; it sparkles with youth and joy. And Mr. Pier's school stories are to me a constant delight. How much recognition have these two men received from the reviewers?

However, though the juvenile writer seems to be literature's poor relation, I can assure Miss Blanchard that better times are coming. In many sections people are beginning to express an eager interest in the right kind of books for the young. And in other sections there seems to be an awakening to the fact that while high standards are much to be desired, high standards and right standards are not necessarily synonyms. Standing at the head of this fight for a rational judgment of books for boys is Franklin K. Mathiews, Chief Scout Librarian of the Boy Scouts of America. Mr. Mathiews has lectured before many meetings of librarians, and one of his propaganda articles entitled "Blowing Out the Boy's Brains" was widely copied after its publication in The Outlook. My hat is off to Mr. Mathiews for this. He went to his task with no preconceived idea that a boy's book must be considered as lacking in worth if it does not deal with some husky brigand like Robin Hood or some historical hero like King Arthur. The clear vision of men like Mr. Mathiews must, in the end, make the lot of the librarian, struggling in a wilderness of juveniles, easier and more secure. For out of the movement that he has started must come some standard of criticism of books for boys. At present there are no standards.

Miss Blanchard thinks that the A. L. A. has given up in despair, so far as mentioning juveniles is concerned. If this is so, the blame can be laid to this same lack of some standard of criticism. With juvenile literature in a critical state of chaos, how can the A. L. A. recommend anything? By what standards does it recommend?

Let me illustrate this lack of unity. My books are of a type that are referred to as "school-athletic." There seems to be a feeling that this type of story has been worked to death. Gladly would I write another type if I could. But, fortunately or unfortunately, this is the kind of story that is a delight for me to pen. And the A. L. A. has not placed one of my books upon its list of recommended volumes.

Now, by what standard do they exclude me? By the claim that there are too many school-athletic books and that the three or four writers of this class that they do recommend are representative enough of the field? But I am not interested in a representation of the field, and I do not think a librarian should be. Worth should be the criterion. If the A. L. A. deems my books unworthy, that is another matter—but it is also a matter on which I would like to be heard.

For men as discerning, perhaps, as any of those who vote the A. L. A. list, have said that my stuff is good. Claude G. Leland, Superintendent of Libraries, Department of Education, New York, who practically specializes in juveniles, writes to me and says: "You have the right idea and the right ideals. I congratulate you on the work you are doing and wish you continued success." Mr. Stevens, Librarian of Pratt Institute Library, Brooklyn, thinks well of my work, and Thornton W. Burgess writes of my books: "They are the kind that I want my own boy to read when he is old enough." Walter Prichard Eaton writes of one of my books: "• • • unlike too many boys' books, it portrays a real growth in character. The author knows boys, and is deeply interested in their welfare. It is a first-rate book." That letter was directed to my publishers, not to me personally.

So there we are. Men who ought to know say that my books are worth while. Librarians of the A. L. A. who ought to know say, by the inference of not recommending them, that they are not worth while. Which camp is right? Where is the standard that should prevail? Where are we at in the matter of books for boys, anyway?

But I must not abuse your kindness longer. I have grown garrulous saying what Miss Blanchard must already know, that the picking of juvenile books for library shelves should be saddled on the shoulders of persons gifted with clairvoyant powers until such time as some standard of criticism shall prevail.

WILLIAM HEYLIGER.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER

The New York Times Review of Books:

In a little park in suburban Pittsburgh stands a monument in recognition of America's greatest song writer, Stephen Collins Foster. It was only fitting that his native city might add this small tribute to his gentle memory and immortal name.

To my knowledge nothing has ever been written that gives to this great American the literary prominence to which his works justly entitle him. There should at least be a volume containing something about his life and the three hundred or more songs he gave to the world—something worthy his unique place in American letters and music.

That specimens of his work should be included in "Warner's World's Best Poetry" is proof of the literary merit of his songs, their beauty and finish. Yet the creator of these immortal ballads, their music ringing round the world, echoing the plaintive, lovely strains of the Southland, how little we know of him!

I had occasion to go to the New York Public Library on Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street the other day, and took the trouble of looking up any references that might be made to this writer and information concerning his life and works. All that was obtainable there were two magazine articles, and these very brief ones.

It seems to me that this writer of stirring and touching plantation melodies is more deserving of the homage of posterity. His songs are classics in their unique and beautiful finish, their spirit, their compelling interest, and their power to move. Little wonder that the world's celebrated operatic singers always have room for one or two of the imperishable gems of this gifted composer!

Why cannot we have a biography worthy the memory of this, one of America's greatest musical geniuses, Stephen Collins Foster?

Woodcraft Indians

The fourteenth annual publication has been made of Ernest Thompson Seton's "Manual of the Woodcraft Indians." The Woodcraft Indians is an organization founded by Ernest Thompson Seton in 1902 to promote a "character-making movement with a blue sky method"; their manual contains their constitution and laws, and other matters of interest to members of the organization. LIFE AND WORK OF A FAMOUS VICTORIAN phrase; thus the opposition of savage life to any change or progress is called by Bagehot "a cake of custom"; or again, English society is characterized as an order of "removable inequalities."

Bagehot was writing at the time that anthropologists like Morgan, MacLennan, and Lubbock were beginning to find out the curious marital relations of savages, if they can indeed be called marital. He wittily describes this stage of social evolution as one in which "maternity was a matter of fact, paternity was a matter of opinion." (He quotes the phrases as if from another, but that was merely a trace of early Victorianism.) His lengthy approach to the intricacies of his subjects is often enlivened by salies of this kind, which help to brighten the way. Like all his school, there was nothing so repellent to him as anything of the nature of romance or sentimentality, and, consequently, he never lets himself go even on things about which he feels deeply, and his style is uniformly of the pedestrian order. But it is effective enough for his own purposes of exposition, and we are at least never in doubt as to his meaning, which is as clear as crystal.

Bagehot's method was in the main psychological, I have said, even in his critical essays, and this marks an advance on his immediate predecessors of the same or similar school, utilitarian writers on economics and government like James Mill, Nassau Senior, or Mackintosh. They regarded man as a perfectible being, who would be mainly moved by reason. Bagehot recognizes the immense force of stupidity in human affairs and makes allowance for it at every stage of his inquiries. Though not highly imaginative himself, he recognizes the power of imagination, especially among ordinary people, and half the novelty of his "English Constitution" is the recognition of the need of a monarch to appeal to the imagination of the common man, while the Premier, really unknown to the Constitution-mongers, does the actual work of government. Bagehot applies his psychology even to such a seemingly unspiritual topic as finance. Thus he explains the rather mysterious phenomenon why new men in Lombard Street (or Wall Street) are able to hold their own against the established financial magnates. There is an economic reason, because the new men can trade on borrowed capital, for which they need only get back the interest they pay, whereas the money kings want full profits on their own capital, which forms the bulk of their investments.

But, Bagehot continues, there is also a mental reason; the older men have an established position and do not therefore care to take the risk which their less well endowed competitors are willing to take. And so throughout Bagehot makes allowances for the elements of character which affect men's actions and even human institutions. He is thus at his best in explaining why a dull peer devoted to sport, like Lord Althorp, "saved the Bill," meaning the Reform Bill of 1832. It was just Althorp's dullness which appealed to the sympathies of the members of Parliament who were mostly as dull as himself, and they trusted him where they would not have trusted a more brilliant man. Long before Tardé, Bagehot recognized the mob consciousness and its influence on human affairs, and this recognition gives his exposition a further approach to reality.

American readers will find much to interest them in Bagehot, and especially in the present edition. One of the editorials revived by Mrs. Barrington from The Economist deals with the death of Lincoln, and gives a remarkably just appreciation of the martyred President, from the point of view of a contemporary Englishman. Bagehot is always insisting upon the contrast between American and English representative government as constituted by the presence of the members of the Cabinet in Parliament and their absence from Congress; he has weighty reasons to give in favor of the former practice. He was well read in American politics and constitutional history, and we find him quoting in full Alexander Hamilton's plan for an American aristocracy, which is, as far as I know, not readily accessible in the ordinary American text-books on constitutional history. Bagehot has, of course, a good deal of sympathy for Hamilton's suggestions, as is natural in a writer who recognises the value of the decorative parts of government as well as the administrative section.

The most remarkable thing about the history of English literature is the consistent appearance in it of two disparate orders of mind. Unlike France with its uniform golden mediocrity, in which we overlook the mediocrity because of its golden character, English letters have produced, frequently in alternate generations, two orders of mind, one essentially mediocre, but not golden, and the other of gem-like brilliance of the first water. We have the sound, humorous commonsense of men like Chaucer, Ben Jonson, Dryden, and Crabbe; then again we have the mingled mysticism and imagination of Spenser, Donne, Blake, and Shelley. The same contrast is to be seen even in English philosophy. Locke is followed by Berkeley, Mill by Green, Spencer by Bradley. Even in the novel we have the contrast of Fielding and Richardson, of Dickens and the Brontës, of Trollope and Meredith.

Which class of mind is to be regarded as distinctively English it would perhaps be difficult to say. If we cut out the mystics and romantics, English literature would be robbed of most of its glory. There is no doubt that the other more pedestrian school corresponds more closely to what we understand by the English national character. It is needless to say to what class Walter Bagehot belonged. In this sense, he was English of the English, and his work, now definitely collected together, are an admirable example of the more pedestrian English mind attempting, and to a large extent with success, to explain some of the most characteristic of English institutions.

F. D.—I have in my possession a tolerably well preserved copy of Edmund Spenser's "Colin Clouts Come Home Again," printed for William Ponsonbie, London, 1595. Is this a first edition. If so, what is its market value?

It is a first edition. Its market value is from $25 to $220.

FRANK MAYO.—Can you tell me if there is any value to a set of eighteen volumes of Shakespeare's works, printed in 1794, by Hickshaw, in Dublin, and if so, what their value would be?

It is worth about $5.

F. R. R.—Will you kindly publish a sketch of Maude Radford Warren's life and list of writings?

MARY G. HART.—Will you please tell me the value of the following books: "A Careful and Strict Enquiry into the Modern Notions of the Freedom of the Will," by Jonathan Edwards, pastor of church in Stockbridge; printed and sold by S. Kneeland in Queen Street, Boston, N. E., 1754. The book is in perfect condition and contains a list of subscribers. Bound volume of The New York Literary Gazette and American Athenaeum for 1826.

P. J. Keeler.—Please tell me where I can find the poem which ends with;

And the end of the fight is a tombstone white,
with the name of the late deceased,
And the epitaph drear: A fool lies here who tried to hustle the East?

The lines sought by our correspondent are from the poem "The Solo from Libretto of Naulahka," which heads the fifth chapter of "The Naulahka: A Story of West and East," by Rudyard Kipling and Wolcott Balestier.

W. J. K.—Can you tell me who is the author of the poem "Hereafter," the first verse of which runs somewhat as follows:

Love when all the years
Are silent, vanished quite, and laid to rest?

The author of the poem is Harriett Prescott Spofford, and it is printed in "Golden Poems," published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

F. G. W.—Can you give me the poem, or tell me where it may be found, the opening lines of which are:

They thought they had come to their port that day,
But not yet was their journey done,
And they drifted away to Provincetown Bay
In the fireless light of the sun.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

A. B. M.—In answer to J. H. Sutphen's inquiry in your issue of Sept. 12 I would say that the poem wanted is "The Winged Worshippers." It was written by Charles Sprague, cashier of a Boston bank, and a New England poet of note, who was born at Boston Oct. 26, 1791, and who died there Jan. 22, 1875, and was addressed to a pair of swallows that flew into the Chauncey Place Church in Boston during divine service. The poem is printed in full in Bryant's "Library of Poetry and Song," in Stevenson's "Home Book of Verse," and other collections of poems.

This appeal was also answered by Eleanor Chaffee, Ridgewood, N. J.; "M. H. B.," New York; Mary E. Read, Bridgeport, Conn.; L. S. Goff, New London, Conn.; James F. Bliss, Newark, N. J.; Mrs. Edward E. Comstock, Columbus, Ohio, and S. L. Whitlock, Springwater, N. Y.

G. R. C.—The poem for which "C. G." asked in your issue of Sept. 5 is "The Recruit," by Robert W. Chambers. It was published in Harper's Magazine some twenty years ago, and is printed in full in Stedman's "American Anthology."

This appeal was answered by Joseph Gavitt, Albany, N. Y.; "P. S. F.," New York; "F. F. L.," New York; Francis Levison, New Rochelle, N. Y.; Ethel Eames Sanderson, Stamford, Conn.; Theresa Gamble, South Norwalk, Conn.; "T. R. R.," Cromwell, Conn.; Ruth Slater, Webster, Mass.; Hope V. Boyle, New York; "A. L. K. D. VON BONNHORST.—The poem for which E. Cecil Mosby inquired in THE BOOK REVIEW for Sept. 26, may be "An Angel in the House," by Leigh Hunt.

APPEALS TO READERS

J. P. WINN.—Will some reader kindly inform me where I may procure a poem of about six verses, written by Montgomery M. Folsom, formerly of Atlanta, this writings appearing in the Atlanta Constitution before his death,) the first few lines of which were about as follows:

When these cold hands are stilled at last,
And wheq these lips are dumb,
Think kindly of the life that's past,
In beauteous years to come.
Not what I am, but what I'm not,
And all I longed to be,
With faults and failings all forgot,
I pray remember me.

R. W. MILLARD.—Will some kind reader tell me the author of the following lines and where they may be found?

The thing thou cravest waits in the distance,
Wrapt in the silence unseen and dumb;
Essential to thy soul and thy existence—
Live worthy of it, call, and it will come.

E. H.—I should like very much to know where I can find a little poem entitled "Memory," the last line of which is:

My name is Memory, and this place is mine.

WILLIAM J. MERRILL.—Can any reader tell me who wrote the following lines and the poem from which they are taken?

Wind blowing out beneath the evening star,
Beyond the dying day
Ah, couldst thou bear me where thou goest,
Far away!
Or couldst thou bring o'er the wild waste sea,
Under a sail's white wing,
That which no sail nor wind nor wave to me
Can ever bring!

D. S.—Can some reader locate for me a poem called "Zamboanga," which was published in some well-known periodical within the last three or four years? It begins:

Zamboanga! Zamboanga!
With the moonlight on the sea.

J. F. D.—Can any reader tell the title and where to find a poem about the "Procession of the Stars"? The following lines occur in it somewhere:

Red Mars led down his clan,
And the moon like a mailed maiden was riding in the van.

Also:

Sight is dulled and sense is dimmed
That look through heated dusts.

V. YARDUM.—There is a quotation, attributed to Michael Angelo, somewhat as follows: "In every piece of marble there is hidden an angel, but it requires the hand (or touch) of the artist to bring it forth." Can any reader give me the correct wording, and where it can be found?

H. J. W.—Some years ago I had a book, a sort of fairy tale, the exact title I cannot recall, nor can I get the book from describing it at the booksellers. The right name, I thought, was "The Moss Path," but I am evidently mistaken. It was illustrated with pictures of the moon shining down on the water. Can some reader help me to find out the correct title?

D. J. KERIN.—I would like very much to have the author's name and words of the poem in which the following words appear:

O Solitude, where are the charms
That sages have seen in thy face?
Better to dwell in the midst of alarms
Than reign in this horrible place.

MARION T. TODD.—Will some reader kindly give me the poem every stanza of which ends:

A man can't fool with the Golden Rule
In a crowd that don't play fair.

Also tell the name of the author.

W. B.—Can any reader tell me who is the author of some verses entitled "Sorrow"? I learned them when a child, and as far as I can remember the first verse begins:

Get thee back, Sorrow, get thee back.
Why should I weep while I am young?
I shall be very grateful for the whole poem.

David Grayson

Who wrote "Adventures in Contentment," has written a novel. In it he tells of his adventure in country journalism and how romance entered into the fortunes of 'Anthy and the "Hempfield Star."

A very delightful story with much of the charm and flavor of the author's previous "Adventures."

WHAT AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS ARE DOING THIS SEASON

As the war draws on its hideous length, month after month, the books upon it owe inspired by it increase in number. Among those promised for early publication which will deal with it descriptively or philosophically or will consider means of preventing war in the future are several of much interest. Henry Holt & Co. will bring out very soon "The Stakes of Diplomacy," by Walter Lippmann, in which the author of "Drift and Mastery" and "Preface to Politics" is said to set forth a new idea of international diplomatic action which will satisfy the demands of patriotism and yet will do away with the many present-day sources of international friction.

"A Book of Belgium's Gratitude" is a volume of much international interest, to be published in French and English, now in process of preparation, which will be brought out in New York by the John Lane Company. It will have also London and Paris publication. King Albert of Belgium is the patron of the undertaking, and M. Paul Hymans, Belgian Minister in London, is its President. On the list of members of the committee, which is preparing the work are the names of some of the most prominent Belgians in literature and public life. King Albert and most of the members of the committee will contribute to its pages, as also will Maurice Maeterlinck, Emile Verhaeren, Baron de Broqueville, Mmes. Vandervelde and de Wiart, and many others. Special sections will be devoted to the help rendered to Belgium by Great Britain and her colonies and the United States. Nearly a dozen Belgian artists will contribute the illustrations. Many well known English names are among the list of translators, W. J. Locke serving as translation editor.

The letters by Mildred Aldrich which have been appearing in The Atlantic Monthly will soon be published in book form by Houghton Mifflin Company under the title, "A Hilltop on the Marne." The book will have, in addition, maps, illustrations, and other new material. This house has ready "The Fall of Tsing-Tau," by Jefferson Jones.

Alfred A. Knopf has taken over from George H. Doran Company "The Russian Problem," by Vinagradoff, and "Russia's Gift to the World," by J. W. Mackail. Mr. Knopf is also the publisher of Vladimir Soloviev's "War, Progress, and the End of History," which makes a defense of war as a means of human progress. He will have the work ready shortly.

"Women at The Hague," by Jane Addams, Emily Greene Balch, and Alice Hamilton, will be offered soon by the Macmillan Company. It will contain a narrative account of the international congress of women held at The Hague last Spring.

In "The Ballet of the Nations," by Vernon Lee, which the Putnams announce for Fall publication, the author applies to the carnage now raging in Europe the mediaeval conception of the Dance of Death.

A thorough discussion of means and methods for a permanent settlement of conditions in Europe is made in "The Great Settlement," by C. Ernest Fayle, which Duffield & Co. have ready for immediate issue. The peace societies of England have indorsed the book, and the American Association for International Conciliation will distribute the volume among its various branches.

The latter part of this week will bring from the George H. Doran Company "The World's Highway," in which Norman Angell will make an exposition of America's position in the world crisis of the present time, and "Kings, Queens, and Pawns," Mary Roberts Rinehart's account of the things she saw and did and the people with whom she talked during her stay at and near the battle front.

Publication of Mary Johnston's new novel, "The Fortunes of Garin," has been postponed by the Houghton Mifflin Company from Oct. 16 to Oct. 23.

Dorothy Canfield's new novel, "The Bent Twig," whose appearance was postponed for two weeks, is now ready for immediate issue by Henry Holt & Co.

The Putnams are publishing at once "A Rogue by Compulsion," by Victor Bridges, an English story of rapid and vigorous action.

Baroness Orczy's new story, "The Bronze Eagle," dealing with Napoleon during his march from Elba to Waterloo, is promised by the George H. Doran Company for Oct. 23, when they will have ready also "Ten Degrees Backward," by Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler, a quiet love story of rustic England, and "The Folly of the Three Wise Men," a Christmas fable by Edgar Whitaker Work.

G. Arnold Shaw announces for publication on Oct. 30 "Wood and Stone," by John Cowper Powys, a novel presenting the rather weird idea of how the good and the evil in human beings are encouraged and drawn out by the material contact of the soil upon which they live.

"The Anvil of Chance," by Gerald Chittenden, which Longmans, Green & Co. will publish this month, will have its scenes staged first in a boy's boarding school, then in the hill country of New England, and later in Central America.

Ivan Goncharov's Russian classic "Oblonov," will for the first time be presented to English readers by the Macmillan Company, who have it ready for immediate issue. The translation is by C. J. Hogarth. This house has ready also Ralph Graham Tabor's "Chained Lightning," a story of adventure in the real Mexico of today, meant especially for older boys and young men, written out of personal experience.

Harper & Brothers announce for immediate publication "Flashers Mead," by Compton Mackenzie, a love story of England, and "Over Paradise Ridge," a love story of America, by Maria Thompson Daviess, whose scene is laid in the Tennessee mountains. This house has ready also "Clearing the Seas," by Donal H. Haines, a story for younger readers of a supposed naval war between the United States and a foreign power.

John Trevena's "Moyle Church Town," whose publication was delayed, is promised for early issue by Alfred A. Knopf. It is a romantic novel, founded on Cornish folklore, its scene laid in Cornwall. Mr. Knopf announces also "Yvette and Other Stories," by Guy de Maupassant, the translation by Mrs. John Galsworthy, the volume containing also an introduction on Maupassant by Joseph Conrad. Many of the stories deal with the Prussian troops in France in 1870, and some, it is said, are here rendered into English for the first time.

The Putnams have arranged for the publication in this country of "The National History of France," in seven volumes, of which they expect to have ready this Fall the second volume, on "The Renaissance," by L. Batiffol. Of the others the first will deal with "The Middle Ages," and will be by Franz Funck-Brentano, who is also the general editor of the work. The third, "The Great Century," is by Jacques Boulenger, and the fourth, "The Eighteenth Century," by Casimir Stryienski. The fifth and sixth volumes, dealing with "The Revolution," are by Louis Madelin, who writes also the seventh, on "The Empire."

The Putnams announce for early publication "Prussian Memories," by Poultney Bigelow, which recounts the experiences of his boyhood and later years in Germany; a volume of reminiscences called "Memories and Anecdotes," by Kate Sanborn; "The Romance of Old Belgium," by Elizabeth W. Champney and Frére Champney; "History of the Child in Human Progress," by George Henry Payne, a work dealing with the history of man in his formative years and covering an almost untouched field of investigation, and "Crises in the History of the Papacy," by Joseph McCabe.

The Century Company will bring out this week "Pleasures and Palaces," a book of reminiscences, by Princess Lazarovich-Hrebellanovich, who before her marriage was Eleanor Calhoun, an American.

A new edition of "Anthony Comstock, Fighter," by Charles G. Trumbell, is announced by Fleming H. Revell Company, for which the author has written an additional chapter, bringing the story of Mr. Comstock's life down to its closing scenes.

"The Life of Clara Barton" has been written by her life-long friend, Percy H. Epler, and will be published within a week or two by the Macmillan Company. It is the first authorized biography of Miss Barton, known during our civil war as the "Angel of the Battlefield," to be published.

William Roscoe Thayer's "Life and Letters of John Hay" is ready for immediate issue by Houghton Mifflin Company.

William Winter's "Vagrant Memories," to be published this week by George H. Doran Company, is full of personal recollection of the famous stage people of the last forty years.

Sir Edwin Pears's recollections of "Forty Years in Constantinople," from 1873 to 1915, will be published the latter part of this month by D. Appleton & Co. It will tell the inside history of many important events in Turkish affairs, and offer pen pictures of many famous men whom the author has known during his long and prominent life in Constantinople.

B. W. Huebsch announces for immediate publication "The Nearing Case," by Lightner Witmer, head of the Department of Psychology of the University of Pennsylvania, a complete statement of all that led up to Dr. Nearing's dismissal from the Faculty of that institution.

Romain Rolland's "Some Musicians of Former Days" is being published this week by Henry Holt & Co.

James Pott & Co. promise for the latter part of this month "Denmark and the Danes," by William J. Harvey and Christian Reppien, with an introduction by Maurice Francis Egan, and "My Japanese Year," by T. H. Sanders.

"From Moscow to the Persian Gulf," by Benjamin B. Moore, is a narrative of travel by train, carriage, and caravan across the steppes of Russia and through Persia, which the Putnams will bring out before long.

"The Boy Scout Year Book" is ready for issue by D. Appleton & Co. It contains stories, articles, and illustrations covering the widest variety of subjects by some of the most prominent men in the United States, as well as by others of more humble station.

Moffat, Yard & Co. will publish shortly "Greek Genius and Other Essays," by John Jay Chapman.

"On the Trail of Stevenson," by Clayton Hamilton, which Doubleday, Page & Co. have ready for immediate publication, follows R. L. S. on his vagabond journeys in Scotland and on the Continent, and is said to contain some hitherto unpublished material concerning his stay at Lake Saranac.

The October number of "The Print Collector's Quarterly," published by the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, contains illustrated articles on "Claude Mellan, (1588-1688,)" by Louis R. Metcalfe; "Eugene Isabey," by Frank Weitenkampf; "Dante Gabriel Rossetti; Illustrator," by Elisabeth Luther Cary; "German Woodcuts of the Fifteenth Century," by Emil H. Richter.

The Macmillans will soon have ready "The Song of Hugh Glass," by John G. Neihardt, an epic poem dealing with frontier conditions and the fur trade in the early days west of the Missouri River. It is said to be strictly national in character and to prove that this country has heroic traditions worthy the use of the poet.

A special edition of the "Twentieth Century New Testament" has been made by Fleming H. Revell Company for Boy Scouts, which has been adopted by the Executive Board of the Boy Scouts of America, and has an introduction by the board.

Dr. Emil Waxweiler's "Belgium Neutral and Loyal" is attracting attention in Germany, where the Verwaerts of Berlin asks that, in a spirit of fair play, it be given a hearing.

Jack London's new novel, "The Star Rover," had a second edition on the day of its publication and the third within its first week.

The memory of Frederick W. Taylor, author of "The Principles of Scientific Management," will be honored on Oct. 22 at the University of Pennsylvania, where the Society to Promote the Science of Management will hold a meeting to be addressed by a number of prominent men. Other meetings will be held at his home at Chestnut Hill and at his grave.

John Cooper Powys, author of "Visions and Revisions," is in America on his tenth lecture tour. His New York season will begin on Nov. 9 at the Cort Theatre, with a course of six lectures on French literature.

Arthur Guiterman, whose book of humorous verse, "The Laughing Muse," is a Fall publication, is an instructor in journalism at the New York University, offering a course in newspaper and magazine verse.

Booth Tarkington's "The Turmoil" has been placed by the Navy Department on the list for sailors' libraries on board men-of-war.

Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett got the basic idea for "The Lost Prince" from an old Serbian legend, her attention having been first turned to that country by a Serbian friend, who described to her its life in ancient days, when it was a beautiful pastoral land, and its later tragedies.

Gutzon Borglum is at work upon the memorial to Stevenson, which is to be placed on the shore of Lake Saranac. It will be ready for unveiling next Fall.

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" has just gone into its forty-ninth printing, which, like all of its printings since its first few weeks, is a large one.

A. C. Benson in his new book, "Escape and Other Essays," describes and philosophizes upon school life as he knew it at Eton, which, he says, "made boys overestimate athletics, despise intellectual things, worship social success."

Practical Drawing

An excellent course of study for those who wish to learn to draw well is provided by E. G. Lutz in "Practical Drawing." The instruction the author gives is lucid and adequate, and is admirably illustrated with a large number of explanatory drawings. (Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.)

By B. RUSSELL HERTS

Large Octavo, 8 Color, 24 Black and White Illustrations. $3.50 net.

"Harmony and simplicity of line become more important (in the apartment), because deviations from the beautiful strike the eye more sharply in a small space, and the modern aversion to dust has banished useless hangings which formerly softened harsh outlines. There is less room for bric-a-brac and mere things, and so we are forced to become selective."

Have you the problem before you of making an apartment tasteful, artistic, livable? You will welcome this volume—the first of its kind—written by a man, not only qualified, through his partnership with one of the most famous interior decorating firms in the country, but also as an editor and writer of long experience, who is able to give you his invaluable ideas in clear and untechnical language.

THE WEEK ON THE VARIOUS WAR FRONTS IN EUROPE

Austro-Germans and Bulgarians Concentrating Their Efforts on the Railroad Running Through Serbia to Saloniki and Constantinople---Russians in Much Better Shape Along Their Whole Front---Active Fighting Around Loos and in Champagne.

By a Military Expert.

THE Teuton attack on Serbia has not gone forward with the celerity looked for when it was inaugurated. Even though Serbia has had so long to prepare her defense for an attack that was sure to come, the impression was created by the typhus scourge with which she was visited during the Fall and Winter that her small army had withered to such an extent that her resistance could not be more than perfunctory.

Germany, it was expected, would find the way to Nish almost open, and, after some preliminary fighting, which would be but little more than skirmishes, the Serbians would retreat to their mountain defenses, leaving the northern part of the State in Teuton hands. But this, as has been the case in many other instances in the war, has proved to be altogether an erroneous impression. Instead of the Berlin and Vienna press announcing an uninterrupted series of successes and a consequent general forward movement of the Teuton armies, the principal references of the reports from these two capitals are to the stubbornness of the resistance with which General Mackensen is meeting.

As pointed out last week, the main object of the German campaign is the Belgrade - Nish-Sofia - Constantinople railroad by means of which ammunition and supplies may be sent to the hard-pressed Turks on the Gallipoli Peninsula. Neither Germany nor Austria care anything about Serbia, for although on the border of Austria, Serbia is not a menace. Her army is small and exists at this stage only for defense. Such a thing as an invasion, or rather an attempted invasion, of Austria was not for a moment thought of or feared.

But within the boundaries of Serbia is a long stretch of the Oriental railroad, the only through rail route from Berlin to the east. Germany needs it now to reach the Turk on Gallipoli, and wants it later to reach her much-cherished place in the sun.

Bulgaria, of course, was a vitally necessary link in the chain, as the Bulgarian section of this road was as important and as necessary as was the Serbian. Once Bulgaria was won over to the Teuton cause, the German plan was ready for execution.

This plan is, in a nutshell, for the Austro-Germans, operating from Belgrade and Semendria, to drive south along the railroad to Nish, while the Bulgarians are to drive toward the same point from Serbia's eastern frontier. When the junction is effected, naturally all of the railroad that is needed will be in Teuton hands. There are other advantages in this double operation incidental to reaching Constantinople, but nevertheless of great importance. If the Allies send Serbia assistance—and they are doing so now—such assistance must be sent up to the Serbian rear by means of the Belgrade-Saloniki railroad, which also passes through Nish. Once the Bulgarians reach and cut this road, this source of reinforcement and supply is at once destroyed. Not only that—this railroad is also the one great life line on which the Serbian armies on both the Austrian and Bulgarian front depend for supplies furnished locally without regard to the Allies at all. Were the Bulgarians to reach Nish, the Serbian army defending the Austrian frontier would be taken in flank and rear and would have to change its entire front, pivoting on the left wing, or face an absolutely disastrous defeat.

In accordance with this plan, the Teutons crossed the Danube between Belgrade and Semendria, crossed the Save at and west of Belgrade, and, still further west, crossed the Drina. The latter move, however, was intended purely for defensive purposes to prevent their right flank from being turned. The importance of Semendria lies in its relation to the railroad scheme. At the small town of Velika Plana, about twenty-five miles due south of Semendria, the railroad from Nish and Belgrade branches, the main line going on to Belgrade and a single track branch going north to Semendria. Belgrade and Semendria are in turn connected by a railroad running along the south bank of the Danube, and are, therefore, considered the two termini of the road running north from Nish. From Belgrade to Velika Plana is close to fifty miles by rail, about half of which distance is through high, heavily wooded hills, the foothills of the west Serbian mountains. It may well be anticipated, therefore, that with the terrain favoring them, the Serbians will be able to put a serious check on a hostile advance.

From Semendria south to the main road, the country is generally rather flat and without serious natural obstacles to a hostile advance. Moreover, the branch road from Semendria is paralleled for most of its length by the valley of the Jesema River, which offers a ready means of advance. It is, therefore, entirely feasible that the Teutons in front of Belgrade would devote themselves to keeping the Serbians in their front as busy as possible while the Teuton left advanced down the Jesema Valley toward Velika Plana. This would have the same effect on the Serbians north of the latter point as if the road were cut at Nish, i. e., their supply line would be cut and they would be completely severed from both foreign and local sources. So far the Teuton advance has been negligible, but such advance as there has been is most noticeable in the Semendria region.

On the eastern border Bulgaria, having formally declared war, is trying to work her way west. So far, however, she has been unsuccessful, and has, as far as we may judge from official reports, suffered a not inconsiderable loss without any gain. Bulgaria's task of driving to Nish is much more difficult in its first stages than is Germany's, on account of the difference in the character of the country. From Belgrade south, over the line which the Teutons will follow, the country is generally flat, though partly broken by the foothills. From the Bulgarian border west it is mountainous in the extreme for a considerable depth, and is therefore admirably adapted to defensive tactics. The Serbs will, of course, on this front be greatly outnumbered, but because of the strength of their natural defensive screen it will take an almost overwhelming force to drive them back.

While all this is going on the Allies will not be idle. France and England are already rushing reinforcements by way of Saloniki. Italy is reported to be about to strike at the Teuton flank through Montenegro, and the Russians are bombarding the Bulgarian Black Sea ports. On the whole, therefore, it may be expected that the conquest of Serbia will be a long-drawn-out arduous procedure. The race for Constantinople will be a slow one.

Reports of the Allies' operations on Gallipoli show no material gain—in fact, no gain at all. They are still in front of the Achibaba position, with the Turks everywhere holding their own. Failure of the Turks' sources of munition supply would seem to be the only chance of anything like immediate success. If they cannot reach Constantinople before the defenses of Serbia give way, all hope of giving Russia an opening into the Mediterranean is gone, and Russia will, unless Rumania joins in, have to depend entirely on her present inadequate sources of munition supply—Archangel and the Trans-Siberian Railroad.

What was generally regarded as a temporary check to the Germans on the Russian front while the Teuton leaders were making redispositions of their forces bids fair to become permanent. In fact, the German offense seems to be paralyzed. From Riga to Bukowina Teuton reports have told of but little except their ability to repulse Russian attacks. It seems that the initiative has passed to the Russians and that, even in front of Dvinsk, the Germans are now on the defensive. The combination of the rainy season, of marshes, of long lines of supply and inability to maintain a continuous flow of heavy shells, has brought the Germans to a halt. Once operations in the east, by reason of difficulties in transportation, are reduced to a matter of rifle fire, the Germans no longer can run over the Russian armies, but, meeting them on an equal footing, can make but little headway against them.

Germany has up to now literally blasted her way through Poland by concentrating her superiority of heavy guns at carefully selected points and blazing the trail for the infantry to follow. Against this the Russians had no defense. Their own guns were outranged and outmunitioned, and when the German infantry reached the Russian trenches it was to find an enemy thoroughly shaken, almost demoralized, whose resisting power was almost gone. As the German advantages, however, disappear, from whatever cause, whether through inability to bring up their own heavy guns or through increase in the Russian supply of munitions, the Russian defense becomes as strong, if not stronger, than the German attack.

The Russian soldier, though for the most part uneducated, is, nevertheless, an excellent fighting man. If properly officered, in fact, he is almost the par of any other soldier of continental Europe. Consequently, when the game is reduced to the infantry rifle and the machine gun, it becomes largely a question of numbers. On such a basis the Teutons cannot hold their own. The demands made on them from all points is so great that everywhere except in the recently begun operations in Serbia, they are outnumbered. They can, it is true, by clever use of railroad lines, effect rapid concentrations at selected points, but it is always at the expense of some other parts of the line. The net result is that, after an almost inconceivable sacrifice in men, and an expenditure of enormous supplies of shell in order to accomplish a given object—the forcing of Russia to a decisive battle—Germany faces a Winter in the interior of Russia with her object as far removed from accomplishment as it was months ago. This means stagnation, and time works to the benefit of Russia more than to that of Germany.

The Riga section during the week has been extremely quiet, but south, in the Dvinsk region, there has been violent fighting. Yet, in spite of all their efforts, the Germans seem no nearer to capturing Dvinsk. Small gains at some points have been more than offset by the losses at others. From Dvinsk to the Dniester the Germans have been hard put to it to hold the Russians in check without attempting an offense of their own. As a matter of fact, the Russians have made a number of gains at different points—unimportant, it is true, but indicative of the reviving striking power that enabled Russia to sweep through Galicia a year ago. In particular is this true along the Strypa River in Eastern Galicia, where they have been for some weeks conducting a very active offense. A number of small towns have been reoccupied and the Austrians driven west across the river until practically all of the east bank is now held by the Russians.

This represents a gain during the last few weeks of ten miles over a front of about sixty miles. In these operations the Austrians have suffered very heavy losses in killed, wounded, and prisoners. The latter alone amount to about 125,000, a sufficient indication of the severity of the fighting and of the strength of the Russian attacks.

These successes, so close to the Rumanian frontier, will, of course, have their influence on Rumania's attitude toward the Entente. In all probability, this was Russia's object, particularly during this past week. The Teutons have had a considerable force concentrated on the Rumanian frontier, to deter Rumania, if possible, from lining up with the Allies by showing her what must be faced if her troops attempted to cross into Bukowina. But this move the Russian advance has entirely discounted.

A view of the Russians' line now and the same line two weeks ago makes their front seem stronger and in better shape than it has been for a long time. The salients have all been flattened out, either by advances or retirements, (and the latter have been inconsequential,) so that the line is now practically straight. It has an excellent railroad system, generally parallel to it for almost its entire length, and it is strong enough defensively to prevent any further Teuton advance, thus giving Russia one thing she needs—time to rebuild, recruit and mobilize her resources, and perfect her supply system. It is unfortunate for Germany that other fronts demanded her most serious attention at a time when the German forces were between two lines, one of which is now far in their rear and the other strongly held, and securely held, too, by the Russians. The railroad situation on the German front is in a way impossible as there is no north and south line, and no means other than almost impassable dirt roads of distributing supplies.

It is not, therefore, a line on which Germany would care to intrench for the Winter, so that attention can be paid to other fields. But if the situation does continue through the Winter, the German position before the reorganized and resupplied Russians will be an uncomfortable one in the extreme, and the full value of the supply line in the rear of the Russian line will make itself felt.

On the western front operations have been centralized almost entirely in the Artois and the Champagne districts. In both cases the Germans are keenly appreciative of the danger to which their lines are subjected by the British and French successes of several weeks ago, and consequently have been making counterattacks of the most violent character in an effort partly to recover the lost ground and partly to prevent the Allies from consolidating the trenches gained and connecting them up with the lines to the north and south.

In the Artois these attacks have fallen principally between Hulluch and Hill 70, and against the heights of Petit Vimy, southeast of Givenchy. Generally they have been unsuccessful. Small sections of first-line trenches have been retaken, but new trenches have been lost. The net result has been greatly increased losses by the Germans, while the Allies have held practically all of their gain.

The British have made an effort to continue the offensive, attempting the drive between Loos and Hulluch. This is a very important section of the British line as now positioned and is a more or less dangerous one, too. In going forward southeast of Loos to Hill 70, the British while driving a wedge into the German line at Hill 70 and thereby creating in it a salient with the town of Angres as its centre, at the same time created in their own line a much smaller but sharper salient with Hill 70 as its centre. The driving of such a wedge is therefore a feat that brings with it a certain amount of danger to the army on the offensive unless it is followed up by crushing in the side of the salient created in the enemy's line. The point of a wedge is in itself not a particularly happy selection as the point from which to start an offensive. For just as the attack gets in swing a counter-attack against the sides of the wedge places the troops in the point in danger of being cut off and captured. Because of the violence of the German counterattacks the British, and the French, too, have been unable as yet to reap the full benefits of their success of two weeks ago. They have indeed been hard put to it to maintain their gains without effecting new ones.

The British, therefore, have been trying to remove the weakness in their line at Hill 70 by flattening out the salient through gains north of that point toward Hulluch. This they have to some extent succeeded in doing and have advanced east of the Lens-La Bassée road about 500 yards. The gain in itself is insignificant beyond the fact that it betters the British position. Extremely heavy artillery firing is now going on in this entire sector, and, in view of the heavy British attack of Friday, may presage another attempt to move forward.

In the Champagne practically all the fighting of the week has occurred within a radius of five miles of Tahure. The results of the week are not particularly encouraging to one side or the other. The French have held their positions in spite of the German attacks and have to some extent straightened out their line, but on the whole are no nearer the Challerange-Bazancourt railroad—which, of course, is their objective—than they were last week. This, from the viewpoint of the Allies, is disappointing.

The advantage and importance of this lateral line has been fully discussed in previous reviews of the Champagne fighting. The Germans, seeing it in danger of capture and actually controlled by hostile artillery fire, will be able by the delay to build a subsidiary line further north, so that in any event they will not be cut off from the army of the Crown Prince on the Argonne and will have the same opportunity as before of supplying their line.

On other sections of the front there has been spasmodic fighting, but nothing serious has apparently been undertaken by either side. In fact no other material effort may be expected until that begun two weeks ago has been followed to its logical conclusion.

Tomorrow's Style Assemblage

At the New Bedell Fashion Shop

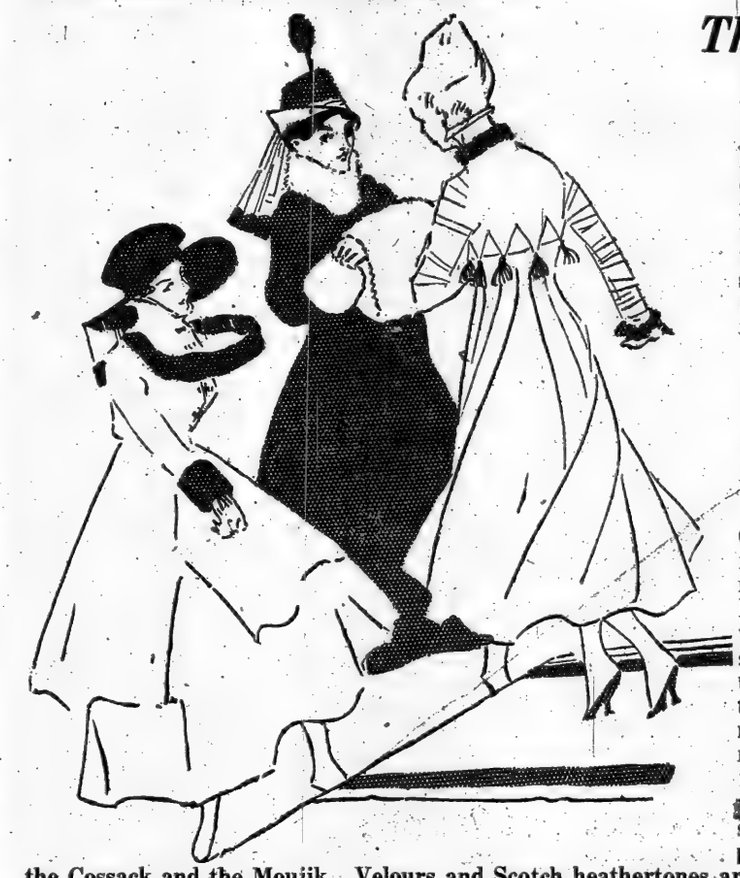
In West Thirty-Fourth Street

(Opposite Waldorf-Astoria)

THE season advances, and with it advances the reputation of the newest establishment in the field of metropolitan fashion. Women noted for their taste are making extensive purchases, after a discriminating inspection of the shops in which the ultra modes have their Fifth Avenue Headquarters. Equal smartness with the highest priced, at prices representing unequalled economies, is the lodestone which is attracting them.



The Week's New Productions

Once a week the spotlight of style moves to new creations—another reel of fashion's film. Tomorrow will be shown the new picture as society is seeing itself, richer than ever, in silks and velvets and framed in fur.

Costumes of Consequence Among Autumn Suits

Followers of Lady Duff-Gordon, who manifested her interest by becoming the first customer in the new Fashion Shop, include women prominent on the stage and in social life. Particularly are they attracted to the Cabinet of Suits. Tomorrow there are shown many newer suits of Russian inspiration, combining velvets and silver embroidery, satin-cloths and furs, displaying the swirling skirt of the Cossack and the Moujik. Velours and Scotch heathertones are responsible for a number of innovations in town-and-country suits, while serges and gabardines are in the front line of practical, smart, all-purpose suits. Many are at $25 and $30—and in between. Values are equally unusual at $40, $50 and up to $125.

Frocks Are in High Favor

Black silks veiled with tulle, fluffy chiffons draped layer over layer, fur-trimmed brocades, silks and velvets embroidered with silver and gold—was ever such a charming, old-fashioned garden of color and style brought up to the moment for Broadway wear? Bevies of new evening gowns, bouffant and beautiful, attractive in their silken simplicity, at $25, $30 and $35. Elaborate opera gowns at $60, $75, $100 and up to $200. Morning frocks and afternoon dresses, and the new tailor-made two-piece frocks—whatever you want, at the price you want to pay.

In the Gallery of Coats

There are Monday contributions without end in the great Coat Gallery of the new Fashion Shop. Every new coat has its individual character—its personality in the Second Act of Autumn Styles on which the curtain is now rising. Starting with fur-trimmed street coats, at $20, and evening coats in all the light, theatre shades, at $25, there are splendid groupings at $30, $35, $40 and up to $100—each coat an approved style, tested by the taste of women of fashion in the highest-priced shops.

Alterations Are Made Free.

An added economy to which women are awakening, instituted in the fashionable shopping district by this house. Fitters and tailors are employed on this work who have had their training in the most expensive establishments in the city, insuring the class of work to which women of refinement are accustomed.

AMERICAN COAT SUITS COMPETE FOR FIRST TIME WITH FRENCH

Domestic Styles, Designed Especially for Walking, Are Lighter and Less Cumbersome Than Foreign Makes---Many Kinds of Materials and Colors Used.

IT is passing strange that American women buy tailor suits in Paris when they can produce the best in the world in their own country," said a French Countess who were remarkably smart clothes. She was coming down from St. Moritz and was observing the many American women on the train, some wearing French coats and skirts, others in the unmistakable habiliments of the States.

Even the greatest of French designers have always wondered why they had such success with their definitely Parisienne conception of the street suit which England invented and America perfected. They are always frank in their praise of the admirable cutting and fitting of our mannish uniform in heavy materials. "But," they argue, "if the buyers come to us for suggestions and pay good prices for what we offer, and we comprehend plain hat above, if one is to be dressed in harmony throughout.

The most vital point of difference is in the width of skirt. American designers have accepted the American woman's statement that she finds herself hampered in walking by the enormously wide Russian skirt of the French suits. The French are not a nation of walkers; they consider a stroll on the Avenue des Acacias in the Bois, or a one-block promenade on the Rue de la Paix in the late afternoon as sufficient exercise. The designers, therefore, know little of the way our women walk to and fro, on countless errands, on country roads, to church, wearing a coat suit all through the day, depending on it for continuous service.

Two of the New York houses famous for their coat suits have definitely adhered to moderately narrow skirts, the parent blouse and open neck which have been abandoned for the open.

It has never been satisfactorily proved that these features of fashion heightened the death rate among women, regardless of all the hysteria on the subject. The verdict from Japan is different, according to the recent statement of a Japanese doctor, who says the mortality among Japanese women has materially increased through the adoption of American clothes. If these tiny little peach blossoms had only waited until this Winter to adopt our fashions such a terrible statement would not have been possible, for they would probably have been kept so warm they would have rebelled and gone back to their open-necked kimono. We ourselves are likely to resemble Eskimos between October and April.

Coats Are Heavy.

The effort made by the American designers is to cater to the desires of our women by providing them with skirts that reach almost to the ankles and are not over two and a half yards wide. They put sufficient fullness in the long coat, below the waistline, to obviate the lack of it in the skirt. There is already an objection to this fullness, for it adds to the weight of the garment and thereby contributes to fatigue when walking, something that the American woman has avoided with energy during the last decade, since she was emancipated from swathing clothes.

Such coats are all very well for the stage, where they have been exploited recently by one of the best-dressed actresses, and they serve for velvets and silks, heaped with peltry, worn in the motor, but they will not serve for the woman who walks. And she is in the majority. Some compromise will have to be made for her. Along with the reasonably narrow skirts for the great mass of Americans will have to come a coat that clings to the figure, even if it is not narrow in its skirts, and is less in weight than the present one.

The motor woman has been well accounted for. Now let's have something equally good for the walking woman who cannot be annoyed by weight, by fullness, by overornamentation.

One of the best-looking of these suits is of Garibaldi red velvet. It is the one worn on the stage. The skirt is suitably long, although wrinkled Russian boots are worn beneath it, looking so fetching that all the women in the audience want to go out and buy a pair; the coat has a long waistline and its peplum is unusually long at the sides and cut quite short back and front. This peplum is pleated and its voluminous hem is edged with kolinsky. There is an immense collar of the fur that smothers the chin, and cuffs that can serve as a muff, as they are intended to do. This is the only touch of economy advanced in the use of fur this season.

Everywhere among the best of the American tailored suits is shown the tendency to elongate the sides of the coat and place the fullness there. There is no material in the front, and in the back the circular part is smoothed out so that the line is graceful and not bunglesome. The French coats, on the contrary, carry the full peplum around the figure on a straight line, and the only irregular line is placed at the hem of the skirt. The latter idea was started by the house of Premet among the first short wide skirts shown, and it was greeted with approval by the designers, but not by the public over here; women thought it savored of a ragged robin effect.

Today it is generally accepted, a year after its inauguration, which is the fate of most fashions, really. Rarely does a marked departure from the prevailing thing have more than a lukewarm attention until two seasons have passed. Over here we talk and accentuate the wide Russian skirt as a novelty, whereas every house in Paris showed it last August, and two seasons have come since then. In France, there is already talk of modifying its width. When we do it here, suits will be far better to look at.

Woman who brought home full skirts from Paris a year ago, and who were persuaded to have them narrowed, are now wondering why they listened to the advice of those who did not look into the future and who were convinced that the narrow skirt would never be thrown out; and yet today one cannot even get $5, second hand, for a $100 frock that has a yard and a half skirt hem.

Among the leading suits that France has sent over, and that, undoubtedly, will be copied throughout the Winter, are one from Cherult of green cloth; one from Georgette, of blue gabardine; one from Drecoll, of gray worsted mixture, named Cobb, (probably not after Irvin,) that are happily suited for American figures.

The Cherult suit is of that new weave of soft satinized cloth, in a deep green, that is very fashionable. It is distinctly Russian. The coat, apparently, has no opening, as it presents an unbroken surface, front and back. The long waistline, beloved by the house of Cherult, although the lovely Luise is not there to guide its destinies, is outlined by a folded belt, fastened at each side by a button. There is a military touch of braid and buttons carried out in a panel at each side, and the hem, the choker collar and small cuffs are of krimmer. The skirt owes its fullness to inverted side pleats; the front and back are plain.

This manipulation of pleats is far better than the way Cherult arranged the fullness last season, when she had the trick of placing pleats in the front. Avoid that feature, if you see it on a skirt made of heavy cloth. It gives an ugly line over the abdomen.

The Georgette suit is of blue gabardine, well braided. The skirt does not care how wide it is, evidently, but it lacks trimming, fortunately. The coat is military, although each of the designers insists that militarism is dead in clothes. There is wide braiding at each side of the waistline, it covers the shoulders in an attempt to give the effect of epaulets, and three large buttons keep the single-breasted fronts together, including the high collar, which is cut in one with the shoulders. There is a gray suede belt, to carry out the touch of gray given by the top of the collar, which is gray krimmer.

While the belt is supposedly at the normal waistline, it is really an inch or two below it, in order to give that long military line that the soldiers have on their jackets, due to their long-waisted figures.

The suit that Drecoll calls "Cobb" is of gray worsted, most serviceable in every way for steady wear over here. Drecoll usually can turn this trick, for Vienna always knew how to cut and fit an admirable coat. It does not do, however, to whisper the name "Vienna" in connection with this house in Paris. The firm has had a hard time of it because of its past; it claims now that no German or Austrian money is any longer involved in the business—for the house was put out of the syndicate of French dressmakers, and has met with immense resistance from every commercial quarter in carrying on its work, despite the fact that the chief designer, wife of the manager, is one of the heads of the Red Cross in France.

The suit in question, which is of gray worsted, has a wide, short skirt edged with a black velvet ribbon. The jacket has a slim upper part, a high flaring collar that does not meet in front, unlike most of the other collars one sees, and is fastened straight up the front with black bone buttons. There are two pocket flaps on the chest, and long sleeves with small, tight cuffs piped with black velvet. The hem of the coat is edged with the velvet ribbon, and there is a band of it that runs up the front from hem to belt. The latter is built of the two materials and fastened with a silver belt. You can see for yourself what service such a suit will give and how smart an appearance it will present on the street.

Referring to the name of this suit which is English, it is an interesting fact that a number of the Paris designers gave English names to their creations for the first time. They paid their allies this mark of respect. Russia contributed the majority of these names, but there was a reason for this, in the amount of Russian fashions introduced. The English names were merely compliments.

Worth calls his best evening frock "Lord Byron." Drecoll calls a suit "Cobb." Georgette calls one "Greenaway." Bernard calls a frock "Gainsborough," and a suit "Tommy." These few show the way the wind listeth.

What Materials Are Used.

In choosing the tailor suit one need not be bothered by a diversity of materials or colors. They are somewhat limited by the mills, and, at any rate, woman should be governed by her social opportunities. Velvet is not suitable for one who has no time, nor reason, to go to formal afternoon affairs; a luncheon or the matinée is better served by a one-piece frock of chiffon cloth under a heavy coat. Velveteen is only for the rich, not the poor. Duvetyn is lovely, but if there is a lingering doubt of its wearing qualities, avoid it. Broadcloth with a high finish is in fashion, and serves admirably. All the mixed worsteds are good. A woman with one suit should avoid plaid cloth. It becomes tiresome.

Black makes the most fashionable suit, but dark green, seal brown, deep purple, and any shade of dark red are used. Red is impossible for any one but the woman who has a wardrobe full of clothes; purple suits only a few skins; dark blue is not urged by those who make fashionable suits, but it is in excellent taste and nearly always becoming. Of course, it is a Spring color and not a Winter one, but this should not deter any one from choosing it, if it is what she wants.

Black is the smart thing in Europe, naturally, and the leading tailors advocate it for everyday suits here; but it has its drawbacks. It is often unbecoming; it is old-looking, especially in a long coat and full skirt, and it shows every spot more quickly than do the other colors.

Probably the American woman could do no better than to choose one of those rough, but soft, gray worsteds that go through the sun and the snows without being affected by either.

that we have, by their courtesy, entered the American field as arbiters, then it is human nature to hold that position and secure all the trade we can."

Under these conditions it has come about that we take our coat and skirt styles from Paris, as we do everything else in costumery, but, granting that, we should have our coats and skirts made here, even if we adopt French suggestions. We never suffer by comparison with Paris in this field. Our workmanship here is perfect. The backs are sufficiently broad, the sleeves long, the skirts admirably shaped, the surface not overtrimmed. Probably Paris will continue to lay down the fundamental changes in the silhouette, in the coloring, the width of skirt, the length of coat, for that is the established mission of those designers, but the new movement over here to create tailored suits at home, for this Winter, has resulted in success.

The effort has been made before, but it was too experimental. It did not succeed. Except in a few distinguished cases the results were commonplace. The majority of women who buy clothes for prudential reasons might not offer any objection to the suits that were offered, but they were not even considered by the woman who knows that good street dressing is an art. This season the work was undertaken in earnest by those who usually buy all their models in Paris and faithfully copy but never create. They have worked out several admirable designs for strictly American tailored suits which are really more original than those brought over from France.

After all, there was no scarcity of tailored suits in various kinds of cloths at the French openings, and the shops are showing them along with the home-made product. There is a distinct difference between the two, although they do not advocate different silhouettes. Both have the more or less wide skirt, the long sleeve, the fronts fastened to the neck or the chin; nearly all the coats have peplums that extend somewhere between the hips and the knees. But the American suits are simpler. They have little ornament, if any. They require the wash blouse beneath and the kind that do not hamper movement, yet do not swirl in the wind like a merry-go-round, showing the legs half to the knees, as the French skirts do. The American climate is decidedly cold in Winter, for one thing, and these short, full skirts are no protection to the lower part of the body. Unless one wears the Russian boots that reach nearly to the knees, and are often edged with fur, one is far more apt to catch pneumonia than in the trans-

NOW that the autumnal season is well advanced preparations for entertainments for the debutantes of the Winter are under way and with the large number of girls to be introduced, the early season promises to be a very busy and giddy one. Already the list of buds has gone over seventy, and it will likely soar near a hundred before the whirl of gayeties starts in November.

This is an unusually high percentage as compared to former years, when the number of girls presented to society kept pretty close to the half hundred. The increase means an extra demand for young men, especially the men who dance, who were rather scarce last season when dancing reached the zenith of popularity.

The young man of today is a very serious person, and he is buckling down to business, whether it be in Wall Street or in the marts of commerce and shipping, for the war profits are worth striving for. The big universities and preparatory schools are also making an inroad into the list of desirable young men, which must also be taken into consideration. There was a howl of protest last season from the young men over the multitude of dancing engagements and entertainments which kept them up until break of day.

There are many young men, of course, who have the time and the wherewithal to shirk their business duties and who think nothing of averaging one full night's rest a week. But the tendency these days, with the passing of the idle rich, is for the scions of the wealthy to carve out their own destinies in the business of life, with the result that many young men of wealth and position are now paying more attention to their business interests than to the continuous frivolities of the season, which put them to bed at cock crow, to breakfast hurriedly at 10.

It is a wise hostess who places the stamp of approval on the early dances for the younger set. In the end she will have the bulk of the more serious-minded and desirable young men at her beck and call. The lack of young men becomes hazardous at times, for it often brings into the entertainments and in close association with the débutante a class of young men who are on the ragged edge, but who are often asked to fill in.

The happy go-between is the tea dance, which seems to have come to stay as a means of presenting and entertaining the débutante. This is a popular form of afternoon entertainment and it has numerous good points, otherwise it would not hold its own. Primarily it presents the opportunity for informality, which the young people like most of all, and the young men can drop in when they please and without rushing home from the office to fuss up. It allows the débutante and her girl friends to wear their engaging afternoon frocks, and if there are three or four girls to one young man it causes no comment. But once let a débutante scintillate at an evening affair, with girls in the majority, and she will never hear the last of it.

In proportion to the number of girls presented each season, there is a low percentage of marriages. Within the last year or so only about 20 per cent. of the girls presented to society have become brides. There are scores of girls now hovering on the edge of that perilous quantity known as "the older girls." Naturally most of the girls are presented at the age of eighteen, and they can afford, from the marriage viewpoint, to tide over for a few years.

The left-overs of each social year are gradually accumulating, however, and society is fearful lest it be in time overstocked with spinsters.

THE presentation of girls to society is really like a play. The curtain rises at the beginning of the social season and falls at the end. In a short period they must win favor, or popularity, or else they will be forgotten, like player-folk, who shine for a night and a day, and are eclipsed by other and brighter stellar lights.

It takes a long and gradual process for the formal coming-out, and the future depends entirely upon the girl herself. No matter how loud the plaudits of her fond relatives, she must "make good," or else step down from the glare of the social limelight, to make room for another.

There are many heart-burnings behind the scenes, some pathos, but mostly good cheer. The pathetic scenes are enacted when people who have the ancestry but not the means attempt to see their daughter through an expensive season. There is sure to be an ugly duckling, and plain girls, who become wall flowers. But the community of interest among the débutantes is such as to frequently carry the ugly duckling, the plain girl, or the girl who has little or nothing but ancestors, safely through the season.

As a class, the New York débutante is free from snobbishness. The majority of girls are from representative New York families, some of wondrous wealth, yet they recognize and accept the girl of lesser means who is making her modest bow to society.

Once upon the stage of social activity the débutante finds herself engaged in other diversions than the pursuit of pleasure, and the displaying of fine feathers in the marriage mart. She finds that a great deal is expected of her in the way of social service, and very soon she has become interested in the various opportunities for philanthropy.

This is where the Junior League steps in, an organization primarily for débutantes, formed fourteen years ago with a threefold purpose—first, to interest the girls in philanthropy and social service; second, to provide out of its membership volunteers to answer the many calls issued by the settlements, hospitals, and charitable agencies, and, third, to raise and contribute money toward the many worthy objects in which its members are interested.

The league was started by Miss Mary Harriman, now Mrs. C. C. Rumsey, as a small group of débutantes, who acted a little play for a few friends, and gave the proceeds—a few hundred dollars—to the college settlement. Now the league has a membership of about 700, and about $25,000 passed through the treasury last year.

One of the league's first contributions toward solving the housing problem was the model hotel erected for working girls. It supports nurses, visiting teachers, and the débutantes help by sending the flowers from their entertainments to the poor and the sick. Its activities are multifarious, and the results prove the spirit which pervades these activities.

A GOOD many of the débutantes have been about in an informal way during the Summer. The Autumn ball at Tuxedo will find many of the buds assembled, but the greater number will be at the first of the Junior Assemblies.

The Tuxedo ball comes a day or so earlier this season, falling on Oct. 29, which is not so far removed. Even the first of the Junior Assemblies comes a day earlier than last season, being fixed for the night of Nov. 30. As already announced, the annual Horse Show will open in Madison Square Garden on Nov. 6. Consequently the round of gayeties will begin early and run late.

Dates for the many coming-out tea dances, receptions, and dances are being announced almost daily now. No large débutante dances are to be given in town before December.

Among the reports of the week was that Miss Maud Kahn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Kahn, is to be presented to society this season. Another addition to the list was Miss Adele Prindle, daughter of Mrs. Leeming Walker of 399 Park Avenue, who is to give a reception for the débutante on Dec. 23, to be followed by a theatre party and dance.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wood Cushman of 515 Madison Avenue will present their daughter, Miss Mary Allerton Cushman, at a tea to be held on Dec. 8. Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Stettinius will introduce their daughter, Miss Isabel Stettinius, at a reception at their residence, 16 East Seventy-third Street, on Dec. 4, and they will give her a dance on Dec. 31 at Sherry's. Mrs. Robert Hartshorne of 449 Park Avenue is to give a tea dance on Dec. 13, to introduce her daughter, Miss Mary Minturn Hartshorne. Mrs. Edward T. Potter will give a tea on Monday, Dec. 27, at her home, 114 East Thirty-seventh Street, for her granddaughter Miss Julie E. H. Potter, the débutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Nott Potter of Harrison, N. Y.

Mrs. Cyril Dugmore of 903 Park Avenue is to present her daughter, Miss Florence Gilbert, this season. Owing to the fact that Captain Dugmore is at the front with the British Army, Miss Gilbert's début will be very informal. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt have taken the Oakleigh Thorne house at 783 Park Avenue for the early season, and will no doubt entertain considerably for Miss Elizabeth Howard, daughter of Mrs. Thomas H. Howard. Mrs. Vanderbilt, who is Miss Howard's great-aunt, will go to California later in the Winter. Mrs. Howard gives a ball at Sherry's for her daughter on Dec. 28.

Miss Charlotte Platt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Barstow Platt, of 535 Park Avenue, is to be introduced at a reception the latter part of November. Miss Margaret Dickson, daughter of Joseph Dickson of Morristown, N. J., will have her coming-out tea on Dec. 4, at the St. Regis. Mrs. James Byrne, who has taken the Koven house at 1,025 Park Avenue, is to give a large dance there on Dec. 10 for her daughter, Miss Helen M. Byrne. Mrs. Ernest Adee will give a reception on Dec. 21 at the new Colony Club for her daughter, Miss Geraldine F. Adee. Miss Madeleine Carey, a daughter of Mrs. Frederic F. Carey, is to be presented on the afternoon of Dec. 2 at the club, and on Dec. 29 Mrs. Lowell Lincoln will introduce her daughter, Miss Mary Lincoln, at the club, which makes an ideal place for debutante affairs, in the select atmosphere of upper Park Avenue. Miss Grace Bristed, daughter of Mrs. Charles Astor Bristed, is to be introduced by her mother at the new clubhouse on Dec. 21. Mrs. Linsley Tappin is to give a tea dance at Sherry's on Dec. 27 for her débutante daughter, Miss Mary I. Francke. Mrs. George Q. Palmer will give a dance for her daughter, Miss Lillian Palmer, at Sherry's, on Christmas eve.

The first of the débutante entertainments is set for Nov. 15, at Haverford, Penn., where Mrs. Thomas de Witt Cuyler will give a tea dance for her daughter, Miss Eleanor de Graff Cuyler, with the Misses Mildred Mitchell and Constance Chappell, two débutantes of this city, assisting. The debutante affairs are under way now in Philadelphia. On Nov. 18 Mrs. Alphonse H. Alker of 21 East Sixty-sixth Street will introduce her daughter, Miss Mabel W. Alker, at a reception at her home, and will give a dance on Dec. 21 at Sherry's. Several coming-out receptions will fall on Nov. 24. Mr. and Mrs. George Dallas Yeomans of 6 North Washington Square are to give a reception that afternoon for Miss Isabel S. Yeomans, to be followed by a dinner and dance. Mrs. Israel O. Blake will give a dance at Sherry's that night to introduce her daughter, Miss Jeannette Blake. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Geer will introduce their daughter, Miss Helen D. Geer, on that afternoon at their home, 246 West Seventy-second Street, which is to be followed by an informal dance in the evening. Miss Dorothy Dulles, daughter of Mrs. William Dulles, will not be presented on the 24th, her coming-out reception having been postponed on account of the death of her father.

SOCIAL and sporting activities are at their height now in the country, where the coloring of the Autumn foliage makes an attractive setting for the out-of-door pastimes. The polo season on Long Island has closed. The Meadow Brook Club has just purchased eighteen acres of land on the western border of the present international field, which is to be improved before next season.

The colonists at Tuxedo are planning some gay festivities for the mid-autumn season, with a series of informal week-end dances at the clubhouse. The colony of the Hudson River is still enjoying the charm of the river hills in gorgeous colors, and on Friday night many of them attended the annual entertainment for the benefit of the Robin's Nest held in the Irvington Town Hall.

People are coming and going at this time of the year, some to the Pacific Coast, and many to the resorts in the Virginia mountains. There are naturally some changes in town residences, and the drift to the apartment house is on the increase.

Dr. and Mrs. Alexander H. Rice have left their apartments at 22 East Forty-seventh Street, and have gone to California on their honeymoon, to remain until Nov. 23. They expect to take a house on their return. Mrs. Rice was formerly Mrs. George D. Widener. Mr. and Mrs. E. Roscoe Mathews, who were in West Ninth Street last season, are now occupying their new house at 673 Lexington Avenue. Mrs. Richard T. Auchmuty, who has been at Lenox, will occupy her home at 101 University Place, which is now wholly business, having succumbed to trade, which left some of the crosstown streets of that part of town, and lower Fifth Avenue, free from invasion.

Mrs. I. Townsend Burden and her daughter, Miss Evelyn Burden, will spend the Winter at the Ritz-Carlton. George J. Gould has rented for his son-in-law, Anthony J. Drexel, Jr., the house at 1,015 Fifth Avenue, to J. Henry Lancashire. Mr. and Mrs. Drexel are abroad.

News comes from Cleveland, Ohio, of the birth of a son to Mr. and Mrs. Harry L. Kaufman. Mrs. Kaufman was formerly Miss Hope Hamilton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Hamilton of New York, and was presented to society by her cousin, Mrs. George J. Gould. They were married last January in the Church of the Heavenly Rest. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney W. Fish (Miss Olga Wiborg) will pass some time in Mexico and South America before returning to New York. Their wedding was a recent event. Edward N. Taller of 11 North Washington Square is at Tuxedo, after completing a 3,500-mile motor trip. Mr. Taller is 85 years old. Besides the military attache of the Russian Embassy, Colonel Golejewski, who is to live at 18 East Ninety-second Street, the Naval Attache, Commander Mishtowt, will also be in this city for the greater part of the Winter, at 216 West Eighty-ninth Street.

ONE of the first large entertainments in November will be the annual subscription dance, to be given for the benefit of the Children's Club of St. Ambrose, by the New York Guild of St. Timothy Alumnae, on Tuesday evening, Nov. 23, at Sherry's. Features for the evening are to be announced later. Among the patronesses are Mrs. Robert Bacon, Mrs. Joseph H. Choate, Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mrs. Rudolph Kissel, Mrs. John T. Pratt, Mrs. Willard Straight, and many mothers of this season's débutantes.

In charge of the dance are to be Mrs. Stephen Clark, Mrs. George Whitney, Mrs. Joseph Seligman, Mrs. Arthur O. Choate, and the Misses Ina Kissel, Mary Tweed and Genevieve Sanford. Applications for tickets at $3 each are being received by Miss Lois Martin, 178 East Sixty-fourth Street. The club carries on its settlement work at 236 East 111th Street among the Italian immigrants.

There are sure to be some new dances this year. At the Panama-Pacific Exposition the three-step has been a favorite, and the glide waltz is said to be coming back into its own. The tango still holds in favor.

THE weddings are increasing in number, although the rush will not come much before November.

The first important wedding of the week will be that of Miss Rheda van Bibber Tanner, daughter of Mrs. John James Tanner of 37 Fifth Avenue, and Felix D. Doubleday, son of Frank N. Doubleday, which is to be celebrated on Tuesday, in the Church of the Ascension, with a reception afterward at the Colony Club. On the same day, in Irvington, N. Y., Miss Mary Corbin and William B. Eddison, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eddison of Irvington, will be married in St. Barnabas's Church. A small reception is to follow at the home of the bride's cousin, Mrs. William Usher Parsons, at Ardsley.

On Saturday Miss Estelle Young Romeyn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Romeyn, and Ernest W. Pittman are to be married in St. Thomas's Church, with a reception following at the Women's University Club in West Fifty-second Street. Several out-of-town weddings are scheduled for that day. In Newport Miss Margherita Siegfried, daughter of Mrs. Charles A. Siegfried, will become the bride of Joseph H. de Rivera of this city. The couple will live in New York. In Hampton, Va., Alfred Van Santvoord Olcott, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Eben E. Olcott of this city, will be married to Miss Ruth Purves, daughter of Mrs. Alexander Purves of New York and Hampton. William Ward Smith, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Smith of this city, and Miss Ellen West Page, daughter of Mr and Mrs. William Carter Page of Baltimore, Md., will be married in that city on Oct. 23.

EMANU-EL SISTERS TO MEET

Will Hold First Social Reunion Since 1888 at the Biltmore.

The first social reunion of the Emanu-El Sisterhood since the year after it was founded in 1887 will take place on Nov. 10 at the Biltmore. A musical program from noon to 1 o'clock, in the grand ballroom, is to precede the luncheon, provided by a committee of which Mrs. Henry Meyers is Chairman, composed of the Board of Trustees.

Among the speakers will be Collector Dudley Field Malone, Dr. John H. Finley, State Commissioner of Education; Mrs. William Einstein, and Mrs. Alexander Kohut, President of the sisterhood. The other officers are Mrs. Jacob H. Schiff, Vice President; Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim, Treasurer; Mrs. Adolph Lewisohn, Chairman of the Finance Committee; Miss Carrie Wise, Secretary, and Mrs. Joseph Hoffman, Financial Secretary.

The late Rabbi Gotthelf of Temple Emanu-El, with which the sisterhood is connected, established the organization. Improvements and alterations to the property were recently completed at a cost of $10,000 through gifts from Mrs. Schiff and Mrs. Guggenheim.

QUERIES FROM TIMES READERS AND ANSWERS TO THEM

Readers of The Times are particularly requested to read the following before sending queries to the Query Department:

No answers can be given regarding legal or medical matters, card problems, propriety in dress, correctness of English sentences, and values of stamps and coins, nor to questions of a trivial character or of concern only to the questioner.

To receive attention every question must bear the name and address of the person sending it. This does not necessarily mean that the name will be published when the question is answered, only the initials will be used if the questioner so desires. No attention will be paid to queries to which the name and address of the sender are not appended.

Hundreds of letters are received by this department, so that it is obviously impossible to answer all of them immediately. In many cases there must be a certain amount of unavoidable delay.

Nationality.

CONSTANT READER.—A and B have had the following argument: A knows of a Jewish young man who, having been asked by his new employers what nationality he was, replied that he was an American-Hebrew, which A says is correct. B claims that the reply "American-Hebrew" was unnecessary, that "American" was all that was proper for the reply for nationality and that "Hebrew" means nothing in nationality.

In this day of immigration and the adoption of new citizenship, the word "nationality" is, for a newcomer to America, somewhat ambiguous. The word contains originally the idea both of birth and of citizenship—of racial and political loyalty. And while a question as to citizenship, asked of a newly naturalized American, is answered truly by stating that he is an American, the broader question of nationality is better met by mentioning not only his actual citizenship, with its political allegiance, but the race of his birth and ancestry.

A New Gasoline Process.

R. A. MINSTER—Possibly you or some of your readers can inform me as to what ever became of the new process for making gasoline or a substitute, as claimed by one of our chemists some months ago, that would cut the price in two?

The discovery to which you refer, which was made by Dr. Walter F. Rittman, chemical engineer of the Bureau of Mines, and announced by Secretary Lane of the Department of the Interior Feb. 29, of this year, has been in process of further experiment and investigation by the Bureau of Mines, in conjunction with a chemical company of New York City. Two discoveries were announced at that time by the Secretary of the Interior, and described by the department as follows:

"The first of these processes promises to enable the independent refiners in this country to produce their own gasoline from petroleum 200 per cent. or more. With an estimated production on the part of the independent refiners of 12,000,000 barrels of gasoline in a year, this will mean an output from the independents alone of 24,000,000 barrels, greater than the total production today from all sources.

"The second process includes the manufacture from crude petroleum of what is known chemically as toluol and benzol, both of which have heretofore been obtained from coal tar. As Germany has specialized far beyond other countries in by-products from coal, the United States and the rest of the world have been dominated by that country as regards those products of toluol and benzol, which are the important bases for the production of dyestuffs and high explosives, and especially smokeless powder."

On May 25 the Secretary of the Interior made the following announcement:

"Excellent progress is being made in the development of the Rittman processes, and there is every reason to believe that both the gasoline and the benzol processes will be on a commercial working plane within a reasonably short time. I am informed that the gasoline process is now ready for large scale industrial application, and the hope is expressed that the benzol process will be ready soon.

"The benzol process is being developed in co-operation with the Aetna Chemical Company of New York, which company has entered into an agreement whereby all patentable equipment, processes and ideas available as a result of the co-operative work will be turned over to the department to be dedicated to the public.

"The department stands ready and is anxious to enter into similar agreements with any other companies in the country that will agree to the same terms—that all processes and ideas patentable in the development of either process shall be turned over to the department for the use of the public. The department is willing for all who are desirous of making use of the processes to do so to the fullest possible extent consistent with the proper protection of the processes in order that the public may derive the greatest measure of benefit therefrom. It looks as if it would be only a short time before the complete mechanical equipment necessary for the practice of the processes has been worked out and the inventions covered by patent applications.

"The department considers that all those desirous of employing the processes should agree to contribute to the public in the same manner that Dr. Rittman has done with his basic patents, all patentable ideas that may be conceived as a result of the employment of these processes. This is a proper condition that the department imposes and its reasonableness will become apparent when it is considered that Dr. Rittman has given to the public, through the department, processes which conservatively might be worth millions of dollars were they controlled by a private industrial concern, exclusively for its selfish purposes.

"As soon as the department is assured that the public's interests are properly safeguarded it will put out complete scientific paper describing the processes will be issued. In the meantime the processes will be open to any one who wishes to develop them under the conditions imposed.

"At the first public demonstration of the Rittman benzol and gasoline processes held March 8 before the representatives of the army and the navy, the General Chemical Company, the Aetna Chemical Company, the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, the du Pont de Nemours Powder Company, and some twenty or more representatives of the National Petroleum Association and other prominent refining interests throughout the eastern part of the United States, announcement was made that both processes might be used by all interested persons upon application to the department. At the same time, however, because of the desire to give the public the fullest possible benefits of the Rittman processes, it was stated that the use of the processes would be coupled with the condition that the persons using the same would give to the public the benefits of such ideas along mechanical lines as they might conceive during the employment of the processes.

"A number of Western and mid-continent refiners, who were unable to be present at the first demonstration, recently requested the department to give them an opportunity to witness the workings of the processes, and for their benefit a demonstration was held on May 14, which was attended by accredited representatives of the Waverly Oil Company, Western Petroleum Refiners' Association, the Vacuum Oil Company, the Atlantic Refining Company, the Butler County Refining Company, and others. As a result of this latter demonstration it is expected that several of the refiners will employ the Rittman processes in their works under conditions similar to those which have already been agreed to by the Aetna Chemical Company."

The Rittman gasoline process is being developed at the present time, and is not yet at the point of practical use. On Sept. 11 Secretary Lane announced that announcement of the success of this process might be expected within a short time. The process for the manufacture of benzol and toluol from petroleum, which has been under investigation, experiment, and development for some months past, has now reached a stage of "results" which justify its being placed upon a commercially operative basis, and the contract of experimental development with the chemical company which was investigating it has, therefore, according to its terms, been canceled.

Cooper Union.

C. B. W.—Will you give me the following information, please? Is there anything in Manhattan corresponding to the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences? That is, extension courses of lectures in the evening besides those under the Board of Education? Is there a High School Department in Cooper Union?

There is no institution in Manhattan that is exactly like the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, but evening extension courses are offered in such institutions as Columbia University, the New York University, and Cooper Union. Cooper Union has no high school department. It was founded for "the instruction and improvement of the inhabitants of the United States in practical science and art." It comprises the following departments: Night School of Science, Night School of Art, Day School of Technical Science, Woman's Art School, School of Stenography and Typewriting for Women, School of Telegraphy for Women, Debate and Elocution. Applicants to the "Free Day School of Technical Science for Men and Women" must be examined in algebra through quadratic equations, all of plane geometry, and in the reading and writing of simple English with facility. A four-year course of study is provided which is designed with reference to the needs of students who intend to follow civil or mechanical and electrical engineering. The "Free Night School of Science for Men and Women" offers four distinct courses: A five-year course in general science, civil and mechanical engineering; a five-year course in chemistry; a five-year course in electrical engineering, a three-year course in mechanical drawing. The other department names are self-explanatory. Cooper Union also offers free lectures on Wednesday and Saturday evenings in co-operation with the People's Institute.

The Sunshine Settlement.

K. A. D.—Please advise me whether the Sunshine Settlement is the association that had so much financial trouble and notoriety some time ago.

There is no connection between the Sunshine Settlement and the Sunshine Society. The Sunshine Settlement, which was founded fifteen years ago by Miss V. C. Furry, carries on its work among the poor of the Five Points and Mulberry Bend districts, maintains clubs and classes for boys and girls, kindergartens, a mothers' club, fresh air and vacation work, lectures, music, temperance talks, &c.

Patents.

R. S.—Will you kindly inform me as to the procedure for getting simple devices patented by the United States Government?

Applications for a patent must be made in writing to the Commissioner of Patents at Washington. A copy of the Rules of Practice, containing forms and instructions, will be sent on request. The applicant must file in the Patent Office a written description of his invention or discovery, and of the manner and process of making, constructing, compounding, and using it; and in case of a machine, he must explain the principle, and the best mode in which he has contemplated applying said principle so as to distinguish it from other inventions, and he must clearly point out the invention or discovery which he claims to be his. The specification must bear his signature and that of two witnesses, and when the case admits of the invention admits of drawings the applicant must submit one of the required size, signed by himself or his attorney and attested by two witnesses. He must make statement under oath that he believes the invention to be his own and that to his knowledge or with his consent it has not been patented to himself or others in this or any foreign country for two years back. Fees, which must be paid in advance, are as follows: On the filing each original application for a patent, $15; on using each original patent, $20; in design cases, for three years and six months, $10, for seven years, $15, for fourteen years, $20; on every application for the reissue of a patent, $30; on filing each disclaimer, $10. Patents are good for seventeen years. Further information may be obtained from the Patent Office.

An American Citizen.

W. H. M.—Will you kindly tell me whether a man is a citizen of the United States in the following case: His parents were subjects of Great Britain and his father was never naturalized as a citizen of the United States, nor declared his intention so to do, but the man himself was born in Brooklyn.

All children born in the United States are citizens of the United States, whether their parents are citizens or not. If, however, the man wishes to give up his American citizenship, return to England, and take the citizenship of his father, he may do so.

State Librarians.

A. J. M.—Will you please give me full information regarding civil service examinations for State Librarians?

The following statement, in answer to this question, is made by the New York State Civil Service Commission:

"There are not many positions of Librarian in the State Service for which open-competitive examinations are held. The force in the New York State Library is largely recruited from an examination which we hold for the position of Library Assistant. We recently advertised an examination for legislative reference librarian; owing to the requirements of 'at least five years' experience in legislative reference work, competition for this particular position was limited." The position of Library Assistant, for which examinations are held on announcement, is open to both men and women, and pays a salary of from $600 to $720. The subjects of examination are library classification, cataloguing, national bibliography, accession, shelf and loan work, and reference books, which count relatively eight points; experience and education count relatively two points. The announcement of the position for a legislative reference librarian, which will give an idea of requirements for this sort of a position, is as follows:

"Legislative Reference Librarian, State Library. Men only; $1,500 to $1,800. The position requires an energetic man of successful experience in meeting and mixing with men, and carries the executive oversight, under the Director of the State Library, of seven assistants in the collection, organization, and use of books, Government documents, and reference material in political, social, and economic topics, and especially those likely to be subjects of legislation or of legislative study in New York State. Candidates should have a college education, and those will be preferred who can offer in addition graduate work in social, political, and economic subjects. They must have had at least five years' experience in legislative reference work in serving the Legislature and public officers of this or some other State or city. Candidates will not be required to appear at any place for written examination. They will be rated on education, personal qualifications, and specific library experience, and should give full statements in their applications covering these matters. They may be summoned for a personal interview with the examiners."

Old Records in American Ports.

J. H. S.—Will you please advise me whether it is possible to obtain information as to the arrival of persons at ports of this country as far back as 1830?

Records going back to 1820 are kept in the offices of the Collector of the Port of New York and in the other large ports of the country; also the records go back to early years. But for the first years of such records the information is not altogether complete, and is sometimes rather scattering. Full information about the person desired to be traced must be given before such a search can be undertaken.

Votes Without Citizenship.

KATE L. ROBERTS.—In a recent issue you answered a query of Mr. Garthwaite as to whether a man not a citizen of the United States might vote—the questioner having in mind the alien vote. Your answer showed that an alien who had taken out his first papers might vote while he was only a promissory citizen, according to the suffrage laws of the different States, but you did not state when that "Declaration of Intention" to become a citizen might be taken out by an alien. Will you go further with this and let us know when an alien may take out this paper, when, after doing so, he may vote in such States as Alabama, Arkansas, Indiana, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Oregon, South Dakota, and Texas?

The declaration of intention may be made by an alien at any time after his arrival in the United States, provided he is over eighteen years of age. In other words, any alien of eighteen years or more may at any time declare his intention of becoming a United States citizen and take out his "first paper." He is, of course, eligible to vote only after he has passed his twenty-first birthday, and after a period of residence in the State where his vote is to be cast. This required period of residence, in the States where aliens may vote, is as follows: Alabama, two years' residence in State, one year in County, three months in town, and three months in precinct; Arkansas, one year's residence in State, six months in County, thirty days in town or precinct; Indiana, an alien must have resided one year in the United States, and all voters must have six months' residence in the State, sixty days in the town, and thirty days in the precinct; Kansas, six months' residence in State, thirty days in County and town, and ten days in precinct; Missouri, an alien must have declared his intention not less than one year or more than five years before the election and all voters must have one year's residence in State, and sixty days in County and town; Nebraska, an alien must have declared his intention thirty days before election, and voters must have six months' residence in State, forty days in County, thirty days in town, and ten days in precinct; South Dakota, one year's residence in the United States, six months in State, thirty days in County, and ten days in town and precinct; Texas, an alien must have declared his intention six months prior to election, and voters must have one year's residence in the State, six months in County and town, and an "actual residence" in district or precinct. Except where otherwise stated, the above requirements apply to the previous residence of all voters. The State of Oregon no longer allows any one to vote until he or she is fully naturalized. The State of Michigan extends the franchise to aliens who declared their intention two years and six months prior to Nov. 8, 1894.

Law Schools.

L. E. D. F.—Please name a few of the leading law schools in this country.

There are 124 law schools in the United States. Most of the leading universities of the country have law departments. The limited space of the query column makes it impossible to name all the law schools in this country, and it is, of course, equally impossible for this department to choose a smaller number for specific recommendation.

Citizenship.

S. M.—Will you kindly advise me on the following question: A man commits a crime in a foreign country, then comes to this country and is naturalized as an American citizen, without being able to speak or read or write the English language. What would his status be in that case?

Persons convicted of certain crimes in their native country cannot be naturalized as citizens of the United States. There is also a penalty for false statements made in petitions for citizenship. All such questions should be referred direct to the Naturalization Bureau or to the Clerk of the District Court.

The Morris Plan.

READER.—Can you tell me of the plan whereby a person in moderate circumstances receives loans without resorting to loan sharks?

You doubtless refer to the "Morris Plan," which was organized in Norfolk, Va., in March, 1910. The New York Morris Plan Company began its operations on Dec. 31, 1914. Up to June 30, 1915, 2,444 loans had been made, aggregating $296,315, and averaging $121.24. A very large number of these loans are of a remedial sort. The object of the Morris Plan is two-fold: to lend money to persons of moderate means at reasonable rates of interest, and to provide a safe and sound investment for small funds. Loans are made on the basis of the character of the applicant and his indorsers, with due consideration for the earning capacity of each. The Morris Plan Company issues the following statement in answer to questions:

"The Morris Plan of industrial loans and investments has been in operation since March, 1910, and is today executing its mission in many American cities. It is a very simple one. The way it works is as follows:

"A man (or woman) needs, say, $50 to tide him over some urgent financial difficulty. Being unknown at the commercial banks, and having no securities he can borrow on, he has to rely on the generosity of a friend, trust himself to the tender mercies of a loan shark, or seek relief at the counter of a Morris Plan company. Here, if his application is granted, he pays a small charge toward the cost of investigation, and gives a promissory note signed by himself and two friends or co-makers, who are willing to vouch for his honesty and earning capacity.

"This note is discounted at the legal rate of interest, and for each $50 of his indebtedness the borrower agrees to pay $1 a week toward the purchase of a certificate of investment equaling the amount of his loan. At the end of fifty weeks he has paid for this certificate in full, and two weeks later he may cash it at the company's office and pay off his note, which is then due. He has not had to pawn his watch or mortgage his furniture, and instead of paying a ruinous rate of interest to a disreputable money-lender he has dealt with honest people who have treated him fairly and squarely.

"When his debt is paid he may, if he wishes, buy one or more of the company's certificates of investment, either on the installment plan or for cash, and these will be available as security for future loans, in which case no indorsements will be necessary. Many a man who begins as a borrower ends by becoming an investor in interest-bearing Morris Plan certificates, but one does not have to be a borrower in order to buy them."

Virginia Institutions of Learning.

The following has been received from Miss Mittie S. Hicks of Graham, Va.:

In the Sunday TIMES a reply was given to W. Boehnel in regard to the leading institutions of learning in the State of Virginia, in which some of the leading institutions in the State were omitted and others named which are not in the State at all, but in West Virginia. Below is a full list:

William and Mary College at Williamsburg is the oldest institution in the State and stands next to Harvard in age, being the second college founded in the United States.

The University of Virginia at Charlottesville was chartered in 1819, and opened in 1824 under the rectorship of Thomas Jefferson.

Other institutions for young men are: Washington and Lee University at Lexington; Virginia Military Institute, also at Lexington; Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg; Hampden-Sidney College at Hampden-Sidney, and Emory and Henry College at Emory.

One of the most noted educational institutions in the State is the Randolph-Macon System, which includes five schools, viz.: Randolph-Macon Academy (for boys) at Front Royal; Randolph-Macon Academy (for boys) at Bedford City; Randolph-Macon College (for young men) at Ashland; Randolph-Macon Institute (for girls) at Danville, and Randolph-Macon Woman's College at Lynchburg. The latter is the first woman's college in the South to be ranked with the Class A institutions.

Other institutions for young women are:

Sweet Briar College (also Class A institution) at Sweet Briar; Hollins College, Hollins; Mary Baldwin Seminary, Stanton; Virginia College, Roanoke; Woman's College, Richmond; Sullins College, Bristol; Virginia Intermont College, Bristol; Martha Washington College, Abingdon; Stonewall Jackson Institute, Abingdon, and four State Normal Schools, located at Farmville, Fredericksburg, East Radford, and Harrisburg.

The United States Navy.

J. L. W.—If man wishes to enlist in the navy, where can he go to learn the conditions? If he finds he has made a mistake can he give it up, or would he be a deserter? Is the penalty imprisonment? Can one learn what would be required before enlisting for a term of years? How long is there any of the brutal treatment of former years? Is there no way of leaving the service if one does not like it, except dishonorably deserting?

The terms of enlistment in the United States Navy is for four years, except for boys under eighteen, who enlist for minority, with the consent of parents or guardians. Minors between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one do not need the consent of parents or guardians, but must furnish either a birth certificate or a verified written statement from parent or guardian of their age. The Navy accepts for enlistment only men who may reasonably be expected to remain in the service, but full information as to requirements, duties, pay, opportunities for advancement, &c., may be obtained before applying for enlistment. Corporal punishment has been abolished in the United States Navy. Only American citizens of good character are accepted, and every applicant must pass the required physical examination, be able to read and write English, and take the oath of allegiance. No boy under seventeen can enlist except by special permission from the Navy Department. Inquiries may be made in writing of the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, Washington, but there is a special information office on West Twenty-third Street, New York City, where all questions may be asked in person.

Sunset Gun.

A. E. M.—Will you kindly tell me what the sunset gun is? What is the signification of it, and is there one in every fort in the United States?

Paragraph 210 of the Regulations of the United States Army reads: "At posts supplied with ordnance and with ammunition for the purpose a morning and evening gun will be fired daily at reveille and retreat." As the flag is run up at sunrise and down at sunset simultaneously with the firing of the gun, it is probable that a salute to the flag is intended.

Count Caprivi.

A. F. K.—Will you kindly give me the pedigree of Count Caprivi, the former Chancellor of Germany?

The complete descent of Count Caprivi would be too long for these columns. The family name is really Kopriva. The sons of Andreas Kopriva, Andreas and Johann Franz, were given in 1638 by Kaiser Ferdinand III. the surnames of von Reichsberg and Nessethal and made noble. The second brother, Johann Franz, was made in 1657, and in 1666 this was extended to his elder brother Andreas. In 1679 Andreas left a son, Karl Leopold, who died in the royal military service in 1706. With his son, Julius Leopold, (born in Silesia, 1695, and died 1768,) the family transferred their allegiance to the earldom of Wernigerode. The German name of "Grafschaft" is untranslatable, but means the dominions of the Count of Wernigerode. Julius Leopold was the first to use the new form of the name and call himself Caprivi. He became Chancellor of the earldom. Several of his sons entered the service of Prussia. His grandson, Julius Eduard Leopold von Caprivi, born in 1797 and died in 1865, was an important member of the upper house of Prussia. One of the sons of the Morris Plan is two-fold: to lend money to persons of moderate means at reasonable rates of interest, and to provide a safe and sound investment for small funds. Loans are made on the basis of the character of the applicant and his indorsers, with due consideration for the earning capacity of each. The Morris Plan Company issues the following statement in answer to questions: Chancellor, was made a Count in 1801.

Age of the Earth.

GEORGE R. GREENE.—What has been achieved by the combined research of our astronomers, geologists, and archaeologists as to the date of the creation of the world?

As long ago as 1860 John Phillips, the geologist, estimated that the time required for the deposition of the stratified rocks lay between 38,000,000 and 96,000,000 years. This was probably the only estimate prior to Kelvin's epoch-making paper of 1862. Since that time many estimates have been made, varying all the way from 17,000,000 years to 400,000,000 years. Kelvin was the first to discuss the age of the earth considered as a cooling body. In 1893 Clarence King introduced the important criterion of tidal stability and reached the conclusion that 24,000,000 represented the conditions. This result was adopted by Kelvin in 1897, and then he placed the limits as 20,000,000 and 40,000,000 years. Only Sir George Darwin has discussed the age from the geological and astronomical point of view. From his theory of the earth-moon system he derived an estimate of more than 56,000,000 years, which for a long time stood between groups of higher and lower figures, for only was the first to base estimates of the age of the earth, in 1899, on the sodium contained in the ocean. Adopting the hypothesis that the sodium content of the ocean is derived at a constant rate from that of the rocks, he arrived at an age of 80,000,000 or 90,000,000 years, and increased this by 10,000,000 in 1900. In 1909 Mr. Sollas made a searching inquiry into this subject and placed the age of the ocean at between 80,000,000 and 150,000,000 years.

Captain Joshua Slocum.

E. D. MOORE.—Can you give me any information regarding the sloop Spray after she returned from her voyage around the world in 1895-1898? I think she and the gallant Captain later on set sail for the West Indies and were never heard of again.

The disappearance of Captain Slocum and the Spray has not been found chronicled anywhere in year books or elsewhere.

Tweed and Croker.

J. C. MANNIX.—When did William M. Tweed "quit" as boss of Tammany Hall and when did Richard Croker's chiefship of that organization begin?

The Americana says that in 1870 Tweed, having gained ascendency in Tammany Hall, committed the organization to many extravagant expenditures and forced to retire and was driven out of the country. In 1900 Richard Croker ceased to take active interest in the organization, and resigned in 1892. In 1886 Tammany was governed by a committee consisting of Richard Croker, James Martin, Hugh J. Grant, and Thomas F. Gilroy. This government resulted in the absolute leadership of Croker.

Republics of America.

J. KLEIN.—How many independent republics are there on the American continent? Is Cuba a territory or a Federal possession of the United States? What is the difference between a territory and a Federal possession?

There are twenty-one republics in the Western Hemisphere. Their representatives met on Dec. 8, 1914, in Washington and solemnly pledged themselves against war. They are the United States, Mexico, the Central American States, comprising Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Panama; the republics of South America, comprising Colombia, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Chile, Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, and Brazil; the island republics of Cuba, Haiti, and Santo Domingo. Cuba is now an independent republic.

Territories are areas within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, but not included in that of any one or more States. Only two remain, Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands. Until 1910 there were also the two organized territories, Arizona and New Mexico; but they were admitted as States in that year. Previously there had been since 1787 large tracts of land too thinly populated to be divided up into States, so these parts were organized as territories, receiving a qualified form of self-government while under the ultimate control of Congress for purposes of legislation. When filled up they were allowed to organize as States, giving themselves Constitutions. The Territorial Government consisted of a Legislature of two houses elected by the people, with a Governor appointed by the President of the United States with the consent of the Senate and Judges appointed in the same way. They were not represented in Congress, but each sent a Delegate to the House of Representatives who could speak, but could not vote. Since the Spanish-American war, of the various transmarine dominions added to the United States none has not yet been formed into a State. Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands are classed as territories and Porto Rico and the Philippines are classed as insular possessions.

Mayor of New York.

C. J. D.—I am a stranger and had read that Mr. Mitchel was Mayor of your city. When I visited the City Hall I was told that Mr. McAneny was Mayor. Kindly settle this question.

Mr. McAneny was Acting Mayor of New York City during the absence of Mr. Mitchel at the Business Men's Camp of Instruction at Plattsburg, N. Y.

Italian Rules on Citizenship.

JAMES W. FRASER.—J. contends that a native-born Italian, having served his term in the Italian Army, married and emigrated to the United States, where he has become a citizen, and, having a son, is liable with his son to military service in Italy under Italian law, if he returned, say, eighteen years later to his original country. In other words, that Italian law does not recognize the citizenship of either in the United States. V. contends that neither is liable.

V. ANGELOTTI.—My father was a naturalized citizen of the United States, born in Italy. I was born in this country. Does the United States recognize my American citizenship?

The Italian Government has consented to permit children born in America of Italian parents, after the first naturalization papers have been taken out by the latter, to be considered among American citizens, even in Italy. This decision is very recent, as hitherto Italy has insisted that these children, when they returned to the country of their parents, must be subject to the European nations in which conscription prevails refuse to admit the right of young men to leave the country to avoid military service by becoming naturalized citizens of another country and then return to live at their former homes. Troubles of this kind arose in the Franco-German war of 1870, when the United States insisted successfully that the immigration treaty existing between the United States and the various German Kingdoms should apply to the new German Empire. No such treaty exists between Italy and America. The recent decision of the Italian Government upon this point, desired for years by the United States, constitutes perhaps the first step to a necessary permanent arrangement between the countries in relation to emigration.

Checkers.

B. B.—Please give me the name, author, and publisher of the best book on checkers, sometimes called draughts.

Some of the best known works on the subject are "The Game of Draughts," by Andrew Anderson, published in Edinburgh, 1910, by J. Grant; "Checkers," by A. H. Cady, the American Sports Publishing Company, 1906; in Spalding's Home Library, Volume I., No. 9; Ellsworth's "Checker Book," by W. M. Call, published by H. I. Cain & Son in New York in 1899; "Draughts Praxis," by Frank Dunne, published by G. Routledge & Sons in London in 1912. The last is recommended by the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Shipping Bill.

H. E. G.—Will you give the substance of the Shipping bill, which it is claimed has put the Pacific Mail Company out of business? When was it passed, and what were the reasons given for passing it? What are the chief reasons why we cannot support a merchant marine? Is the cost of American labor or the American sailor the chief reason?

The La Follette Seaman's bill was passed March 4, 1915, to go into effect in November, 1915. The reasons for passing the bill were discussed in the Query Department Sept. 5. The objects of the bill were to promote safety at sea, to give better conditions of living to sailors so that a better class of men will seek the sea, and to abolish the difference in the favor of foreign vessels in the wage cost of operation when competing with domestic vessels. The bill involved the abrogation of treaties with about twenty foreign powers. Some of the provisions regarding life-saving equipment and working conditions for the crew will not apply, however, to British, French, German, Japanese, Norwegian, Danish, Dutch, Canadian, New South Wales, and New Zealand, because Section 4,400 of the Revised Statutes provides that nations whose steamboat inspection laws approximate those of the United States are not subject to the latter's. There are twenty sections of the bill, but the last three provide dates for the provisions to become effective.

Objections have been made to several sections by the chief maritime powers, and to others by the owners of American ships. Generally speaking, the objectionable sections are based upon provisions which permit foreign sailors in American ports to claim one-half their wages at pleasure, that which prohibits the advance of wages to sailors, that which requires a majority of the crew to understand the language of the officers, that prescribing the proportion of veteran sailors to each life boat, and that exempting foreign sailors from arrest for desertion. All of these provisions are said to violate existing treaties. Those particularly objectionable to American interests are that requiring 75 per cent. of the crew to speak the language of the officers, and that referring to the employment of able seamen. The first was said to be designed to prevent the employment of Chinese and Japanese crews who receive from $8 to $15 per month as compared with the white sailors, who receive from $50 to $55; but the result is said to be the definite transfer of the business to Japan. The latter is objected to because there are not enough able seamen of experience to man the ships. The Directors of the Maritime Association, the membership of which numbers over 900 of the most prominent representatives of foreign and domestic shipping lines serving the port of New York, want the law repealed. It is said to be a very delicate task to abrogate only the provisions conflicting with the Seaman's act in the foreign treaties. It is almost unknown to diplomacy to abrogate a treaty only in part. It is said to be these provisions which have caused our close commercial and friendly relations with foreign nations, and enabled the United States to increase its foreign commerce and in many cases prevented friction in doing so. The result of the abrogation may be that foreign lines will refuse to come to our ports. This will reduce the number of ships and result in increased rates which will hurt the farmer and producer seeking foreign markets. What the ship owners object to, is the clauses which will drive the few remaining American ships off the ocean, and turn the Pacific over to the control of the Japanese subsidized steamers, and the great lakes to the Canadian interests. The regulations of the bill are effective Nov. 4, 1915, for American and March 4, 1916, for foreign ships.

It is the question of cost and not any deficiency on the part of the American sailor which makes its difficult for us to support a merchant marine. This subject has been recently discussed at length in this column.

Leap Year.

CURIOUS.—To settle a dispute will you kindly reply to the following: Does February ever have more than twenty-eight days except in leap year, or every fourth year? If so, when did the last occur, how often, and why is is necessary to add a day?

February never has more than twenty-eight days except in leap year, when it has twenty-nine. The calendar was reformed in 1582 by the monk Clavius at the instigation of Pope Gregory XIII. in order to rectify defects in the Julian calendar, which called the year 365¼ days long, and inserted an extra day every four years to account for the quarter days. But the solar year is really eleven minutes fourteen seconds and has incorporated young men in the army. Since the recent decision the work of liberating them from the ranks has been proceeding rapidly. This is an extremely complicated question, turning upon the fact of a double nationality. The majority of the European nations in which conscription prevails refuse to admit the right of young men to leave the country to avoid military service by becoming naturalized citizens of another country and then return to live at their former homes. Troubles of this kind arose in the Franco-German war of 1870, when the United States insisted successfully that the immigration treaty existing between the United States and the various German Kingdoms should apply to the new German Empire. QUERIES FROM TIMES READERS AND ANSWERS TO THEM

The Invention of Photography.

J. J. C.—Will you please tell me how long ago photography was invented, and by whom? I should like to know the exact date.

The earliest experiments in the direction of photography were made by Wedgwood and Davy, but the first photograph was actually produced in a camera made by Daguerre and a partner about 1839. In 1840 the first photographic portrait was made by Professor John W. Draper, an American. Progress was made in the work of Fox Talbot, 1841, and Scott Archer, 1851, with the glass plate. The gelatine-bromide dry plate was invented in 1871 by Maddox, and greatly improved by Bennett in 1878. As in many other inventions, it is practically impossible to lay one's finger on one man and one date for the specific "invention" of photography; it has been so largely a process of experiment and improvement.

National Political Conventions.

REPUBLICAN.—Will you kindly tell me when, where, and for how long a session the last convention of the Republican Party was held? If possible will you tell me how long these conventions usually last?

The last National Convention of the Republican Party was held in Chicago, June 18-22, 1912. There is no general rule for the duration of these conventions, but the entire amount of time covered, including the gathering together of the delegates and recesses in the convention, is seldom more than eight or ten days.

Languages in South America.

B. J. O'BRIEN.—I should like to know the languages chiefly spoken in the business sections of South America.

The business language of the South American countries is Spanish, except in Brazil, where Portuguese is spoken. There are many English and German firms in the South American cities, and it is always possible to find places where English is freely spoken. But a knowledge of Spanish is necessary for business dealings with the people of the country. Even in New York City, South American firms and agencies employ those who speak Spanish in carrying on their business with the southern continent.

The British Election.

J. P. L.—Please state how many voters registered in Great Britain at the time of the last Parliamentary election, and also how many members were elected to Parliament?

The number of voters by the count of 1910 was 8,058,025, about one-sixth of the country's population. The vote polled at the election of 1910 was, however, only 6,651,214. The entire House of Commons is elected at a British general election; the number of members of Parliament chosen in 1910 was, therefore, 670. A general election would normally be held this year, but has been postponed on account of the war.

The "Honorable."

L. THOMAS.—Could you tell me what gives a man the right to the title of "Honorable"? Is this title proper merely during tenure of office, or during a lifetime? Is the Controller of the Currency, the Secretary of State, or other such appointed officer entitled to such a title?

The title of "Honorable" is used loosely in the United States, being given by courtesy to almost any one who holds or who has held an important public office. The title is especially bestowed upon members of Congress, Governors, State Senators, Judges of the higher courts, and high Federal officials. In Great Britain the title of "Honorable" is borne by the House of Commons as a body, by the members separately when referred to in debate, by Judges of the High Court of Justice when not peers, and by all the children of dukes, marquises, earls, (except the oldest son, who bears the courtesy title of Lord,) viscounts, and barons.

The Duty on Blankets.

E. VERVIER.—Will you kindly tell me if there is a duty on blankets imported from Scotland?

There is a duty on the importation of blankets and flannels into this country. The duty on blankets under the tariff of 1913 is 25 per cent. to 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Florida Temperatures.

B. F. C.—As you have given an inquirer the temperatures for several months of the year at Miami, Fla., would it be asking too much for you to give the mean monthly temperatures for each month of the year for Key West and Tampa?

The mean temperatures, taken from records for thirty-three years back, are as follows: Tampa—January, 57.4; February, 60.9; March, 65.8; April 70.6; May, 75.5; June, 78.7; July, 80; August, 80; September, 78.3; October, 72.6; November, 65.4; December, 59.6; annual mean temperature, 70.4. Key West—January, 68.8; February, 70; March, 72.8; April, 75.8; May, 79; June, 82.2; July, 83.7; August, 83.3; September, 82.5; October, 78.7; November, 74.3; December, 70.1; annual mean temperature, 78.8. The mean maximum temperatures for Tampa are taken from a record of twenty-three years, and are as follows: January, 68.7; February, 70.3; March, 76.6; April, 80.2; May, 83.7; June, 88.6; July, 89.1; August, 89.2; September, 88; October, 82; November 75.8; December, 69.9; annual mean maximum, 80.3. The record of mean maximum temperatures for Key West goes back forty-two years, and is as follows: January, 74.2; February, 75.4; March, 77.6; April, 80.4; May, 84; June, 87; July, 88.7; August, 88.6; September, 87.4; October, 82.8; November, 78.3; December, 74.3; annual mean maximum, 81.6. The mean minimum temperatures are as follows: Tampa (record for twenty-three years)—January, 50.7; February, 52.4; March, 58; April, 61.4; May, 67.3; June, 71.5; July, 73.2; August 73.5; September, 71.9; October, 65.5; November, 57.6; December, 52; annual mean minimum, 62. Key West (record for forty-two years)—January, 64.8; February, 66.2; March, 68.9; April, 71.1; May, 74.6; June, 77.8; July, 78.6; August, 78.4; September, 77.3; October, 74.6; November, 70.4; December, 66.9; annual mean minimum, 72.4. Maximum and minimum temperatures will be mailed if desired.

A Regents' Certificate.

J. D.—For what cause can the Regents revoke a certified public accountant's certificate, and has a certificate ever been revoked?

A Regents' certificate to a public accountant can be revoked "for sufficient cause" after written notice to the holder and a hearing. The ruling only states that the certificate can be revoked for "sufficient cause"; this cause is generally speaking, unbecoming conduct or incompetence, but all specific questions as to the history and procedure of such cases should be asked of the Board of Regents direct.

Naturalization.

F. D. S.—Will you kindly solve the following problem in your Sunday column: A is 30 years old, and came here from England with his father when less than three years of age; his father declared his intention of becoming a citizen, but never completed the process of naturalization. Does A have to take out first papers and make a declaration of intention? Are any witnesses required when making a declaration of intention? Can a resident of Brooklyn be naturalized in the State or Federal Courts of New York County? Are there any night sessions in Brooklyn for naturalization, and if so where?

E. A. B.—A Canadian came to the United States and brought a boy one year old. The man was naturalised as an American citizen; the boy grew to manhood in the United States. He is of age now and has no papers. Is he an American through his father's being naturalized?

The minor children of a naturalized citizen take his citizenship. If a man dies after taking out his declaration of intention his widow and minor children are exempt from the necessity of making a declaration of intention. But any children who have attained their majority must make declaration of intention. No witnesses are required for the declaration of intention. A resident of Brooklyn can only be naturalized in the United States District Court for the Eastern District, Brooklyn, or the County Court in the Hall of Records, Brooklyn. There are no night sessions for naturalization in Brooklyn.

The Great Eastern.

READER.—When was the Great Eastern taken out of commission? When was it broken up? To what use, if any, was it put after its last voyage? How old is "Phoebe Snow" of the Lackawanna Railroad?

The Great Eastern was purchased by the British Government for a coal transport; in 1886 she was converted into an exhibition and concert hall, and in 1888 was sold at auction and broken up for old iron. "Phoebe Snow" has been in existence about twelve years.

Peter the Great.

C. H.—I have heard that at the end of the Thirty Years' War Peter the Great issued an edict permitting all soldiers to take as many as ten wives. Can you tell me if this is true, and give me additional information about it?

Peter the Great reigned in Russia from 1672 to 1725. The Thirty Years' War took place in Germany between 1618 and 1648.

The Feminist Movement.

B. C. M.—Kindly give me some facts concerning the feminist movement. When and where did it originate? Who have been some of its most noted leaders? What may it be said to include? I do not want arguments, but historical or literary points.

The word "feminism" originated in France about the year 1890, and for the last twenty years it has been used more and more as an English word to describe generally the ideas, principles, and motives which lie at the root of the modern "woman movement." The movement itself is, of course, of far less recent growth. As a modern movement it traces its origin to the ideas that gave birth to modern democracy and brought about the French Revolution. Probably the first historic trace, however, of what we now know as the feminist idea is found in Plato's "Republic," where the principle of complete social and political equality for the sexes is advanced; Plato declared that there was no qualitative difference between the sexes, and that in the ideal state they should co-operate in all their activities.

At the time of the Renaissance also there were certain anticipations of modern feminism; women were carefully educated, appeared in public as artists, poets, and orators, and—although in a purely aristocratic and individualistic way—shared in the culture, scholarliness and broadening life of the time. In the fifteenth century a French poetess, Christine de Pisan, wrote a book called the "Cité des Dames," in which she made a plea for the emancipation of women; somewhat later Mlle. de Gournay, Montaigne's foster daughter, declared the equality of the sexes; Marguerite de Valois, Queen of Henry IV., made an effort to prove woman the superior sex; in 1665 Jacquette Guillaume published "Les Dames Illustres," with the same object. In Germany there was a pronounced movement in the seventeenth century for the higher education of women; but this, like the culture of the Renaissance, was purely individualistic and aristocratic. In England a more truly modern discussion began with Mary Astell's publication, in 1694, of "A Serious Proposal to the Ladies, by a Lover of Their Sex," in 1909 "An Essay in Defense of the Female Sex," and in 1700 "Some Reflections Upon Marriage." Greeted with general ridicule and contempt, she found a strong supporter in Daniel Defoe. A greater English precursor of feminism was Mary Wollstonecraft, whose "Vindication of the Rights of Women" applied the stirring French philosophy of democracy to woman as well as to man. But the prophet of the modern English feminist movement was John Stuart Mill, whose "Subjection of Women" (1867) is quoted as a classic of the woman's movement.

In France the theories of the "Utopian Socialists," much in vogue before the economic day of Marx and Engels, produced a new feminism, extremely radical, and often mistakenly confused with the ideal feminism in general. But the gradual change in the economic basis of society from the end of the eighteenth on through the nineteenth and into the present century, has naturally done more than anything else for the growth of a different attitude in regard to woman's position in society, industry, and the State. To quote the "New International Encyclopedia," "The evils of woman and child labor have occupied the attention of economists and reformers with ever-increasing force for the last century, and have been one of the most serious problems which the woman movement has had to face." The article continues:

"The most important scientific contribution to feminism during the last century has been the growth of knowledge with regard to the position of woman in the past and its causes. Beginning with purely historical works, such as those of Segur (1803,) Laboulaye (1843,) and Legouvé (1848,) the research on this question extended into the field of anthropology, and a number of important works on the position of woman and the nature of marriage in primitive society have introduced the evolutionary point of view into discussions of the woman question. The institution of marriage and of the family, and the position and sphere of woman appeared in the light of science to have evolved gradually to their present state, and to have differed greatly according to the special society in which they were found.

"This dynamic standpoint has revolutionized discussion upon feminism. In the field, too, of a realistic understanding of sex great advance has been made. The work of Forel, Krafft-Ebing, and others on the Continent, and of Havelock Ellis in England, are examples of this movement." The sociological and economic side of woman's right and duty to work have been emphasized by such writers as Olive Schreiner and Charlotte Perkins Gilman.

Briefly, the feminist movement is a movement for the complete emancipation of woman, political, economic, social, and personal, and with it, as a natural corollary, the improvement of conditions under which women live and work—whether in the home, the factory, or the professions—and the fullest opportunity of complete personal development, whether this be considered from the viewpoint of the individual, the unit in society, or the mother of children. It is impossible to define any uniform program for the feminist movement. It includes education, the entrance of women into the professions on equal terms with men; the betterment of industrial conditions, such improvement in the accepted attitude toward marriage, laws having to do with marriage, property, and legal rights, as will completely do away with the subordinate position of women in marriage; equality before the law, and equal suffrage are the most general demands at present; more radical proposals involve salaries for wives, widows' pensions, the State endowment of motherhood, and the State responsibility for the rearing of children, and the emancipation from domestic work of the highly trained woman. Lastly, feminist thought has developed æsthetic and moral ideals of its own." It includes such things as dress reform, outdoor life, fresh air and exercise, and it aims at the development of a more healthy type of woman who will also have better ethical principles, a stronger feeling of social responsibility, and a higher ideal of love and maternal duty."

In the United States the agitation for woman suffrage is the most conspicuous phase of the feminist movement at present. But it must be remembered that woman suffrage is only a part of the feminist movement. In some countries it is not emphasized.

The feminist movement is active in England, France, Germany, the Scandinavian countries, and, in fact, in practically all countries, including Turkey, India, China, and Japan.

It is impossible to trace the development of feminism without tracing at the same time the development of feminist thought and belief. And the limited space of the Query Column forbids a detailed history of the workers, the books, the laws that have been part of the feminist movement. But if any further specific details are desired they will be given in answer to more specific questions.

A War Correspondent.

A. H.—Please give me some information about Frederick McCormick, the war correspondent, who he is, where he lives in this country, and where he is now.

Frederick McCormick was born in Brookfield, Mo., Feb. 21, 1870, the son of Isaac Newton and Sarah Elizabeth Bryce. McCormick was for a time editor of the Woman's Home Companion for four years, served as special correspondent for Harper's Weekly and London Graphic in the Boxer uprising, and for New York and European newspapers and syndicates in Pekin, 1900-01; with the Russian Army in Manchuria for twenty-three months, in Korea in 1905, Peking 1907-10, Chinese revolutionary rebellion 1911-12, and in 1912-13 organized the Asiatic Institute for the consideration of certain Far Eastern questions. He is the author of "The Tragedy of Russia in Pacific Asia," "China's Monuments," "The Flowery Republic." He lives in New York City. The Query Department cannot supply either his permanent or present address, as it does not publish addresses.

Forestry.

S. S. K.—I am perplexed about the choice of studies in college, and a future profession, and should be much obliged if you would tell me something about forestry; it is a new study in this country, and I should like to have some information about it, and the chances for work in that profession, as well as what foresters are paid.

THE TIMES cannot offer personal advice in its Query Column, or supply information of purely personal interest. The following general facts about forestry, its progress in recent years in this country, and especially the work being done by the United States Government, will, no doubt, however, give you the groundwork of facts desired:

The Forest Service, one of the bureaus of the United States Department of Agriculture, has charge of the administration and protection of the national forests, the dissemination of information regarding forests and forestry, and the carrying on of investigations to promote the practice of forestry. The work of the Service has grown of recent years. It was first undertaken in a small way in 1876, when Dr. Franklin B. Hough was made a special forest agent in the Department of Agriculture; in 1881 a special division was created in that department, which, in 1901, became the Bureau of Forestry. In 1905 the care of the national forests was given to this bureau, and it became known as the Forest Service.

It is the aim of the Forest Service to open these national forests to the widest use consistent with their proper protection. During the years 1913 and 1914 the following sums were expended for the protection and care of the forests: 1913.—Administration and protection, total, $4,053,560.48; per acre, $0.0249; permanent improvements, total, $470,825.50, per acre, $0.0025. 1914.—Administration and protection, total, $4,783,422.48; per acre, $0.0236; permanent improvements, total, $617,086.35; per acre, $0.0030. The total regular appropriation for salaries, general expenses, and improvements for the fiscal year 1915 is $5,348,256, with a further provision of $100,000 for fire-fighting in case of extraordinary emergency. The value of public property administered by the National Forests in force is estimated at more than $2,000,000,000. The present area is 185,821,202 acres with an additional 190,755 acres acquired by purchase in the White Mountains and Southern Appalachian regions for national forest purposes. In the fiscal year 1914, 746,981,600 board feet of lumber were cut from the national forests.

The Forest Service is organised under a Forester and Associate Forester, and is divided into the branches of operation, lands, silviculture, products, and grazing; there is also a products laboratory, and a branch of acquisition of lands under the Weeks law. There are 163 national forests, grouped into seven districts, with a District Forester in charge of each. The Forest Service force numbers 3,953 persons, 3,352 being engaged in active work on the national forests. Of the forest workers, 2,397 are engaged in protective work, as follows: Forest rangers, 397; assistant forest rangers, 856; forest guards, 1,143, and one game warden. But a comparison with the protective force employed in German forests leaves it plain that the force of the United States is really very small; we have about one man for each 80,000 acres; Prussia has one man for each 1,700 acres, and Baden one man for every 750 acres. Among the various kinds of work done by the Forest Service are the following: The branch of silviculture not only directs the management of the national forests in the cutting and planting of timber, but cooperates with private forest owners who wish to practice forestry on their own lands, and carries on investigations of the problems of silviculture in the United States; there are eight thoroughly equipped forest experiment stations for these investigations; the branch of grazing allots grazing privileges and supervises grazing, but also works to develop the forage-producing capacity of the national forests by the restoration of depleted areas; the branch of products carries on investigations aimed at the more complete utilization of the forest products, including timber.

The movement for national forestry, which is of recent growth, and increasing, has been followed by a widespread upspringing of State interest in the preservation and improvement of State forests, and a marked development of State forest activities. New York and Pennsylvania, to be sure, were the pioneers in the field before the National Government had awakened general interest, but the development of forestry as a State industry is largely a growth of the last decade. Ten or twelve years ago New York and Pennsylvania were almost the only States that took any interest in forestry; today thirty States have forest departments, twenty-one employ professionally trained foresters, and practically every State in the Union is interested in forest service work. There is an American Forestry Association, with headquarters in Washington, the objects of which are "the promotion of a businesslike and conservative use and treatment of the forest resources of this country; the advancement of legislation tending to this end, both by the States and the Congress of the United States; the inauguration of forest administration by the Federal Government and by the States, and the extension of sound forestry by all proper methods; the diffusion of knowledge regarding the conservation, management, and renewal of forests, proper utilisation of their products, methods of reforestation of waste lands, and planting of trees." The association publishes a monthly magazine, American Forestry, and a quarterly.

St. Patrick's Cathedral.

R. L. S.—Will you kindly advise me through your question bureau if the Catholic Cathedral is built on city property? What sum is paid yearly for its lease? Also did the Catholic Church purchase the property from the city? If so, when and what price was paid? Any information about the property will be appreciated.

The ground is the property of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York. The site was part of the common lands and was sold as Block 62, official map of 1796. The sale was made in 1799 to Elias Lilburn for four hundred and five (405) pounds and a quit rent of four bushels of wheat, payable May 1 every year. In 1810 Lilburn sold it to Francis Thompson and Thomas Cadle, who sold it to Andrew Morris and Cornelius Heeney, who gave a mortgage to the Eagle Fire Insurance Company. In 1821 it was sold to D. Doyle under the mortgage. In 1828 the mortgage was foreclosed and at the Sheriff's sale it was purchased by Francis Cooper, who conveyed it to the Trustees of St. Peter's and St. Patrick's Churches under joint title. The Trustees of St. Patrick's bought the half title for $5,550. The deed is recorded in Liber 620, Conveyances, p. 364.

The Irish in America.

Replying to an Irishman's request for information as to a society in this city for the purpose of uniting the Irish-Americans and promoting their general advancement in this country, James F. O'Kelly writes as follows:

An association exclusively devoted to the uniting of all Irish people and their advancement in general in this country has just been established, and has within its ranks and on its rolls many hundreds of our best Irishmen, who, though they may differ on Irish and European politics, are one in the necessity of a real united Irish race in this country. The association meets at the Irish-American Athletic Club, where all information can be had relating thereto. Most all Irish societies in the city are enrolled with all their members as auxiliaries, and no doubt the new association will in future be in a position to represent the entire Irish and Irish-American element in this city.

The Four Great Revolutions.

E. A.—Will you please explain what are the "four great revolutions"?

The four great revolutions of modern times are the English Revolution of 1688, which finally put an end to Stuart power in England; the great French Revolution of 1789; the French Revolution of July, 1830, which was followed by several revolutionary outbreaks in other parts of Europe; and the almost general revolutionary outburst of 1848. The July Revolution in France in 1830 was followed by attempts which were unsuccessful in Germany and Italy, but in Belgium the present kingdom of the Belgians was established, and in 1832 the passage of the English Reform Bill was directly attributed to events and processes of thought set in motion at that time. The Revolutions of 1848 resulted in France in the fall of the bourgeois monarchy, and brought about a political upheaval in Europe from many causes from Ireland to the Danube.

Quebec.

W. B.—Will you kindly tell me whether Quebec, Canada, is a fortified city?

The fortifications of Quebec are obsolete as fortifications, but remain as picturesque additions to the beauty and interest of "The Gibraltar of America." The fortifications standing consist of walls and a citadel built in 1823-1832 at a cost of over seven million pounds. Between 1865 and 1871 three forts were built on the Levis side of the river, but were not armed or manned. The citadel occupies more than forty acres. No trace of the old French fortifications remains.

The Times Building.

P. T. GUARENTE.—Is there a barber shop on the ground floor of The Times Building? If not, was there ever one there?

There is a barber shop on the ground floor of The Times Building now.

The Smithsonian Institution.

JOHN R. CASE.—Can you furnish me through your columns with the name of the founder, also the purpose of, the Smithsonian Institution?

The Smithsonian Institution "for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men" was established by statute in 1846. It was founded by the bequest of James Smithson, who in 1826 left his fortune to the United States to be used for the purpose quoted above. The institution aids investigators with grants for research and exploration, supplies of books, apparatus and laboratory accommodation, and in other ways. It occasionally provides lectures, which are published. It has initiated numerous scientific projects of national importance, some of which have been turned over to the Government and have resulted in the establishment of separate Government bureaus. It acts as adviser to the Government in matters of scientific importance, co-operates with national scientific bodies, issues three regular series of publications (annual reports, "contributions to knowledge," and "miscellaneous collections,") which are distributed gratis to libraries, maintains a large scientific library of its own, and has administrative charge of several branches which have grown out of its scientific activities.

Cockloft Hall.

S. S. D.—Can you tell me whether the Cockloft Hall of Irving and Paulding's "Salmagundi" is still standing, and if so just where it is located? It was the old Kamble mansion on the Passaic River, somewhere near Newark. I should also like to find an authentic picture of the place.

Cockloft Hall, remodelled, now stands at 208 Mount Pleasant Avenue, Newark. Further information about the building and its history may be found in "Historical Houses of New Jersey," by W. Jay Mills, Pages 101-107, and in "Literary Rambles at Home and Abroad," by Theodore F. Wolfe, Pages 42, 55, and 58.

Commission Government.

W. W. N.—Kindly inform me what "Plan G" of a commission form of Government, to be adopted by Newburg, N. Y., in 1916, implies? How does it differ from the regulation style of city control?

The plan adopted by the city of Newburg at a special election recently was not a commission form of government in any sense, and has only one characteristic in common with the commission form of government, namely, the short ballot. Plan C provides for a legislative body consisting of a Mayor and four Councilmen, all elected from the city at large. The Mayor has not the power of veto, but has a vote on all matters going before the council. He differs from the other Councilmen only in being the presiding officer of the council, and in the least, renounced his adherence to Judaism. At least one of his works testifies to this statement. As to his sons, both Benjamin and Ralph were born in Judaism, and were named in accordance with the rites of the Abrahamic Covenant. But Benjamin early formed the acquaintance of the English poet, Samuel Rogers, and through the latter's instrumentality was admitted into the Church of England, though he, too, constantly asserted his Jewish lineage, and the pride he felt when, in the language, he answered Daniel O'Connell, "My ancestors were priests in the Temple," not to mention declarations time and again in various of his novels.

"Bulgarian Culture."

MRS. E. V. H.—Could you tell me what "Bulgarian culture" is?

Bulgarian culture is a name sometimes given to the sour-milk bacillus and the sour-milk treatment used by Metchnikoff. He introduced sour-milk treatment for intestinal auto-intoxication, on the supposition that the lactic-acid bacillus displaced many of the pathogenic bacteria. He found the Bulgarian bacillus most potent.

The Painter Henner.

W. F. A.—Will you kindly tell me if Henner, the well-known painter, was English, and if the name is pronounced as if he were French?

Jean Jacques Henner was born in Alsace in 1829. He was educated at the Beaux Arts in Paris. In 1889 he succeeded Cabanel at the Institut de France. His name is pronounced in the French fashion.

The Polo Grounds.

EDWARD COTTER.—Will you please tell me the seating capacity of the New York Polo Grounds?

The seating capacity of the Polo Grounds is about 38,000.

The Titanic Band.

NETTO.—Will you please tell me whether the band of the Titanic was playing "Nearer, My God, to Thee" or "Autumn Leaves" as the ship went down?

The band of the Titanic was playing "Autumn" during most of the time when the passengers were being aroused and the boats were being lowered. Several survivors have spoken of the strains of that air as being the last they heard of the ship. During the last few minutes, however, as the boat was finally settling, and as long as possible while she actually sank, the band played "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

The Constitutional Convention.

F. S.—Please give me in your Sunday Query Column the total cost of the Constitutional Convention, as follows: The expenses incurred for the vote last Spring, the cost of the Summer session, the expenses to be incurred by the Fall vote.

It is impossible even to make a satisfactory estimate on the figures you ask. The expenses of the elections, &c., have not yet been computed and made public, and the expense of the election to come cannot be guessed at in any reliable way. There were one hundred and fifty delegates to the Constitutional Convention, and each delegate was paid a salary of $1,500. But no adequate information on the total cost of the new Constitution is available.

Taxation in Germany.

A READER.—Will you please tell me something of the system and rate of taxation in Germany? A skilled mechanic here says his taxes are larger than they would be in Germany. What is the cost of a marriage license in Germany? I have read that it costs $30 to be married, and that was given to account for the large percentage of illegitimate children in Germany. Is this percentage greater there than in other civilized countries?

It is impossible to answer questions of German taxation in any adequate detail because different systems and rates prevail in the twenty-six different States of the Empire. The Imperial Government of Germany cannot levy any taxes, except customs and excise duties (beer, tobacco, liquors, salt, and sugar). The several States make contributions, of varying amounts and proportions, to the Imperial Treasury. Prussia is assessed more than 70 per cent. of the entire Federal contribution. The budget in 1913 was $879,650,000, and of this the amount contributed by taxation by the Governments of the various provinces was $62,196,560. More than half the entire Imperial expenditure goes to the support of the army and navy. Naturally the burden of military taxation has been increasing for years past.

During the past twenty years the population of the German Empire has increased by 30 per cent. and its expenditure by 230 per cent. Prussia had, according to counts made some time before the outbreak of war, a total indebtedness of about $60 a person, Bavaria about $80 a person, and Hesse about $90 a person. It has been the policy of the Empire from the beginning to depend largely upon indirect taxation for the imperial revenue—customs duties, stamp duties, &c.—and keep direct taxes as low as possible. In "The Evolution of Modern Germany," written, before the outbreak of war, by William Harbutt Dawson, an English authority on such questions, the following general statements are made: "The question whether Germany under modern conditions is a land of high or low taxation is evidently one which does not admit of a summary answer. A well-known German statistician, Dr. F. Zahn, recently estimated the amount raised in direct taxation per head of the population at eight shillings twopence, and that raised in indirect taxation one pound six shillings sixpence, and in view of these figures he contended that Germans were not so highly taxed as either Frenchmen or Englishmen.

"Obviously, however, no comparison of the kind can profitably be made which omits to take into account the relation of taxation to income. Moreover, comparisons between the United Kingdom and Germany is invalidated owing to the fact that a large part of the revenues of the German Empire is drawn from taxes upon corn and other foodstuffs which have no place in the British fiscal system, and it is of the nature of such taxes that they entail upon the community a charge far larger than that represented by the revenue actually yielded to the Treasury." For various reasons general comparisons between Germany and the United States cannot be made profitably or satisfactorily. In the same way—owing to the different rates and systems existing—it is practically impossible to estimate adequately the cost of marriage generally obtaining in the German Empire. The general average of illegitimate births in the German Empire is about one-eleventh of the annual number of births, but percentages in the different States vary greatly. There are more illegitimate births in Bavaria than in any other German State, the latest available record giving the percentage as 15; Berlin has 14 per cent. of illegitimate births; Saxony, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and Saxe-Meiningen each over 10 per cent. The lowest percentage of illegitimate births is in Westphalia, 2.6 per cent., and in the Rhine Provinces, 3.9 per cent.

The Calendar.

Regarding the computation of the calendar to determine the day of the week upon which a given date fell or will fall, Delaplaine Wilson writes as follows:

In the Query Department of Aug. 29 "H. G." asked for a rule to find the day of the week on which any date fell or will fall, but no rule was given. The following is the rule to determine the question: To the two right hand figures of the given year add the one-fourth part of these figures, omitting fractions, if any; then add the day of the month; then add the ratio of the month, then add the ratio of the century. Divide the sum by 7. If, after the division there is a remainder of 1, it indicates Sunday, the first day of the week; a remainder of 2 indicates Monday, the second day of the week; a remainder of 3 indicates Tuesday; a remainder of 4 indicates Wednesday; a remainder of 5 indicates Thursday; a remainder of 6 indicates Friday; if there be no remainder it indicates Saturday.

The monthly ratios referred to are as follows:

January, 3.	February, 6.	March, 6.
April, 2.	May, 4.	June, 0.
July, 2.	August, 5.	September, 1.
October, 3.	November, 6.	December, 1.

The centurial ratios referred to are as follows:

For the years 1 to 99.	2.	1800,	2.	1900,	0.	2600,	2.
600,	3.	1200,	4.	1900,	0.	3200,	3.

To find the day of the week on which June 4, 1859, fell, therefore to 99 add the one-fourth part of the year, omitting fractions,	24

then add the day of the month,	14
then add the ratio of June,	4
then add the centurial ratio (1800)	0

American Tennis Players.

J. G. K., Jr.—Will you please tell me what the official ratings are of the first twenty tennis players in this country for the last five years?

Records and ratings of the first twenty players are not available, as the official lists are made up and the counts published only of the first ten. The ratings of these for the last five years are as follows:

1910.—First, W. A. Larned; second, T. C. Bundy; third, R. D. Wright; fourth, M. E. McLaughlin; fifth, H. H. Long; sixth, N. W. Niles; seventh, G. F. Touchard; eighth, T. R. Pell; ninth, F. C. Colston; tenth, C. R. Gardner.

1911 (in order of official rating).—W. A. Larned, M. E. McLaughlin, T. C. Bundy, G. F. Touchard, M. H. Long, N. W. Niles, T. R. Pell, R. D. Little, Karl H. Behr, W. M. Hall.

1912 (in order of official rating).—M. E. McLaughlin, R. N. Williams, 2d, Wallace J. Johnson, W. J. Clothier, N. W. Niles, T. C. Bundy, Karl Behr, R. D. Little, C. R. Gardner, G. F. Touchard.

The complete and official lists for this year have not yet been given out. Wallace J. Johnston stands first, however, with R. Norris Williams, 2d, second, Karl Behr third, and M. E. McLaughlin fourth.

The Population of Rome.

M. C. L.—Will you kindly give me some information as to the following: In a conversation I was told that ex-Mayor Nathan of Rome, a Jew, being for so many years re-elected Mayor of Rome, proves that the home of the Catholic Church lacks a large number of Catholics. Is this true? Will you please give me the population of Rome and the number of Catholics in the population?

The estimated general population of Rome in 1914 was 576,485. The Catholic population for that year was, in rough figures, 560,000. The official population of Rome by the latest available census count, that of 1911, was 542,123. The Catholic population of Italy by the latest official census is approximately given as 32,400,000, the non-Catholic population as about 190,000.

Senators and Congressmen.

W. J. E.—Can you give me from your records a list of the present United States Senators and Congressmen?

The United States House of Representatives number 435 members, so that the list of names is of course too long for publication in the limited space of the Query Column. Questions as to the names of the Members of Congress from any particular State will of course be answered. Politically, the House contains 232 Democrats, 194 Republicans, seven Progressives, one Independent, and one Socialist.

The list of United States Senators is as follows: Alabama—John H. Bankhead, Oscar W. Underwood; Arizona—Henry F. Ashurst, Marcus A. Smith; Arkansas—Joe T. Robinson, James F. Clarke; California—John D. Works, James D. Phelan; Colorado—John F. Shafroth, Charles S. Thomas; Connecticut—George P. McLean, Frank B. Brandegee; Delaware—Henry A. du Pont, Willard Saulsbury; Florida—Nathan P. Bryan, Duncan U. Fletcher; Georgia—Thomas D. Hardwick, Hoke Smith; Idaho—William E. Borah, James H. Italian and English.

MRS. M. de ADAMO.—I should be much obliged if you would tell me which is considered the more difficult language to learn, Italian or English? Which language presents greater difficulty to a person who does not know either one?

It is very hard to give such a comparison as the one asked for. The most difficult feature of Italian, to one who is learning the language, is its verbs. Otherwise it is considered a comparatively easy language. English grammar lacks the intricacies of many foreign tongues, its declensions and conjugations being of the simplest and the constant use of auxiliaries narrowing down the amount of grammar that must be committed to memory. English pronunciation, on the other hand, is exceedingly difficult to master, as it has so few general rules, and English grammar, while ordinarily simple, is full of irregularities.

The Buckeye State.

A. V. M.—In reading up about the State of Ohio I find that it is popularly known as the "Buckeye State," and for information as to the term "buckeye" am directed to "see horse chestnut." In regard to that the statement is made that "both the leaves and the fruit of the buckeye or American horse chestnut (Æs. Ohiotensis) are very poisonous." Will you kindly enlighten me as to the term "Ohiotensis" and give any other information possible regarding this matter and the connection of the name "Buckeye" with Ohio?

"Buckeye" is the popular name of certain American exogenous trees and shrubs of the genus Aesculus and the family Sapindaceæ. The "Ohio Buckeye" is a particular kind of buckeye, and Ohio is popularly known as "The Buckeye State." The Ohio buckeye has the botanical name of aesculus glabra; it is a large tree, with strong-smelling bark, small obscure flowers, and prickly fruit containing the seed. The horse chestnut (aesculus hippocastanum) is a near relative of the same genus.

NEW SUMMER WHITE HOUSE

Shadow Lawn, Magnificent Show Place in Long Branch, Has Had Varied History.

SHADOW LAWN, the million-dollar home of the late John A. McCall at Long Branch, N. J., which, according to a report from Washington last Friday, had been offered to President Wilson as a Summer residence by a delegation of prominent citizens of New Jersey, headed by Representative Scully, and accepted by the President, has had a varied career since it was built, some thirteen years ago, by Mr. McCall.

Shadow Lawn, Long Branch, N. J., the New Summer White House.

He was at that time President of the New York Life Insurance Company, and Shadow Lawn was considered one of the most beautiful Summer homes in America. It stands on a hill in the centre of about forty acres of rolling land which have been beautified by every art of the landscape gardener. The house is of Colonial design, from plans by Henry Edward Creiger, and the numerous observation towers, outhouses, and barns are all built in perfect harmony with the main structure.

Approaching the house from the main entrance to the grounds through a massive gateway, there is a series of wide granite steps, from either side of which extends in a semi-circle a granite balustrade. Beyond is a circular portico of stone, the roof of which, on a level with the roof of the house, is supported by classic stone columns. Groups of evergreen trees soften the lines of the gateway and portico, and the walls of the house are covered with trailing vines.

The main hallway is lofty and spacious. The grand social hall measures 70 by 85 feet and the grand staircase is 25 feet wide at the base. There is a large mezzanine floor, furnished as a music room, and on the next floor there is a promenade hall, surrounding an open court, lighted from above through an art glass dome. The promenade on the third floor is used as an art gallery, the chambers, dressing rooms, and bathrooms opening off the hallway.

Ivory color predominates in the social hall, the fluted pillars, arches, and balustrades being of that hue. The walls are hung with green tapestries, having Greek border effects, and the color scheme is carried out in the portières, rugs, and hangings. The two enormous mantels are of mahogany, as are the folding doors. The electric fixtures are pale Pompeiian bronze, filled with amber-colored glass. Antique bronze vases flank the main staircase.

Throughout the house the furnishings are most artistic and expensive. The drawing room is done in Nile green, silver, and ivory, and has an Italian Renaissance mantelpiece, while the billiard room is finished in English Gothic style, all the woodwork being elaborately carved.

Mr. McCall occupied the residence for a couple of seasons, and while he was ill, just after the famous insurance investigation, Myron H. Oppenheim began negotiations for the purchase of the property. The transaction dragged along until just before Mr. McCall's death, when it was closed. It was rumored at the time that Mr. Oppenheim paid not more than $300,000.

When Mr. Oppenheim took possession of the property he announced his intention of turning it into a country club. Members were to subscribe $2,000 each and the membership was to be not more than 500. Several men went into the scheme, and it was to be called the Brook Lawn Country Club. However, Mr. Oppenheim found difficulty in securing enough members, so the plan was abandoned.

In August, 1906, Abraham White, then President of the De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company, visited Shadow Lawn and, after looking over the place very carefully, opened negotiations for its purchase.

In 1896 Mr. White had practically no money. He invested 44 cents in postage stamps, and, with an audacity that astonished Wall Street, borrowed $1,000,000 on nothing more than notes signed by himself and his wife, getting part of the amount from Russell Sage. With this he made a gold deposit required on an issue of Government 4s then being put out by Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle, putting in bids around 110 and 112. He got the bonds, and within a few days made a big clean-up.

About the middle of August, 1906, White closed negotiations for Shadow Lawn, paying, it was said at the time, $500,000. At that time he said he bought the property because his wife had the most beautiful voice in America. In explanation of this statement, he said that Mrs. White, although possessed of a beautiful high soprano voice, refused to sing in public, so he hoped that the beauty of the mezzanine floor would appeal to her and result in her singing to her friends, at least. White occupied the house for a season and entertained lavishly, but in 1908 failed to meet his obligations on the property, and it was sold at Sheriff's sale on May 25, 1908, to Myron H. Oppenheim for $108,000 above a $100,000 mortgage held by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. White stated that he wanted to start a bungalow colony on the property, but the scheme never materialized.

In April, 1909, a syndicate of prominent Jerseyites attempted to raise by subscription enough to buy the property and present it to the United States Government as a "Summer White House." It was also offered to President Taft at the same time for the Summer. After receiving the delegation and listening to its offer, President Taft said that "he would have to consult a higher authority," which he later admitted to be his wife.

While these negotiations were pending the announcement of the sale of the property to J. B. Greenhut was made, and the matter was dropped.

Mr. Greenhut, who retains the ownership of the property, has spent thousands of dollars during the past couple of years in beautifying the property and adding costly trees and shrubs.

DECISION DAY IN JERSEY

A Suffragist Tells Why the Women of Her State Want the Ballot.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The question of equal suffrage is to be decided in New Jersey on Tuesday, Oct. 19. As a New Jersey woman deeply interested in this question, may I voice one last protest against taxation without representation, and remind the many thousands of your readers that their forefathers fought and died for precisely the simple justice which we are demanding for womankind? We have no voice in making the laws which govern our daily living, although we may be punished by them if we do not obey. These laws relate to the most vital interests of our lives—pure food, fire protection, the public health, hours of labor for women and children, factory inspection, public schools, &c. What was once considered woman's "sphere" has become inextricably confused with what was supposed to be purely masculine, and we have women doctors, lawyers, preachers, &c. But in return, men have usurped what were considered women's occupations, and we have men milliners, dressmakers, cooks, man-run laundries, &c. Surely, if men compete with women in women's occupations and women compete with men in men's occupations, is it not the merest justice that they should equally share the responsibility of making the laws under which both must labor and in electing the officials by whom the laws are administered?

It is urged against giving women the ballot that they cannot defend the country in case of war. All men are not called upon to bear arms. The work done by doctors and surgeons in caring for the wounded is considered quite as honorable and useful to the State as the carrying of a gun. But how much greater is the service which women perform for the State—they do more than merely to conserve human life, they create it. And the courage and self-sacrifice demanded of women as the cost of every human life is quite as heroic as that possessed by the man who faces the enemy on the field of battle. What man would exchange the military service which he may be called upon to render to the State for the service which every mother renders? Not one!

Equal suffrage has proved a success in the Western States. No one can read the man-and-women-made laws which have been enacted since women shared the ballot without admitting their humanitarian and moral tendency. Women are in politics to try to make the world better.

Women first voted in Wyoming in 1869. Twenty years later when a commission went to Washington to ask that the Territory be made a State they were told that they could come into the Union if they would come without equal suffrage. The commission sent this message to the Governor and legislative body, and the telegram they sent to Washington in reply read: "Rather than come in without the women we will stay out for a hundred years." That is a fine tribute to women who have proved that they can share in government successfully. It is a significant fact that where women vote there has never been an organized effort to deprive them of the right.

But beyond the question of justice involved is the even more vital question of the self-development of women—those members of the body politic upon whom devolve the duty and privilege of training the coming generation in high ideals of human justice and liberty and clean living. It is not of value to the State to put into the lives of women every incentive to a wider understanding of the needs of the community in which they live which will only come with a sense of personal responsibility? Many American women have this sense of responsibility now and the work they are doing in civic betterment is ample proof of the earnestness with which they will use their wider opportunities when they share in government. This type of women are organized in a great Federation of Women's Clubs reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific. For the past fifteen or twenty years these clubs have been studying current events, civic improvement, &c.; their members are trained in conducting public discussions and are thoroughly informed as to the questions of the day and the laws by which they are governed. It is this type of women—the useful, intelligent women of high ideals and tireless endeavors for the betterment of the communities in which they live who are asking for a full share in government. They know that ignorant foreign women and little children need laws to safeguard their food supply, the sanitary conditions under which they work and their hours of employment, the healthfulness and morality of their surroundings, their education, and it is in the spirit of human helpfulness that they ask for the ballot as well as in a spirit of human justice. Can any man who realizes the value of the work that women are doing refuse them a share in government?

These Suits for Discerning Women Priced 25.00 and 35.00

Two new models have just been added to our 25.00 assortment

One is of very fine wool poplin, following the Russian lines which women find so becoming. There is newness in the twisted-rope belt with its balls of black fur, the animal collar, complete with head, tail and feet, and the fur buttons. The skirt is a flare model with self-belt. Shown in African brown and other favored colors.

The other is a semi-box model of fine broadcloth with fur around the collar, cuffs and bottom of the coat. The collar buttons to the chin, giving a long, graceful line in front, and a decided flare gives character to the skirt. In several colors, at 25.00.

A Broadcloth suit trimmed with genuine beaver is priced at 35.00

The broadcloth is of the soft, fine weave about whose goodness there can be no doubt. The beaver appears on the collar and cuffs and also forms the buttons. Every woman will admire the long, supple lines and excellent tailoring of this suit, which is lined with high grade peau de cygne. The skirt is of tailored plainness, with an effective flare.

This is but one of a comprehensive assortment of suits of unusual excellence, at 35.00.

As Seen by Her

A fascinating corner in this fascinating store is that wherein women's kimonas and negligees are sold.

There are wide-sleeved kimonas from the land of slant-eyed maidens and glowing cherry blossoms. Particularly lovely models of Canton crepe are hand-painted in soft colors, showing sunshiny lakes and trees and funny little houses. The obis are similarly decorated and the linings are of soft Jap silk.

The one that is the color of sea water is 32.50, and the one of ecru tint costs 34.50.

And I saw a gay little deep-pointed crepe de chine jacket, embroidered in pink and white roses and finished with tiny ruffles, which cost only 6.90.

A Made-in-America negligee held its own in this display with pink, ruffly aplomb. The full skirt, shirred from a satin band, and the little jacket were adorned with three-inch ruffles, each one edged with satin baby ribbon. Priced at 15.98.

So much for fluffiness. There was a different kind of beauty in a warmly quilted gray silk robe with wide collar and cuffs of squirrel, and pockets adorned to match, at 16.98.

It is a wonderful corner for brides, is this, wherein negligees are sold; brides of today, and yesterday, and the day before.

Are we really and truly coming to it? It seems so, and if every bustle is as softly and daintily fashioned as is this petticoat, women will delight in wearing them.

This one is made of pompadour taffeta, the back caught up and held in bustle effect by means of a tight lining of chiffon. No wires, no stiffness, and yet the bustle idea is there to give the flare which a decided number of the new evening frocks demand. Priced at 16.50.

Other silk petticoats in the newest flounce and petal effects are priced at 5.00 and upward.

Rengo Belt Reducing Corsets

Priced at 2.00, 3.00 and 5.00

For Heavy Figures

Special showing of "Rengo Belts" this week.

Naturally, the woman of heavy build gives her corset harder wear than does her sylph-like sister, who doesn't even have to buy a particular kind. In no time at all the average corset which the stout woman buys seems to lose its shape. It sags where it should support and is inclined to r-rip without notice. Isn't it so, stout woman?

Now, then, have you tried a Rengo Belt Reducing Corset? If you have not, you have not found the great relieving comfort that this specially constructed stout woman's corset can give to the heavy figure. Rengo Belt Corsets are so strongly and scientifically fortified by the Rengo Belt feature that we can GUARANTEE them UNBREAKABLE.

There are models with and without "Steelastic" webbing, according to the amount of flexibility you desire. They possess superior strength and wear wonderfully. Boned with double watch spring steels, guaranteed not to rust. Come in and have one of our expert models adjust for you the model YOUR figure needs. 2.00, 3.00 and 5.00.

Bamberger's, Second Floor.

Fascinating Evening Gowns

And an assortment of delightful models for the afternoon dance.

Of particular daintiness and charm must be the gown in which milady elects to appear in the evening. It must be individual, rich in style and texture, yet wholly adapted to her own personality.

Bamberger evening gowns bear out these thoughts. You will find them here in wonderful variety; soft, ruffly chiffon affairs over silken linings, the shoulder straps and corsage showing the glitter of crystal and silver beads; ombre effects developed with layers and layers of vari-hued maline; gowns of soiree, the silk irresistible, wide of skirt and demure of bodice, and crisp little short-skirted frocks of rustly taffeta, touched up with maline or net frills and clusters of dainty rose-buds.

These you will find, and hosts of beautiful others, at 12.98, 17.98, 25.00, 37.98, 52.98 and prices in between.

MUSIC NEWS AND NOTES.

A new organization to be known as the Orchestral Society of New York, of which Max Jacobs is conductor, will give the first of a series of three subscription concerts at the Harris Theatre on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 7. The soloist for the first concert will be David Hochstein, violinist. The dates for the remaining concerts are Dec. 12 and Jan. 16. The organization aims to introduce at each concert an American artist and to perform an American composition.

The New York Chamber Music Society will give its first concert at Aeolian Hall on the evening of Dec. 17. This is a new organization which is made up of piano, strings, and wind instruments. Its first program comprises Mozart's Quintet in E flat for piano, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon; Brahms's Quintet in B minor, Op. 115, for clarinet, two violins, viola, and 'cello; and Wolf-Ferrari's Kammersymphonie in B flat, Op. 8, for piano, strings, wood-winds, and horn. The players in the organization include Carolyn Beebe, piano; Bonarios Grimson and Herbert Corduan, violins; Samuel Lifschey, viola; Jacques Renard, 'cello; Ludwig Manoly, double bass; William Kincaid, flute; Gustave Langenus, clarinet; Henri de Busscher, oboe; Lawrence Whitcomb, English horn; Ugo Savolini, bassoon, and Josef Franzel, horn.

The Music School Settlement will install this season a department for the teaching of wind instruments, made possible by a donation of Mrs. Elizabeth S. Coolidge for the purpose. A limited number of pupils, who must be over 14 years of age, will be given instruction on the flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, bassoon, and trombone. The school opened on Oct. 1 under the new director, Arthur Farwell, with a teaching staff of seventy-five and 800 pupils enrolled.

Under the auspices of the Order of Rostradamus, an organization whose membership includes many of the German singers at the Metropolitan Opera House, a concert will be given on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 31, at the Astor for the benefit of widows and orphans of the German, Austrian, and Hungarian soldiers. Among those who will appear are Mmes. Gadski, Ober, and Mattfeld, and Messrs. Sembach, Weil, Goritz, and Reiss. Carl Friedberg, the German pianist, will also contribute to the program. Seats may be obtained at the hotel or at the office of the order in the Marbridge Building.

The novelties announced for the Chicago Opera Company this season by Director Campanini include Montemezzi's "L'Amore dei Tre Re," Saint-Saëns's "Dejanire," and Leoncavallo's "Zaza," which will be conducted by the composer. The feature of the Chicago season will be the addition to the repertoire of Wagner's "Ring" cycle, "Parsifal," "Tannhäuser," "Lohengrin," and "Tristan und Isolde." Raoul Gunsbourg's opera, "La Vielle Aïeule," will be given for the first time in America as well as Massenet's posthumous work, "Cleopatre," the latter with Mme. Kousnezoff in the title rôle.

THE FIRST NIGHT CALENDAR.

"OUR MRS. McCHESNEY"—A comedy based on Edna Ferber's stories, written in collaboration with George V. Hobart, with Ethel Barrymore in the title rôle, Tuesday night in the Lyceum Theatre.

"INTERIOR"—Revival of Maeterlinck's playlet by the Washington Square Players in the Bandbox tomorrow night.

"DER WEIBSTEUFEL"—A drama in German by Karl Schoenherr, Wednesday night in the Irving Place Theatre.

AN event of unusual interest in the theatre will be the return of Ethel Barrymore to light comedy. This will transpire Tuesday night, when Miss Barrymore will be seen at the Lyceum in "Our Mrs. McChesney," an American comedy based on Edna Ferber's stories of the adventures of the lady drummer of that name.

It seems almost unnecessary to go into detail about the McChesney stories. Miss Ferber is one of the most popular of the younger school of magazine writers and her stories have been widely read. She belongs to that large band of short story writers upon whose shoulders, according to the blurbs of their respective editors, the mantle of O. Henry descended upon his death. This is a bit unfair to Miss Ferber, because O. Henry's mantle does not fit her, and anyway she has one of her own that does very well.

This is Miss Ferber's first play, so George V. Hobart, who has had much experience at stage carpentry, was called in to help her. But while some of the mechanics may be Mr. Hobart's, it is safe to assume that most of the dialogue and situations will be Miss Ferber's, and that consequently there will be an abundance of real humor in the piece. The play is in three acts and five scenes reaching from Sandusky, Ohio, to the Dulcinea Apartments on Riverside Drive.

There are more than thirty speaking parts in the play, and in the most important of them will appear Roy LaRue, Nina Forbes, George Harcourt, John Wise, Hugh Dillman, James H. Morrison, E. H. St. James, Huntley A. Gordon, Lola Fisher, Donald Gallagher, William Boyd, Jacob Kingsbury, Emma Salvatore, A. Romaine Callender, Sara Enright, George Meade, and Carree Clarke.

The weakest spot in the new bill given by the Washington Square Players in the Bandbox Theatre was a translation of a playlet from the Italian, called "A Night of Snow Snow." It has been decided to eliminate this number from the program and to give in its place tomorrow night Maeterlinck's playlet, "Interior." This was on the first program given by the players and was one of the most interesting things they did last year. The same cast will appear in it, Josephine A. Meyer, Florence Enright, Edwina Behre, Beatrice Savelli, Agnes McCarthy, Ralph Roeder, Walter Frankl, Remo Bufano, and James Terbell among the principals.

This afternoon in the Bandbox the first of a series of lectures on the drama will be given by Walter Pritchard Eaton. His subject will be "The American Theatre: How the Land Lies."

Karl Schoenherr, the author of "Glaube und Heimat," wrote "Der Weibsteufel," the play that will be acted by Rudolf Christians's Irving Place Theatre stock company for the first time on Wednesday night. "Der Weibsteufel" is said to be a stronger play than "Glaube und Heimat," and it has been acted with pronounced success in both Berlin and Vienna. There are only three characters in the drama, and these will be acted by Arnold Korff, Greta Meyer, and Christian Rub.

P. Heggie.

The gymnastic Giuseppe Creatore and his band will return to the Standard Theatre today for two concerts. Emilio Bernabo will again be the soloist.

SECOND THOUGHTS ON FIRST NIGHTS

The Return of Sherlock Holmes—Some Movie Notes—At the Bandbox, Again.

WILLIAM GILLETTE has come back as Sherlock Holmes. Again the ultimate detective treads the Empire's boards, again the lean, nervous fingers caress the immortal pipe. Once more the weary, small voice plays humorously with the phrases of omniscience while the supreme sleuth of the dressing gown reads in the ascending smoke the utter confusion of Professor Moriarty—the man higher up of a day gone by.

A dispassionate study of this perennial piece, were any so misguided as to make one, would provide many reminders of how fashions in playwriting have changed since the late nineties when it was written and first produced. Of course, it is as artificial as a false tooth. Of course, its indebtedness to Sardou produces that impression of the wheels going around which would be made on a guest whose seat at dinner commanded, through the door ajar, a glimpse of the kitchen and of the busy, responsible cook. Indeed, the presence in this revival of a rather comic Moriarty suggests that Mr. Gillette himself finds "Sherlock Holmes" more amusing than he did when it was new.

But who cares? To scold the play at the Empire for all this is just a little like lamenting the lack of realism in "Alice in Wonderland," like contemning Barrie's supreme stage fantasy for being fantastic, like coming away from a parlor magician's party with the sour comment that he was very, very tricky.

As sometimes happens with a bad, old melodrama—as happens markedly with "Grumpy," for instance—"Sherlock Holmes" is lifted by a genuine and telling characterization. This is true of the stories and doubly true of the play. It is Mr. Chesterton who points out that not since Dickens has an author of fiction created a character so universally known as Sherlock Holmes. Probably neither Svengali nor Huckleberry Finn has had so wide an acquaintance. And for the intimacy of that acquaintance one actor has been more largely responsible than in the case of any other dramatization with the exception of Jefferson's Rip. The detective visualized by the author of the stories, the figure drawn by the clever Frederick Dorr Steele and the Sherlock of the stage are now one and indistinguishable, but to the character as conceived by the then plain A. Conan Doyle, the skillful, gracious, gentle, winning Gillette has added a charm that was beyond the author's somewhat limited power to bestow. The impress of the player's personality is indelible and the appearance of any other actor in the part is as unthinkable to one who has seen the original as would be an understudy for "The Music Master," or a road company in "Peter Pan."

It must be a pleasant and a grateful thought to Mr. Gillette to remember now how many are the millions to whom, in his lifetime, he has given pleasure. He is adding to the number. They are turning them away at the Empire. Those who know the performance by heart eagerly revisit the scene of an ancient thrill and those who do not are obviously curious to see this play of which they have heard so much.

No one could tease Mr. Gillette for getting out the famous dressing-gown he had permanently discarded more than four years before. His own playful curtain speech (printed in this vicinity) disarms the facetious, and, besides, it is so very agreeable to have him back.

It is great fun to see once more an exhibition of such unabashed theatricalism, such unblushing working up of an entrance, for instance. The scene is a luxurious ambush of crime. A woman's screams are heard above, and before your eyes a safe is cracked. A fair prisoner is just being tortured to make her reveal the hiding place of priceless papers when the door bell rings. A secret window affords the villainess a glimpse of the unwelcome visitor. It is a tall, thin man. "Sherlock Holmes," murmurs the burglar, and departs by way of a window. There is a hasty assumption of calm. The rather suspect butler passes along the lighted hallway toward the door. Portentous silence. Banging of door. More portentous silence, broken only by the rustle of murmurous anticipation from the other side of the footlights. And then, and then, there appears in the doorway—Sherlock Holmes. Loud cheers!

The Longest Run.

A GLANCE at the "To Be Continued" table published elsewhere on this page and an occasional sight of the box office line at the Liberty serve to remind us that the entertainment which has been here for the longest continuous run and which has played here more weeks than any, save "Chin-Chin," is not a spoken play, but a photoplay. At a time when road companies are being called in and plays that played here for months and months last season are already graciously "released to stock," "The Birth of a Nation" is extending its territory in this country, and recent mails bring across the Atlantic the reports of its exhibition at the Scala in London, where the price per stall is the time-honored ten and six.

Neither its novelty as the first two-dollar movie nor the uproar of protest raised against it in Boston and elsewhere alone accounts for its enormous success. Calculate it in money, and, if you dislike the art and social spirit of the Rev. Thomas Dixon, who wrote the scenario, you will hear with pain that his royalties threaten to pass the million-dollar mark. Calculate it in terms of runs, and you will come upon figures likely to give you pause. The inclusion in the management's own announcements of the 172 performances given at Brighton Beach during the Summer confuses the statistically minded and is unnecessary for the purpose of making an impression. Beginning early in March, this big movie has been shown at the Liberty ever since at the rate of fourteen exhibitions a week. If it remains, as it doubtless will, till the end of 1915, then those who go to the Liberty on Dec. 29 will witness the 604th performance in Manhattan of "The Birth of a Nation." And that, please remember, was the run achieved by the unprecedented "Peg o' My Heart." If the huge Griffith photo-pageant remains at the Liberty till the end of December, then it will beat the record. Of course, it is being shown at the same time in other cities, and doubtless the denizens of distant Dallas go trustingly to "The Birth of a Nation" because they know that there can be no substitutions in the movies. A photo-play can have no road company.

Writers on things theatrical, if observed closely, wear a somewhat baffled expression when wrestling with this comparatively new form of entertainment—a form that has yet to find its own level. Some lamentation is heard, but it is not precisely amazing that the movies are besieged in a country that revels in the art of Harold Bell Wright. It is as idle to discuss seriously a diversion of which the humors have not yet risen above the plane of the Sunday comic supplement as it is monstrous to speak unkindly of experiments in panorama and photo spectacle that are steadily routing the clumsy and rubbishy efforts at large-scale realism which have encumbered the modern stage. Who knows but what the motion picture will compel the theatre to do only its very best work? And in the long, long run, who cares?

Remember, by the way, that the big folk of the stage and the big folk of the screen are quite different persons. Just because most posing is merely mugging, it cannot be said that there is no such thing as motion-picture acting. All are groping for a new technique to the plaudits of the uncritical millions. Few succeed. Douglas Fairbanks would seem to have solved the secret, and he will be a rich man long before he is an old one. If you saw "The Coward" at the Knickerbocker, you saw the expert Frank Keenan ridiculously overshadowed by a mere youngster of the films, one Charles Ray, who knows that playing for the movies is something more than pantomime and that it has nothing whatever to do with the mechanics of the grimace.

A Change for the Better.

ATTENTION should be called to the fact that of the four playlets at the Bandbox "Night of Snow" will give way gracefully tomorrow evening to "Interior," the Maeterlinck piece which was one of the most successful things done by these same Washington Square Players last Spring. It was delicately intimated in this column last Sunday that the former play was not an unalloyed delight. The official announcement of the change suggested that it was over the heads of an American audience, and, indeed, it had been observable that the players were rather up in the air. However, the bill as amended is capital entertainment, and should be seen forthwith. With such dramatic fare as the lovable "Young America," "The Boomerang," the second act of "Common Clay," Grace George in "The New York Idea," Eleanor Painter in "The Princess Pat," and the Washington Square Players at the Bandbox, he is a churlish playgoer who says there is nothing in New York worth seeing.

These players seem to work with a nice democracy, with a fine friendliness. Dwellers in their neighborhood report that after a performance all the company (from the ticket taker to the several leading ladies) repair to a near-by coffee house, and there, with light refreshments and high converse, speed the waning night. All, that is, save the billygoat, who is as temperamental as Jasper but not so affable. The goat, by the way, is an uncertain artist, sometimes playing with marked indifference, sometimes rising to great heights. One evening he will turn his back on the love scene between Mr. Hudson and Miss Lopokova, but the next he will gaze at them with an expression of mingled distaste and incredulity, and then, in that intimate way Marie Tempest has, will confide in the audience by a glance that says loudly:

"What fools these mortals be!"

HOME-MADE PRIMA DONNA

THROUGH the universal blackness of the war Eleanor Painter sees a tiny ray of light for American singers. Miss Painter is the dainty apparition of the new Victor Herbert operetta, "The Princess Pat," at the Cort Theatre, who when she smiles is alluring, when she sings, charming, when she dances, divine. Consider, then, Miss Painter smiling, singing, and dancing all at once, which hundreds are doing with great joy at six night and two matinée performances weekly.

Miss Painter's ray of light is this—with the opera houses of the Continent closed, America may realize the folly of her way and make a place for her young artists who have hitherto been forced to go abroad for a hearing.

"Perhaps," the young prima donna said one day last week, "the chaotic conditions in music circles abroad brought about by the war will result in the creation of opportunities for our own singers at home. There has never been any question but that the best teachers in the world are to be found right here in America. I did not go abroad to study because I chose to, nor because there weren't excellent teachers here—better, in fact, than were to be found in Germany—but because before the war conditions there were more conducive to rapid advancement. My case was that of hundreds of others.

"There is no reason why these young men and women should not remain in this country if we would only give them some encouragement as beginners. The greatest advantage over there was that they were willing to give you a chance, to put up with your imperfections in the hope that as you grew you might develop into a big artist. In America the public demands that a singer must be almost perfect, must already have achieved great success. That is why before the war Europe was full of American singers who were fine artists, but who could not secure engagements at home.

"This attitude of our public is so unfair. We cannot all burst into the flower of our full powers spontaneously. To become a good singer takes years of patient toil and study, and to be able to accomplish the best results one should be able to sing and study at the same time, and that is what Europe offered. It is when you are appearing in public that you most need a competent teacher.

"The climate here is better, but there are drawbacks, particularly in New York, that offset this. In Berlin the theatre does not play such an important part in the life of the city. Instead there are more concerts, and it was a common sight to see groups of young women, music students, attending them. Of course we have fine recitals here, but the whole atmosphere of New York is more distracting than was that of Berlin in ante bellum days.

"So many students forget that a good voice is not the only essential. After all, it is personality that counts. I took lessons in acting from the stage manager of the Royal Opera, and also developed my dancing. I love to dance almost as well as to sing, but I should never care to do that exclusively, because I shouldn't want to unless I could be a Pavlowa.

"I studied in Berlin four years. At the end of the second year I went to an agent and sang for him. After that I had no trouble about engagements. I sang at the Deutsches Opera at Charlottensburg. Marguerita and Butterfly were my favorite rôles. I shall never be happy till I sing Butterfly here, and I mean to some time. The German critics liked my Butterfly best. And I am going to sing in concert, too."

But what about the light opera stage, Miss Painter? Ann Swinburne has deserted it, and if you desert it, too, what shall we do, what shall we do? For who that has seen Miss Painter smile, or heard her sing, or seen her dance could possibly be satisfied with the prima donnas from the banks of the Seine, the Danube, or the Thames?

LIZZIE.

LIZZIE KELLY is perhaps the best-paid performer of her type on the American stage. Of course, Jasper Taylor earns more money, but Jasper doesn't get to keep it and Lizzie does. Lizzie is the canine actress who scored an individual triumph in "Watch Your Step" when it was acted at the New Amsterdam last Spring. Her only line was attached to her collar at one end and Harry Kelly, her boss, at the other.

The Kellys are with "Watch Your Step" in Chicago at present and Lizzie is still drawing her $5 a week. She has a contract with Charles Dillingham, and Mr. Kelly is meticulous about keeping her money inviolate. He has opened a bank account for Lizzie, and keeps a set of books for her, so that when she needs a new sweater or a box of dog biscuit it comes out of her bank account and not her master's.

After the war Lizzie is to be sent to a finishing school at Frankfort.

Tonight at the Hip.

Some of the stars of "Hip Hip Hooray" will assist John Philip Sousa and his band at the third Hippodrome concert tonight. Belle Storey and Orville Harrold will sing, and Nat Wills will give a monologue. The Miramba band will play, and Virginia Root, who made the world tour with the band as soloist, will sing.

The Elmendorf Talks.

The first of Dwight Elmendorf's annual travel lectures will be given Sunday night, Nov. 7, in Carnegie Hall. The countries to be visited by the lecturer this season are the British Isles, Holland, Switzerland, and Italy.

THE AU REVOIR TOUR

Being the gravely uttered words of a curtain speech spoken by William Gillette after the last act of "Sherlock Holmes" at the Empire Theatre on Monday night of last week.

I AM really very much ashamed to appear before you this evening, and especially to come out here and talk to you pleasantly like this across the footlights, for I have been shamefully lazy and negligent the past three years. With all that time at my disposal this is only my Second Farewell. It is really shameful. I do not wonder that you feel as you do about it.

I must say it looks as if we Americans can't keep up with the seasoned Farewellers from abroad.

You may not have noticed it, but some little time back I made quite a charming and impressive little address from this same stage, and after the performance of this same play, making a farewell for myself and Sherlock—mixing in some pathos and a few little things like that to help along. That was three years ago, and I haven't done a thing since. I am ashamed!

There isn't any reason in the world why we can't do as well in the farewell business as any other country on the face of the globe. We have the farewellers and we have the people to say farewell to. Now let's get together and see what we can do about it. As I said, this is only my Second Farewell, but if I can get back here in the Spring that will be one more, and at that rate—if I can only keep it up, I will be up even with my competitors by the Spring of 1922, and by the Winter season of 1937 I'll be well in the lead.

But, of course, you will realize that I can't do all this by myself. There is one thing I need, and that is you—your sympathy, your affection, and all those things, but above all your co-operation. These farewells would be very expensive things to give all alone in an empty theatre just for the fun of it. And for that reason it seems to me that audiences should do their part in the noble work of putting our beloved country in the lead in this respect, as she is in so many others of less importance. I hate to talk to you about duty, but there it is—this is your PATRIOTIC DUTY, and I have to tell you about it. And now that I have called your attention to the matter I am sure you will do your share, which is merely to come here and be farewelled to. It won't be for long, and therefore it will cause you very little inconvenience to put everything else aside for the time being and come here every night till about the end of this month. The nights are all that are necessary; we can take care of the matinées. So it is perfectly understood, and it is very nice of you, I am sure, and it will help us along a whole lot.

As I said, it will soon be over, and then perhaps next Spring we'll give you another whack at it for my Third. Therefore, as I shall see you so soon again, I will only say au révoir until tomorrow night.

SKETCHES AND STORIES OF THE STAGE

THE AMERICAN PRODUCER WHO LIVED AT MARLOW

Haddon Chambers Tells Why Charles Frohman's English Friends Chose This Thames Village as the Place for His Memorial.

On a commanding site overlooking the High Street, Marlow-on Thames, the Anglo-American friends of Charles Frohman are going to erect a fountain to the memory of the man who figured so largely in connection with the English-speaking stage for a third of a century. The fountain will be within sight, almost, of the Compleat Angler Hotel, where Mr. Frohman used to stay during his frequent visits to the town, and of the church and graveyard opposite, where he often expressed the wish to be buried.

It was Haddon Chambers who introduced Charles Frohman to the village that was to mean so much to him through all the last years of his life, and Fate, with more regard for the fitness of things than she sometimes shows, ordained that the friend who led him to his beloved retreat should be the last to wave him farewell when all that was mortal of Charles Frohman put out to sea for the last time. For to Mr. Chambers fell the sorrowful mission of making the journey with Mr. Frohman's London manager to Queenstown when the news of the Lusitania tragedy reached London, and of identifying the body of The Chief.

Mr. Chambers is in New York on one of his frequent visits, and the other day in his rooms he talked of Mr. Frohman's Marlow.

"It was fifteen years ago, I should say, that Mr. Frohman first came to see me at Marlow. I was spending my Summers there and he had been staying at Maidenhead. He loved the river and as Marlow is on the Thames and much the same sort of town, only smaller, simpler and more reposeful, I thought he might like it better. So he came to visit me, and from his first glimpse of the place he fell in love with it, and as his knowledge of it ripened he came to look upon it as his spiritual home. After that first visit he never failed to include a stay at Marlow in every trip to England.

"Marlow is a one-street town. There are other streets, of course, but in the High Street Marlow lives and moves and has its being. Up and down this Mr. Frohman used to love to walk, dodging in and out of the stores, where he would purchase unconsidered trifles as an excuse for chatting with the shopkeepers. The simplicity of his manner and his keen interest, humor and sympathy won him many friends, and his arrival was always more or less of an event in the little township.

"He stopped at the Compleat Angler, an old-fashioned inn hard by the river. Just opposite was the church with its inevitable graveyard, and it was here he often said he wanted to be buried, to be near his friends of the High Street. Muriel Kilby, the inn-keeper's daughter, was a special favorite of his. Muriel was a little girl in short dresses when he first saw her; now she is engaged to be married to an officer in the army. A day or two before the Lusitania went down she received a note from Mr. Frohman saying he was on his way to Marlow and would see her soon.

"Clark, the butcher, was another favorite. Clark kills his own meat and Mr. Frohman was always vastly interested in the butcher and his immaculate little shop with its sawdust-covered floor, and its neat rows of carcasses prepared by the hands of this pocket edition of John Bull strong enough to lift an ox. Once Mr. Frohman wrote Clark a letter, and he replied very wittily, saying that if Mr. Frohman would allow him to propose his name for Mayor he would insure his election."

Quite naturally the talk drifted to the war and its effect on the English drama. The question was asked what the ultimate effect was likely to be, whether the war would bring about any great change in form, and Mr. Chambers said:

"So far in London there has been little perceptible change, and I doubt if there will be, especially in form, for the drama is eternal, and while certain subjects may come to the fore, a good play will continue to be a good play and to succeed when adequately presented.

"That is the case now in London. Things are moving along about the same as usual and the plays that are good are making money. There are two American plays that have been on for more than a year—'Peg o' My Heart' and 'Potash and Perlmutter.' There is this difference in affairs at home—the members of the older group of English dramatists are contributing very little to the stage just now. We are all too much involved to find the time or inspiration to write plays. The world drama that is being enacted in Europe is so stupendous, so momentous that the works of our imagination seem to be thrown into the shade and we are unable to concentrate upon them.

"And then, too, we are all trying to help as best we can, and we have little time left to do much writing, or at least writing that requires concentration. Most of the men of my generation are too old to fight, so the only thing left for us to do is to help at home. There is plenty to be done and possible fields of activity are endless. For example, there are the wounded to be visited and cheered in the hospitals; the convalescents to be taken for walks and driven in horse carriages and motor cars which are lent by their owners in generous abundance, and the organization and support of societies for sending tobacco and other comforts to the men at the front. Then, too, there is literary work to be done in the general cause, and in addition some of us have been fortunate enough to find more immediate spheres of activity which I can't well speak of just now.

"When it is all over, I suppose we shall all write again. It is conceivable that some potential playwrights will be sacrificed, and that the stage will thus be a sufferer. But the drama is too vital a thing for anything to retard it for long."

"Will the creation of new values eliminate subjects that were formerly popular as wholly inconsequential, as, for instance, the drawing room play so dear to English audiences?" Mr. Chambers was asked.

"What will be the subject matter of post-bellum drama, who can say?" Mr. Chambers answered. "After your civil war there were many war dramas, just as there has already been a considerable number of this type since the beginning of the present conflict, mostly, curiously enough, in America. Perhaps they will devote themselves to more virile themes than of late years, but that is only a subject for conjecture. I should say it will be much the same after the war as before and now—that a good play, whether drawing room comedy or something more substantial, will succeed when well acted."

"And how will it affect the American stage?"

"It seems to me," said Mr. Chambers, "the American drama doesn't need much help. It is working out its own salvation in its own way. Your playwrights are furnishing most of your plays and sending us a good many, too."

C. R. MACAULEY, whose cartoons have been printed in various New York papers during the past quarter of a century, has invented an interesting method of reproducing his drawings in motion-pictures. The artist has named the pictures Epic Cartoons, and they will be shown shortly in the picture theatres of the country.

The problem Mr. Macauley had to solve was a method of visualizing every stroke of the pen without the use of thousands of drawings that would take months to make, assemble and photograph. The cartoonist solved the problem and he expects the process, which he has protected by patents, to revolutionize this branch of the industry. He can now work at top speed as though making a rush cartoon for the next edition of a paper. Not only do the pictures move in what is described as a wonderfully lifelike manner, but they cast their shadows as they go.

The management of the Strand Theatre announces the following plays to follow "The Chorus Lady," this week's offering: Blanche Ring in "The Yankee Girl," (Pallas;) Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," (Lasky;) Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly," (Famous Players;) John Barrymore in "The Red Widow." (Famous Players;) Victor Moore in "Chimmie Fadden Out West," (Lasky.)

The list of stars under the Griffith banner now includes besides Douglas Fairbanks and DeWolf Hopper, Helen Ware, Jane Grey, Orrin Johnson, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Tully Marshall, Robert Harron, Frank Campeau, Sarah Truax, Norma Talmadge, John Emerson, Thomas Jefferson, Paul Gilmore, and Mary Alden. Some of the recent casts of Broadway all-star revivals could not compete with this galaxy of names.

Mary Pickford has been provided with John Luther Long's "Madame Butterfly" for her first screen excursion into Orientalism. So great was her interest in the rôle that when she was informed she was to represent the screen embodiment of Cho-Cho-San she immediately engaged a Japanese maid in order to study her mannerisms, her walk, and her gestures. This little daughter of Nippon is now acting as adviser in chief to Miss Pickford in the matter of selecting her Oriental wardrobe and in the arrangement of her coiffure.

Miss Pickford is frankly apprehensive over her first digression from the type of character she has always presented to the public.

"I feel almost as nervous about Cho-Cho-San as I did about the first picture I ever played in," says Miss Pickford. "When one has been playing a certain type of character almost exclusively, the public almost resents a departure from that particular style of impersonation. Cho-Cho-San is such a universally beloved little personage that I am particularly nervous about the Pickford version of a character that has become familiar to the public through the medium of opera, novel, and play; and if it does not succeed I shall probably commit hari-kari."

After weeks of search, Essanay found one of the extremely few ravens in captivity in the United States for use in its six-act feature photoplay, "The Raven," from George C. Hazleton's romance and novel of Edgar Allan Poe. The bird—a splendid specimen—was obtained from the Milwaukee, Wis., zoo, which possesses one of the best collections of animals in this country. It is said not more than half a dozen ravens are in captivity in the United States, and three of these are the property of the Milwaukee zoo. They are kept in a huge cage, in which also are numerous eagles, and it proved a task of several days to corner one of the ravens.

Essanay deposited $100 to insure the safe return of the bird, but when the company's representative asked the zoo authorities to quote a price on the raven in case of accident or death, they refused to do so, asserting that, because of the rarity of the species, they could not do so and would not permit the raven to be removed under such conditions. So Essanay merely borrowed the bird.

Elsie Janis is the star of "Miss Information" at Cohan's Theatre, but that does not keep her from writing a new serial for the movies. It is to be in eight installments and Miss Janis plans to make it hold many stirring and martial scenes and much of romance and comedy. The Colonial, the civil war, and the Spanish-American war will be some of the periods of American history touched upon. In each Miss Janis will play a girl of the period.

Billie Burke will return today from the Triangle studios in California, where she has been receiving large quantities of legal tender for acting for a picture that will be released soon on the Triangle program. Thomas H. Ince, who directed the making of the picture, wired the New York offices that Miss Burke had exceeded his expectations in her first picture and that he would have retained her for other pictures but for her determination to return to the legitimate stage.

Comes from Los Angeles a yarn that Ince has had himself insured in the sum of $250,000. The tale bears the marks of credibility, inasmuch as business rather than life insurance was the end in view. Some years ago the world was startled by the announced huge amount of the insurance made on the life of Mr. Wanamaker, till the explanation was proffered that merchandising interests so extensive must be protected against the loss that would be caused in the event of the chief executive's demise. The reason for the Ince quarter-million insurance is similar in character. The overhead expense of the Inceville department of the Triangle film-making activities is not far from $50,000 a week. Any ill that befell the director of it would involve a tremendous readjustment, and it is this contingency of misfortune that the big insurance guards against. Yet Mr. Ince is one of the most forehanded directors in the films. Ince plans always to keep eight plays ahead of the schedule of Ince productions at the Knickerbocker Theatre. In other words, there are always eight completed new features in his film vaults or else on the way in the custody of the express companies from the coast to New York.

MINUTE VISITS IN THE WINGS

It seems hardly fair to go so far into the past, but Natalie Alt, the charming prima donna of "The Girl Who Smiles" at the Longacre, made her first appearance on the New York stage as one of the four young women in "The London Follies." You didn't see "The London Follies"? Probably not—only a few did, for it was one of those gems like "The Passing of the Idle Rich" and O. U. Bean's production of "The Aztec Romance" that glitter for the briefest space before they are snatched away.

That was a memorable night at Weber's when a band of young men and women attired in Pierrot and Pierrette costumes came out on the stage and sang songs and spoke pieces to a bewildered audience that wanted to be kind but ended up by being almost obstreperous.

But that is another story; this is about Miss Alt, who long ago lived down her unlucky début. As a matter of fact, Miss Alt was attractive that fatal night—the memory of her great eyes pleading for mercy seems to linger—but one was scarcely prepared to see her burst forth a full prima donna a few years later in "Adele." She did just that, as many who saw her in that dainty "comedy with music" will remember.

Miss Alt is a New York girl. She was educated in the schools here, and as a girl decided that she would do something with her voice. When she was ready to begin she sang for Nahan Franko, who introduced her to Mr. Conried, then Director of the Metropolitan. Mr. Conried placed Miss Alt in the Metropolitan school, where she spent two years in study. But she was only a member of the chorus, and, restless for larger experience, she got a position as a church singer in a Montclair choir. She sang there a year or more and then decided to get a job in a New York church choir.

Then she discovered a curious situation—she found that most young women singing in New York churches were married, and that unmarried singers were more or less forwned upon. At least, that was the way it seemed to Miss Alt, who next turned to the stage. Her first engagement was with one of the "Little Nemo" companies. She toured a season in this musical comedy, and then returned to New York for her memorable adventure at Weber's. Followed a brief engagement in "Jumping Jupiter," one of Richard Carle's pieces, brief because it failed, and after that a year at the Park as understudy for Ina Claire in "The Quaker Girl."

Then came Miss Alt's big chance. She was engaged by Joseph Bickerton to sing the title rôle in "Adele," Mr. Bickerton's contract read that he should provide a cast for the operetta that met the approval of the management of the theatre. The management objected to Miss Alt, not for any specific reason beyond the fact that she was new and comparatively unknown. But Mr. Bickerton was adamant. He said that Miss Alt would be the prima donna or there would be no "Adele." He carried his point, and with the recollection of Miss Alt's delightful performance one is tempted to confirm Mr. Bickerton's estimate and to say that without her there would have been no "Adele"—or, at least, none half so alluring.

SHELLY HULL, who has been added to the cast of Edgar Selwyn's "Rolling Stones" at the Harris Theatre, has generally eluded the snares of the interviewer, although he has been playing important parts for a number of years. Here, at last, is the truth about Mr. Hull.

He is one of three sons of William Hull, for many years dramatic editor of The Louisville Courier-Journal. His eldest brother is Howard Hull, husband and manager of Margaret Anglin; his younger brother is Henry Hull, who has won some distinction in the companies of Margaret Anglin, Guy Bates Post, and Ralph Kellard.

It was as a party to the famous "Florodora" sextet that Mr. Hull began his stage career. He remained with that organization for two years. His next two years were with Henrietta Crosman in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," under management of David Belasco. This was followed by appearances in the dramatization of "The Crossing," "The College Widow," and with George Ober's company. From 1906-07 he played varied rôles at the Castle Square Theatre Stock in Boston. Again came some miscellaneous characterizations as George Preston in "Glorious Betsy" with Mary Mannering and Phil Jordan in "The Great Divide."

In 1909 he appeared with Guy Bates Post in the Fiske production of "The Bridge," by Rupert Hughes. An engagement in "The Fortune Hunter" followed. A brief engagement with Mrs. Pat Campbell in "The Foolish Virgin" gave way then to one in the Manhattan Company with Mrs. Fiske, the play being "The New Marriage." At this point began his work for Frohman management with Marie Doro in "Electricity."

He played Bayard Ducles in "What Ails You?", Richard Wilson in the American tryout of Elizabeth Baker's "Chains;" and Viscount Farncombe in "The Mind-the-Paint Girl." This latter part started a long engagement as leading man opposite Billie Burke, which included parts in "The Amazons," "The Land of Promise," and "Jerry."

THE REICHER PROGRAM

EMANUEL REICHER, the German actor who has taken the Garden Theatre for the season, makes this statement of its program:

"When I was playing as a guest in America about fifteen years ago, several actors and friends of literature to whom my intimate relationship with the aspirations of dramatic art were well known, approached me with the request that I give a representation of Ibsen's 'Ghosts' with an American cast. Therefore I resolved to stay in New York a month longer than I had intended to. I succeeded in producing the drama, and the performance created such enthusiasm that the friends of the modern development of the dramatic art begged me to stay in New York, and assured me that as the manager of similar performances I would have a field of action large enough to satisfy my ambition and my artistic aspirations, and also to further my practical interests. Although I was attracted by the idea, and would have liked to comply with the request of my friends, all the more as I had always been much attracted by and deeply interested in this country, it was nevertheless impossible for me to remain here. I was bound by contracts in Europe and, being a father of a family, I hesitated to give up a safe and very lucrative position in order to carry out a plan which though promising was largely speculative.

"Today the situation has changed. Suddenly this most unfortunate European war has freed me from all engagements.

"I have come back to America, accompanied by my daughter, Hedwig Reicher, who, as is well known, is a member of the American stage and able to assist me in my work. Now, after fifteen years, I find that my old friends, as well as the new generation, have still the same longing for serious and true art. I am now at liberty to do what has been asked of me and would take pleasure in giving my services to the good cause. I have promised my friends to create an independent stage in this city, which, like the former 'Theatre Libre' of Antoine in Paris, the 'Freie Buehne' of Otto Brahm in Berlin and the 'Artistic Theatre' of Stanislavski in Moscow, will be open to all lovers of real art who do not go to the theatre for mere pleasure, but feel in their hearts a longing to respond to the call of earnest art. To attain this aim the stage must be wholly independent of the favor or displeasure of the public and the press.

"Since the issuance of my first prospectus last year I had the fortune to secure the support by means of subscriptions of many lovers of the drama, but only two performances were given, 'Elga,' by Gerhart Hauptmann, with Miss Hedwig Reicher in the title rôle, and 'John Gabriel Borkmann,' by Henrik Ibsen, in which I made my first appearance in this country. Both productions were received by the public and the press with great approval. Last year I had the greatest difficulty in finding a theater for special evening performances, but for the coming season I secured the Garden Theatre and engaged a large company of artists, the complete cast to be announced shortly.

"The repertoire, announced annually in advance, will include the most worthy plays of the period. American writers are earnestly invited to contribute to this list. In the first series, now announced, several new American dramatists are represented by interesting contributions. Plays of historical importance will be produced for the first time in the English language and others for the first time in the United States.

"The Modern Stage makes its chief appeal to those interested in the presentation of notable plays with a company of artists, carefully selected and directed, where the company and not its individual members dominate. It is the purpose of the founder to create a repertoire company which shall be used to present plays of every nation, when those plays meet the highest ideal of literature and drama. There will be no general box office sale. Admission is by previous subscription only."

The plays to be seen this season at the Garden are Björnson's "When the New Wine Blooms," Hauptmann's "The Weavers," von Hoffmansthal's "Madonna Dianora," Ibsen's "Rosmersholm," Tchekov's "Unkle Vanja," a three-act comedy by Zoe Atkins, and one-act plays by Theodore Dreiser, David Pinski, and Percival Wilde.

Announcing the Score.

William Courtenay, Robert Fisher, and lots of the other principals of "Under Fire" are great ball fans. There were matinees of the war play at the Hudson Tuesday and Wednesday, which prohibited them from standing at a bulletin board, so this clever method of announcing the score was resorted to: It was arranged that Boston's score should be told by the number of German shells exploded in front of the trench in the third act, while the score of the Phillies was given in the answering shots.

INTRODUCING NUTTY

THEY call him Nutty or Benny at the Gaiety, and he answers to either name, for on the stage he is Nutty Beemer, and in real life he is Benny Sweeney—diminutive, freckled, his mouth brimming with teeth of ivory and gold. Benny is a native of Hog Hill, Yonkers, and a Broadway actor, and proud of both facts. Those who have seen "Young America" will remember him as Art Simpson's friend; those who have not should be informed that he gives a bully performance as a young urchin who, with Art, in the person of Percy Helton, and the dog Jasper form an invincible and irresistible trio.

Benny Sweeney belongs to the realistic school of acting. All he would have to do to make up for his part would be to take off his coat and shoes and stockings, roll up his trousers and step on, for, although he is 29 years old, he doesn't look a day older than 15. Think of it—29 and the father of three babies, whose pictures adorn the edge of his dressing room mirror.

It was only a little while ago that Benny Sweeney was working in a carpet factory in Yonkers. He was a weaver, who worked from 7 o'clock in the morning to 5:30 in the afternoon, and when he had a good week he made as high as $22. And now for an hour's work a day he gets a regular actor's salary. Quite naturally he is enthusiastic about Art and isn't interested in Commerce.

"What do I think about acting?" Benny replied the other day when the question was asked him. And then he went on to give his opinion in a patois characteristic of Hog Hill and similar communities, but impossible to indicate through the rigid medium of typewriter and linotype:

"Pretty soft, I say, pretty soft. I used to get from $18 to $22 a week in the carpet factory working nine and a half hours a day, and now I get a regular salary for working an hour.

"I worked in the factory for ten years. A friend of mine had a theatre in Yonkers and I was a property man. When he put on the play 'Just Boys' he gave me a part something like this. Sam Harris and George Cohan saw me in the show and asked me how I'd like to have a regular job on Broadway, and you bet I grabbed it.

"I was born on Hog Hill, and I still live there. Just now I'm interested in politics. A friend of mine is running for Alderman, and when I'm not acting I'm canvassing for him."

"Benny is the nicest little soul," said one of the young women of the company a little later. "We were afraid at first he might be a bit of a pest, but he's not at all. Instead, he's thoughtful and sunshiny, and we all love him."

Burton Holmes's Record.

Burton Holmes's coming season will be his twenty-third as a lecturer on travel. During this period he and his associates, Oscar Bennett Depue and Louis Francis Brown, have traveled more than two and a half million miles over the entire globe. Out of more than 3,000 lecture dates Mr. Holmes has missed only three—one on account of a blizzard and two because of illness.

What It Costs To See Triangle Plays

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS buys a fine reserved Orchestra seat at any matinee except Saturday.

Evenings,—the same price takes you into the theatre,—but your seat is in the gallery.

FIFTY CENTS (afternoons except Saturdays) buys the best seat in the Orchestra.

ONE DOLLAR is the price of the best Orchestra seats Evenings and Saturday Matinees.

TWO DOLLARS pays for a seat in the first two rows of the balcony.

But—

Whether you pay 25c or $2.00 you will see the best plays you have ever looked at—with a fine orchestra of 40 pieces playing an accompaniment of specially written music.

As for the plays for this week, there are two of the most remarkable dramas yet offered anywhere. Thomas H. Ince presents W. S. Hart in a soul-stirring, gripping drama of the West—"THE DISCIPLE"—a tale so compelling that New York must talk of it.

And—

Then there is a tense enthralling Griffith production—"THE SABLE LORCHA" with Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson—a mysterious tale of a Chinese trading ship—and weird adventures of a learned man who fell among thieves. Your attention will not wander—we guarantee that.

Then for comedy Hale Hamilton in "HER PAINTED HERO"—and Charles Murray in "A GAME OLD KNIGHT"—two rip-roaring farce comedies.

THE MOVIE SPENDTHRIFT'S SEARCH FOR ATMOSPHERE

THE wild chase of motion picture directors for local color and atmospheric detail if trailed by the average layman would be the source within a few months of a wider education than the average Cook's tourist gleans in a year of constant travel. Trailing the atmospheric detail and local color to their lair constitutes a formidable effort on the part of the men who stage the big movie dramas one sees upon entering the Bijou Dream, Idle Hour, and Nickelodeon.

Any one who saw "Trilby" must have wondered how the night scenes of Paris were faked. If they solved the problem at all, they were wrong, for the Equitable Company sent a camera man to Paris, with credentials from the State Department that secured him and his camera permission to focus the principal boulevards during their busy hours. The street and interior scenes in this same picture, wherein Trilby and Svengali are supposedly in Rumania, were taken on the plains of Staten Island, with real denizens of Bleecker, Delancey, and Mulberry Streets as the principal decorative elements.

In "The Fisher Girl," in which the Equitable Corporation is offering Muriel Ostriche, two location experts went to Block Island, where they spent two weeks prevailing upon the local fisher folks to take active part in the production. They did so at $10 per participation, which included the use of their families, huts, and fishing paraphernalia.

Webster Cullison, one of the Equitable's producing geniuses, is at Martinique, in the French West Indies, where, on the very edge of Mont Pelée, he will stage many scenes in "The Labyrinth," in which rugged coast lines, jagged rocks, and abysmal mountain pits are to blend in with Gail Kane's romantic acting.

Charles Seay is in Washington taking scenes in the halls of Congress, the Capitol, White House grounds, Federal, Treasury and other buildings. These scenes are backgrounds for "The Senator," with Charles Ross playing the title rôle, and which Triumph Films will release early in December. It was necessary for Equitable to send a man, referred to by the office as "fixer," to Washington in advance to arrange details and secure permits. When "The Senator" is finally seen on the screen residents of Boise, Idaho; Valdosta, Ga., and other distant towns can take a personally conducted tour of the nation's Capitol and see a modern drama for the one price of admission.

When Thomas A. Wise selected Paul Armstrong's "Blue Grass" for his appearance on the screen, and half the picture was complete, the quandary of securing proper race track detail confronted the director. The big Summer meet was on at Saratoga Springs and thither went Wise and his thirty supporting players. After due process of "getting in good" a race was run one morning at sunrise, the usual clocking hour, and Blue Grass, the movie horse, beat out some of the foremost thoroughbreds at the track. Result—a perfectly good punch was gotten with real race track atmosphere and true-to-life types of touts, jockeys, exercising boys and owners.

Eighteen principals and fifty extra players, all in evening dress, wended their way to Bayside, L. I., several weeks ago, and on the lawn of the palatial residence of Alfred A. Aarons, on Wright Avenue, a lawn fête was staged. The entire lawn, covering half a block, was hung and festooned with vari-colored lanterns. Gorgeously dressed women flitted from table to table serving crippled soldiers—numberless privates and officers from Fort Totten. It was a big scene in a picture that will be released soon. It required four days of work by fifteen builders to put the lawn in proper shape, yet the scene is shown on the screen but an instant.

In "The Fisher Girl," Charles Seay bought, dynamited and scuttled a fishing schooner that had lain in the harbor of Block Island for two years. It was past its usefulness and was more a nuisance than a benefit to the colony. Yet when Seay tried to rid the harbor of it, the former owner suddenly discovered that he was going to use it again and demanded payment in the sum of $100 before he would permit of its destruction.

Walter McNamara, who staged "Human Cargoes," engaged thirteen tough looking characters from the east side for a mob scene, and before he reached the scene where the big fight was to be staged the gang had fallen out over a game of cards and half the gang had chased the other half off.

A train of nine cars and an engine was recently engaged for four hours from the New York Central to be used in a sensational railroad scene. John Ince, who directed the scene, made the arrangements himself with the railroad company. The total bill read:

Nine private cars at $50	$450.00
45 miles at 15c. per mile each	60.75
Victualing one diner	47.60

Add to this several hundred dummies or supernumeraries at $3 per day, fifteen principals ranging from $10 to $50 a day and the star, at perhaps $1,500 a week, and an idea may be had of the expense involved in only one scene.

For filming scenes in Essanay's six-act feature, "The Raven," adapted by George C. Hazelton from Edgar Allan Poe's poem, an exact reproduction of Poe's home, built shortly after the revolutionary period in Fordham, was erected in the Essanay studio yard. An architect was sent to Fordham to draw plans and sketches of the house, which is still standing. Warda Howard, Henry B. Walthall, and Ernest Maupain are some of the principal players who are acting for the picture.

John T. Kelly, one of the favorites of the Weberfields days, has joined the movie brigade. He is a member of the Vitagraph staff of players, and with Kate Price will be starred in Irish pictures.

"Mr. Crex of Monte Carlo" is one of the photo play on which work is being rushed in the Lasky studios at Hollywood. It is being produced under the direction of Frank Reicher, and Carlyle Blackwell is playing the rôle of the young American. The stage of the studio has been transformed into a gambling saloon that is a replica of the Casino at Monte Carlo.

Dorothy Bernard, who appears in the rôle of Lady Babbie in the William Fox production of "The Little Gypsy," from the scenario by Walter Dare, which will be presented at the Academy of Music today, is a daughter of the stage. She was born at Port Elisabeth, South Africa, nineteen years ago. At the outbreak of the Boer war her father decided to move into Johannesburg. The journey was a perilous one. Even little Dorothy's wails failed to induce the Boer farmers to sell Mr. Bernard food when they discovered he was a British settler. At last Johannesburg was reached and a famished, half dead baby was rushed to the hospital. Fortunately for the stage the spark of life was not extinct in little Dorothy, and she was nursed back to health amid the roar of big guns and the rattle of rifles.

Since that time Miss Bernard has traveled all over the English-speaking world appearing in stellar rôles. She is the youngest emotional actress acting for the screen.

QUERIES ON WAR MATTERS

Readers of The Times are particularly requested to read the following before sending queries to the Query Department:

To receive attention every question must bear the name and address of the person sending it. This does not necessarily mean that the name will be published when the question is answered; only the initials will be used if the questioner so desires. No attention will be paid to queries to which the name and address of the sender are not appended.

Hundreds of letters are received by this department, so that it is obviously impossible to answer all of them immediately. In many cases there must be a certain amount of unavoidable delay.

Merchant Vessels and War.

EDWARD A. NICHOL.—Will you kindly answer the following questions: Prior to, at the beginning of, the European war, or even subsequently, could England have seized German ships and cargoes in British ports, that were owned by individual Germans or corporations not subsidized by the German Government, without making reparation or compensating the owners therefor? Could the United States, according to international law, The Hague Tribunal, and the London Convention, as a retaliatory measure for loss of life on the Lusitania, libel and seize German privately owned ships without due compensation to the owners for loss of ships and cargo?

The "Convention Relative to the Status of Enemy Merchant Ships at the Outbreak of Hostilities" of The Hague Peace Conference of 1907, reads in part as follows: "1. When a merchant ship belonging to one of the belligerent powers is at the commencement of hostilities in an enemy port, it is desirable that it should be allowed to depart freely, either immediately, or after a reasonable number of days of grace, and to proceed, after being furnished with a pass, direct to its port of destination or any other port indicated. The same rule should apply in the case of a ship which has left its last port of departure before the commencement of the war and entered a port belonging to the enemy while still ignorant that hostilities had broken out. 2. A merchant ship unable, owing to circumstances of force majeure, to leave the enemy port within the period contemplated in the above article, or which was not allowed to leave, cannot be confiscated. The belligerent may only detain it, without payment of compensation, but subject to the obligation of restoring it after the war, or requisition it on payment of compensation. 3. Enemy ships which left their last port of departure before the commencement of the war, and are encountered on the high seas while still ignorant of the outbreak of hostilities, cannot be confiscated. They are only liable to detention on the understanding that they shall be restored after the war without compensation, or to be requisitioned, or even destroyed, on payment of compensation, but in such case provision must be made for the safety of the persons on board, as well as the security of the ship's papers. After touching at a port in their own country or at a neutral port, these ships are subject to the laws and customs of maritime war. 4. Enemy cargo on board the vessels referred to in Articles 1 and 2 is likewise liable to be detained and restored after the termination of the war without payment of compensation, or to be requisitioned on payment of compensation, with or without the ship. The same rule applies in the case of cargo on board the vessels referred to in Article 3. 5. The present convention does not affect merchant ships whose build shows that they are intended for conversion into warships. 6. The provisions of the present convention do not apply except between contracting powers, and then only if all the belligerents are parties to the convention. 8. Non-signatory powers may adhere to the present convention."

The United States did not sign this convention. Germany and Russia signed under reservation of Article 3 and of the second paragraph of Article 4. China and Nicaragua did not sign. In comment upon the refusal of the United States to sign this convention, not because it was too stringent but because it was not stringent enough, James Brown Scott, technical delegate of the United States to the Second Hague Conference and author of "The Hague Peace Conferences," says in his book:

"The convention as a whole was a compromise between those who believed in the existence of a right and those who refused to recognize the legal validity of the custom, which has grown up in recent years. As in most compromises the result is unsatisfactory. The convention cannot be called progressive, for it questions a custom which seems generally established, and its adoption would seem to sanction less liberal and enlightened practice. The United States delegation, therefore, refused to sign the convention, and its acceptance has not been recommended by the Department of State."

Neither the Declaration of Paris (1856) or the Declaration of London (1909) takes up this question.

German Ammunition.

CHARLES ELWOOD.—Will you be good enough to let me know whether the United States Government or any official connected with the United States Government requested the German Government to stop the shipment of ammunition to the Spanish possessions when we were at war with Spain; also if the German Government complied with this request?

This question was answered in detail, in reply to a query from H. King, in THE TIMES of Oct. 10.

Italian Reservists.

DAILY READER.—I have mail here for an Italian reservist who left New York on the 21st of August, and I do not know where to reach him. Can you let me know to whom I could send the mail?

All such inquiries should be made of the Italian Consul direct.

Garments for Soldiers.

M. C. M.—Will you kindly reprint information as to garments for soldiers, with directions for making the same?

Following are the directions for making various articles for the soldiers, issued by the American Red Cross Society:

Wristlets.—Use any soft, dark wool, four No. 14 steel needles; cast on about sixty stitches, (twenty on each of the three needles,) rib for nine inches; cast off loosely.

Heelless Socks.—Make out of Scotch yarn; use bone needles; cast on sixty stitches; knit two, purl two, until the sock is seventeen inches long; knit across plain; knit across purl; knit across plain; knit across purl; knit five, narrow one, every fifth stitch to end of needle; knit across purl; knit across plain; knit across purl; knit four, narrow one every fourth stitch to end of needle; knit across purl; knit across plain; knit across purl; knit three, narrow one every third stitch to end of needle; knit across purl; knit across plain; knit across purl; knit two, narrow one every second stitch to end of needle; knit across purl; knit across plain; knit across purl; knit one, narrow one every other stitch to end of needle; knit across purl; knit across plain; knit across purl; knit across, narrow one every other stitch to end of needle; knit across purl; bind off.

Jelly-bag socks: Use steel needles; cast on eighty-four stitches, knit forty rows of two purl, two plain; then six rows of four plain and two purl, and one row purl; continue these six rows and one row until there are eighteen rows of purl; then knit twelve rows of plain and begin the toe.

Abdominal belt: Two number 13 steel needles, two number 9 bone needles, gray knitting yarn; cast on from 160 to 200 stitches on number 13 needles; knit three inches ribbed (knit two, purl two;) knit on to bone needles, and knit eight inches plain; knit on to steel needles and rib for three inches; cast on and off very loosely; sew up.

Helmet or Balaklava cap: Two number 4 bone needles, knitting yarn; cast on forty-eight stitches and knit two flaps of forty-eight stitches each, two inches deep, of two and two rib. Then join the flaps by knitting on to four needles. Knit ten inches of two and two. Cast off thirty stitches to leave a space of two and one-half inches deep and four inches wide; then cast on thirty stitches again and knit as before six inches before shaping the top.

Scarf: Two number 4 knitting needles; use any soft dark wool; cast on sixty stitches; knit plain (always slipping the first stitch) until the scarf measures forty-five inches; cast off; add a fringe at each end.

Warriors on Leave.

L. W.—Will you kindly tell me whether a sailor or soldier serving in this war would be allowed to visit his friends or relatives in a neutral country, provided he was given leave, and also provided he did not enter the neutral country in uniform and was, of course, unarmed? Is any one now engaged in the war allowed to wear civilian's clothes when on leave of absence? Would the authorities of the neutral country allow any soldier or sailor from one of the warring nations to enter their country if they knew it?

Soldiers and sailors from the belligerent countries may visit friends in neutral countries when on leave of absence, and are not barred out by the laws of the neutral country. Regulations as to uniform, &c., are matters of separate ruling by the different armies.

Warsaw.

H. R. H.—Will you kindly give a brief description of the City of Warsaw, giving its status in the past and at the time of its capture by the Teutonic allies?

The precise date of the foundation of Warsaw is not known, but it is supposed that Conrad, Duke of Mazovia, built a castle on the site in the ninth century. Casimir the Just is supposed to have fortified it in the eleventh century, but the city is not mentioned in any annals before 1224. It was the residence of the Dukes of Mazovia until 1526, when it was annexed to Poland, as the dynasty of the Dukes of Mazovia had become extinct. When Poland and Lithuania were united, Warsaw became the royal residence. Sigismund Augustus made it the real capital of Poland in 1550, and from 1572 the election of the Kings of Poland took place on the field of Wola on the outskirts of the city. Possession of the city was often disputed by the Swedes, Russians, Brandenburgers, and Austrians. Warsaw suffered much during the war with Charles XII of Sweden, who took it in 1702, but peace the next year freed it again. In 1763-4 Russian intrigues led to the election of Stanislaus Poniatowski, which resulted in 1773 in the first partition of Poland. In 1794 it was captured again by Russia, but next year in the third partition of Poland, Warsaw fell to Prussia. It was occupied by Napoleon in 1806, and after the peace of Tilsit in 1807 it was made the capital of the independent duchy of Warsaw. It was seized by Austria in 1809, but soon became independent again. Russia finally took possession of it in 1813. In 1830 occurred the unsuccessful insurrection which lasted nearly a year. After terrible bloodshed, Warsaw was captured by Paskievitch. Great severities were practiced, executions, banishment, and confiscation of property, and the city remained until 1856 under strict military rule. In 1863 another insurrection was ruthlessly put down, with exiles to Siberia on a hundred-of-scale. Russian officials were installed, the Russian language made obligatory in all official and legal acts, even the name of Poland was abolished. The serfs were liberated, and rioting and disorder took place in all parts of the city.

Modern Warsaw is very beautiful. In mediæval times a centre of trade between the East and Western Europe, it is now one of the most important commercial cities in Eastern Europe. It is beautifully situated on the left bank of the Vistula, standing on a terrace 120 feet above the river. The suburb of Praga on the right bank is connected with Warsaw by two bridges, built in 1863 at great cost. The iron and steel industries are considerable, and it is also a centre for grain, leather, and coal. The population in 1901 was 756,426, of which more than 25,000 were Germans and one-third Jews.

Munitions and Accidents.

WILLIAM B. G.—Has Germany ever furnished arms to any nation at war?

If a soldier is killed in battle is that an accident?

The first question has been frequently discussed in this department. Germany has repeatedly supplied arms to belligerent countries, among them the Balkan States, Russia during the Russo-Japanese war, and Great Britain during the Boer war.

Technically speaking, an accident is "an occurrence due neither to design nor negligence." An accident is an unforeseen event, a sudden misfortune or loss, an unexpected occurrence with unfavorable consequences. The killing of a soldier in battle hardly comes under this head.

Arms and Ammunition.

JOSEPH COMSTEDT.—In one of your recent publications you published a list of American manufacturers who were already manufacturing or had orders for the manufacture of shrapnel, or contemplated doing so. Will you republish this list?

R. CLARK BELDEN.—I should like to know the number of ammunition factories in this country now and before the war, their capacity, number of employes, and the number dependent upon these men for their daily existence.

The list of manufacturers of war munitions referred to in the first question was published in these columns on Sept. 19. The list gave the number of men employed in the factories at the time of the Bridgeport strike. If the Savage Arms Company, E. W. Bliss Company, and Niles-Bement-Pond Company are added, it furnishes a list of the principal arms and ammunition factories in this country before the European war with their complement of men.

It would be impossible to give a complete list of all concerns engaged in the manufacture of ammunition at the present time. In connection with the Bridgeport arms strike, it was said that every machine factory in New England had engaged in the manufacture of munitions since the war. In May Senator Curry, President of the Canadian Car and Foundry Company, estimated that there were then fifty companies in the United States and then in Canada which were manufacturing shells. In Bridgeport alone there are said to be 20,000 persons now making munitions who before the war were engaged in other work.

British Casualties.

W. TANCRED.—In answer to a correspondent you make the statement that the total British casualties to July 8 were estimated at 428,000. What is the authority for these figures? The London Times's weekly edition of July 30 says that Mr. Asquith stated that the total naval casualties up to July 20 were 9,106, and military casualties up to July 18, 321,889. That makes a total of 330,995, almost 100,000 less than the figures furnished.

The estimate of 428,000 was published as being compiled from "official sources" before Mr. Asquith's figures were made public in this country. His statement was published here on July 27, and the answer to which you refer was given before that date. The French estimates compiled by the French Ministry of War give the number of British casualties up to May 31 as 471,000. This will illustrate the discrepancy in any figures by those from the highest authority.

Animals as Symbols of War.

J. E. REFFI.—Will you be kind enough to tell me with which wild animals I can symbolize the United States, England, Germany, France, Austria, and Russia, considering the present world situation?

Appropriate symbols for the different countries would be very apt to vary with one's sympathies in the present conflict. Most of the powers mentioned have adopted, or been apportioned, some bird or animal which represents them in normal times. The United States, Germany, Russia, and Austria have chosen the eagle, though the United States eagle is content with only one head. In drawings and cartoons Russia is often represented by a bear, France by a crowing cock, and England by a lion.

English Support of France.

E. W. STONE.—Please advise whether England definitely promised to support France before Belgium was invaded or after. Some authorities state that England had promised to ally herself against Germany on Aug. 2, and that Belgium was not invaded until the morning of Aug. 3, and only after England declined to remain neutral. Please state if this is correct.

A lengthy discussion cannot be entered into here. You are referred to "The Diplomatic History of the War," by M. P. Price, for full discussion, with reproduction of all documents, &c. As far back as 1912 there was an unofficial understanding between the English and French Governments that "in the event of an attack upon France by a third power, threatening the peace of Europe, the British and French Governments should at once discuss what measures they would take in common." Soon after the French fleet was concentrated in the Mediterranean, leaving the French coast unguarded. Sir Edward Grey referred to this in his speech of Aug. 3 in the House of Commons, when he held that England was morally bound to support France because by this unofficial understanding England had tacitly acquiesced in the concentration of the French fleet in the Mediterranean. On Aug. 3 Sir Edward announced that the country would defend the French coast, and on the same day King Albert appealed to King George to protect Belgium. Germany declared war on Belgium following the rejection of her ultimatum and immediately invaded Belgian territory, and England declared war on Germany following the invasion of Belgium, and promised troops to the number of 100,000. On Aug. 2 Sir Edward Grey had told M. Cambon, the French Ambassador, that "if the German fleet comes into the Channel or the North Sea to undertake hostile operations against the French coast or shipping, the British fleet will give all the protection in its power." But the French did not look upon this as a definite alliance with them.

Submarines at Constantinople.

C. B. PETERS.—Did submarines approach within range of Constantinople within sixty days after April 6, and are they classed as warships?

On May 27 last a British submarine, E-11, entered the harbor and discharged a torpedo at a transport alongside the arsenal. Submarines are classed as war vessels.

Italians Liable to Military Service.

STEPHEN YATES.—I have an Italian working for me who is 23 years of age. He has been in this country for four years and taken out his first papers. He thinks that he is forced to return to Italy to fight, as otherwise he will not be able to visit his parents in Italy until after he is 55. Is this a fact?

The Italian law is peculiar in this respect. It recognizes naturalization of its citizens in this country, but holds them liable for military service unless specially excused. Our Government holds that naturalized American citizens cannot be called upon to perform military or other obligations which had not actually accrued before their emigration; but the United States Government has always deemed it advisable to call the attention of naturalized Italians to the position in which they will be placed if they voluntarily return to Italy. The United States has, so far, no such immigration treaty with Italy as exists between it and other European powers. Up till now the naturalization of an Italian subject in a foreign country without the consent of the Italian Government is no bar to the liability to military service.

The Battle of Riga.

CAMPERDOWNE.—Will you please tell me the truth of the battle of Riga in the present war. What has taken place in the Bay of Riga?

J. HILB.—Will you kindly answer the following question: How many German vessels were sunk in the reported naval battle in the Gulf of Riga?

According to the official reports from London and Petrograd, the German fleet, said to number nine battleships, twelve cruisers and a flotilla of destroyers and mine-sweepers, forced its way into the Gulf of Riga on Aug. 21 and was defeated in a battle with Russian and British forces. The Germans lost their battle cruiser Moltke, three smaller cruisers, seven torpedo boats, and four barges loaded with troops. An attempt was made by the invaders to make a descent on Pernigel, on the east shore of the bay, thirty-five miles north of Riga, but they were repulsed by Russian troops. Some months ago—on June 5—a strong German fleet appeared in the Middle Baltic and exchanged shots with the Russian fleet near the Gulf of Riga.

Dumdum Bullets.

E. R.—Is it true that England refused to sign the article providing that bullets unnecessarily inflicted unnecessary pain should not be used, while all the other nations did sign?

The United States is the only nation now remaining outside the operation of the declaration barring the use of dumdum bullets. These bullets are not used, however, in the United States Army. Great Britain, having at first refused to sign the convention, and reserving the right to use dumdum bullets "only against uncivilized peoples," acceded to the declaration at the Second Hague Conference, in 1907. Dumdum bullets were used in Egypt in 1895, but not in the Boer War. Great Britain, under whose authority they were first manufactured at the Dumdum Arsenal in Bengal, India, urged the right to use them in warfare with "uncivilized peoples" because ordinary clean-shot bullets did not secure "sufficient stopping power" in fighting with fanatic tribes.

London and Berlin.

F. D.—Will you please tell me whether London is a fortified city, and, if so, how many forts it has? I wish to know the same about Berlin.

Neither London nor Berlin is a fortified city. The old quarters of Berlin—Alt-Berlin Alt-Kölln, Friedrich-Werder, and Neu-Kölln—were originally inclosed in fortifications.

Jews in German Armies.

L. M. and E. F.—Will you kindly settle the following dispute: A claims that before the outbreak of the present war a Jew could not become a commissioned officer in the German Army; B claims that there were no laws to that effect, and that there were officers of the Jewish religion in the German Army before the outbreak of the present war. Can you give me information on this matter?

There was no law or regulation in the German Army or in Germany which prevented Jews from becoming officers in the German Army. It was only the unwillingness of German officers to have Jews as comrades which acted as a restriction against the promotion of Jews. This unwillingness on the part of the other officers was especially strong and effective in the Prussian Army. There were, nevertheless, commissioned officers of the Jewish faith in the German armies before the war broke out, although they were found in greater numbers in the other States than in Prussia. Practically the same condition obtained in regard to Jewish officers as in regard to officers who were not of noble birth.

Italian Reservists in America.

C. K.—Kindly inform me whether an Italian subject, who has served in the Italian Army and is still of military age, but who has become naturalized as a citizen of the United States, is still liable to military duty in Italy if he returns to his native country?

American citizenship does not exempt an Italian-born subject who returns to Italy from military duty if he comes within the ages limits prescribed. If he has come to the United States before the age of 16 his military liability in Italy expires—if he becomes an American citizen—at the age of 22; otherwise he is liable to military service, if he returns to Italy, until he is 39. There are various points of detail in regard to such military liability, however, which cannot be explained without specific knowledge of the age, military service, &c., of the questioner. All such detailed inquiries should be made, in person or by writing, direct to the Italian Consul.

Gradisca.

ANTONIO LUCCIA. — Will you please inform a daily reader if it was officially reported that the city of Gradisca was captured by the Italians and is now in their possession?

A dispatch from Rome under date of June 11 announced that the Italian troops had solidly established themselves in the city of Gradisca, and that they had entered the city some days before.

Canadian Troops.

J. H. P.—How many troops has Canada sent to England to be placed at her disposal since the outbreak of war? Will any more be sent?

Exact figures are wanting. Canada is said to have sent 70,000 men, and to have 70,000 more in training.

German Government.

H. S. B.—Will you be good enough to answer the following questions, and if it is not asking too much will you refer me to authorities on the subject? Is it necessary to have the signature of the German Kaiser and Chancellor to any proposed measure to become a law before such measure is voted on by the Bundesrat? Is it possible for the Reichstag to vote on a measure to become a law before the Bundesrat has passed the same? Is it possible for any member of the Reichstag to introduce a measure to become a law independent of any member of the Bundesrat? If a law is passed by the Bundesrat and Reichstag that is objectionable to the Kaiser can he be compelled to sign it, or can he veto it if he wishes? Has William II. as King of Prussia absolute control over the military and diplomatic departments of Prussia? Are the members of the Reichstag directly elected by the votes of the people, similar to our Congressmen? By whom are the members of the Bundesrat elected or appointed, and for how long a term? Are there any Socialists in the Bundesrat? Has any citizen of Germany more than one vote at an election or are there any classes of citizens whose votes count more than others?

The Emperor of Germany, as Emperor, promulgates the laws and supervises their execution, but has no veto. All official acts must be countersigned by the Chancellor, who takes the responsibility for all such acts, not to the Legislature, but to the Emperor himself. Theoretically the two bodies of the German Parliament—Bundesrat and Reichstag—are equal in the power of initiating legislation, but in reality all important legislation is initiated by the Bundesrat; in the Reichstag the rule of the House regulates initiation. The members of the Reichstag are all "uninstructed." They are elected by universal manhood suffrage—all males over twenty-five years of age may vote except paupers, naval and military men, bankrupts, and those personally ineligible. The members of the Bundesrat are chosen by the Governments of the various States; they represent the Governments as such, and vote as State units; they are appointed for each session; the Bundesrat meets once a year. There are fifty-eight members of the Bundesrat and their position in the Imperial Parliament is like that of Ambassadors from foreign States. As King of Prussia, controlling the seventeen Prussian votes in the Bundesrat, William II. has great power in the Imperial Parliament; as Emperor he is in absolute control of the military and diplomatic departments of the empire, except that the consent of the Bundesrat is required for making "offensive" war, and the Chancellor must countersign all his decrees; the Emperor appoints all Ambassadors, public Ministers, &c. Different systems of voting prevail in the management of the State affairs of the various parts of the empire; each State, except the "Reichsland" of Alsace-Lorraine and the Grand Duchies of Mecklenburg-Schwerin and Mecklenburg-Strelitz, has its separate representative assembly to take charge of its internal affairs. So many books on Germany are being read at present that it is impossible to refer you to any one or two authorities, but the encyclopedias will always be found to contain such facts. The Encyclopaedia Britannica (1911) and the New International Encyclopedia (1915) are recent.

GREENWICH VILLAGE RESALE

Investors Buy Upper West Side Apartment House—Many Suburban Sales Recorded.

A convincing indication of the marked increase in the automobile industry, of which many evidences have been shown within the last few months, was given yesterday in this city by the announcement that the Chevrolet Motor Company of New York has acquired the easterly block front on Eleventh Avenue between Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Streets. Most of the property formed part of the old Chanler estate, now owned by the heirs, and this has been taken on long leaseholds, while parts of the plot, which runs back to a depth of 200 feet in each street, have been purchased.

The Chevrolet Motor plant now covers the block front directly to the north, between Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Streets, and, with the improvement of the new block front with a modern factory and service building, the facilities of the company in this city will be more than doubled.

In addition to this deal, the company its making large additions to its plants at Tarrytoyn and at Flint, Mich. Within a short time the Chevrolet Company expects to be turning out 800 cars a day.

Another Greenwich Village Deal.

Mrs. W. Forbes Morgan, Jr., has purchased from Richard S. Elliot 52 West Ninth Street, a three-story dwelling, with a two-story dwelling at the rear of the lot. The site measures 25 by 93.11 feet, and is located between Fifth and Sixth Avenues. Mrs. Morgan plans extensive alterations to the houses.

The selling company acquired the property, together with the Rosebury, adjoining, last year in foreclosure proceedings.

Investor Buys Heights Flats.

An investing client of John R. and Oscar L. Foley has purchased from the South Side Construction Company 269 to 275 Audubon Avenue, southeast corner of 179th Street, two five-story new-law houses, each on plot 50 by 85. Each house contains 22 apartments, and there are three stores.

Bronx Sales.

Mrs. A. M. Harrington has sold to Ornstein Brothers 1,225 Union Avenue, a three-story dwelling on lot 20 by 122.7, near 168th Street. The property was given in part payment for the 50-foot plot at 981 Intervale Avenue.

William M. Moore has sold to Hyman Berman Building Company the plot, 100 by 106, on the west side of Morris Avenue, 47 feet north of 183d Street. Plans are now being prepared for the improvement of the site with five-story apartment houses, for which the seller has agreed to advance building loans.

The four-story flat at 1,015 Trinity Avenue, northwest corner of 165th Street, has been sold by Joseph A. Wasserman for the Argonaut Realty Company to an investor, and the same broker has sold for the S. Steinmetz Construction Company a plot 92 by 118 on the west side of Bryant Avenue, twenty-five feet south of 179th Street, to the Trojan Building Company for improvement with two five-story apartment houses.

Long Island City.

Hammond & Fay have sold at Long Island City a two-family frame house on the east side of Ninth Avenue, 237 feet north of Jackson Avenue, for Karl Havlina to Kate Keany, and a plot 30 by 100 on the east side of Lent Street, between Jackson and Park Avenues, Corona, for William F. McCaulley to James and Annie Callan.

REMARKABLE INDUSTRIAL AND RESIDENTIAL GROWTH OF THE BOROUGH OF QUEENS SHOWN BY BUILDING DEPARTMENT STATISTICS

Over a Million Dollars Involved in One Day's Real Estate Transactions—Twenty-Five Industrial Concerns Have Located in the Borough Since April 1, 1915.

Multiple Family Apartment Building in Astoria Occupying Entire Block Front.

MORE than $1,000,000 involved in real estate transactions in a single day, as shown by the records of the Queens County Clerk's Office during the latter part of September, gives some indication of the immensity of the development that is taking place in the biggest borough in New York City. While this enormous sum is not invested every day, it is no infrequent occurrence to see the daily figures rise to the hundreds of thousands.

Twenty-five industrial concerns have definitely located in Queens Borough since April 1 of this year. This is at the rate of a new factory each week. Of further significance is the fact that during this same period ten plants established previous to this year have built extensive additions. Enterprising industrial activity of this character during a year reputed to be commercially unsteady is especially noteworthy.

Nor has all of the development been along industrial lines. Immense sums have been expended in the erection of dwellings and apartment houses.

The figures for the first nine months of 1915, just reported by the Queens Building Bureau, show that plans have been filed for 4,299 buildings, estimated to cost $15,297,903. This is 564 more buildings than in the same period of 1914.

An official of the Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens, discussing the real estate and business prospects of the borough, said yesterday:

"That Queens is becoming the mecca of big industrial business is not surprising, for its economic advantage has made it stand out strikingly in contrast to other less favored communities. While many cities throughout the country have been coaxing, cajoling and even "bribing" industrial concerns to locate within their borders, the record of such cities within any given similar period has been uninteresting in comparison with Queens. And let it be remembered that were this huge borough of New York City regarded as a city by itself, it would rank seventeenth in the United States in value of its manufactured products.

"Any of the executives of the manufacturing establishments now permanently settled in Queens Borough will quickly tell you that the determining factors in choosing their present location were the availability of a site of ample proportions with shipping facilities by rail and water, proximity to the large wholesale and retail centres in Manhattan, and an adequate labor supply close at hand.

"It has been these factors that have induced some of the largest manufacturers of their kind in the world to establish in the borough—the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, the American Ever-Ready Company, the New York Consolidated Card Company, the Brett Lithographing Company, and the Sterling Gum Company. Many large automobile manufacturers have established here their assembling and service headquarters, notably Brewster & Co., the Ford Company, the Studebaker, the Pierce-Arrow, the Packard, and the Simplex Company.

"Manufacturing concerns of a variety that is surprising have come into the borough within the past few years. A glance through the classified list of manufacturers gives one the impression that the borough is really self-contained. The advantage accruing to the borough as a part of New York City gives it the advantage of the great port and railroad facilities through which raw materials can be readily obtained.

"One of the greatest assets possessed by Queens is its 200 miles of water frontage and thirty-five miles of docks and bulkheads, practically all of which is available for shipping and for future developments. Next in importance, perhaps, is the New York Connecting Railroad, whose steel arch bridge over Hell Gate has but recently been joined.

"This railroad, which forms a part of the Pennsylvania and New York, New Haven & Hartford systems, and joins Queens Borough by direct rail route to all New England and the West, will curve through the borough, giving to the business men of Queens another big leading string to help them in their rapid strides toward industrial supremacy.

"Three terminals of the State Barge Canal have been located in the Borough of Queens—two on the East River and one on Flushing Bay. These terminals will place all of the advantages of the $100,000,000 State Barge Canal at the disposal of the shippers of Queens Borough, and will materially reduce the cost of transportation of raw materials and manufactured products.

"The Queensboro Terminals, located on the East River, receive and deliver freight each day for every railroad in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, and the steamship lines on Long Island Sound, the Hudson River, and the Atlantic Coast.

"The importance of Newtown Creek to manufacturers is apparent, for it carries a tonnage valued at over $225,000,000. The chief commodities handled on this waterway are copper ore and its products, petroleum, lumber, coal, chemicals, and building materials. The Long Island Railroad branches over the borough and is available for sidings into the factory yards. Accessibility to Manhattan over the Queensboro Bridge furnishes easy facilities for trucking.

"With the establishment of an industrial colony must always come the demand for homes. It has logically followed in Queens, and the figures of building development for the first nine months illustrate the significance of this fact. As an added stimulus to home building have come the new rapid transit lines built and now under construction in the borough.

"The rapid transit work already completed and under construction totals nearly $10,000,000. It means that Queens is being inseparably linked by the dual subway system of New York City, which will bind her more closely into the family of boroughs. Queens has always been the biggest of this family, in area, but has lacked the strength that adequate rapid transit facilities afford.

"With the acquisition of these new means of travel, the building of homes and apartments should develop at even a greater rate than at present. It promises an unprecedented period of activity that will be of advantage not only to the borough, but to all of New York City. Queens furnishes relief to the congestion in Manhattan by making available 'homes with outdoors,' where the price of land is low and transit is good.

"Queens is not cramped by narrow natural limitations. The density of population of Queens Borough today is five persons to each acre, in contrast to Manhattan, with its 180 persons to the acre.

"Queens has been essentially the borough of small homes, because of the cheapness of the land. An interesting feature of the development, however, has taken place in certain areas of restricted property and high-class building sections, built up entirely with one-family dwellings ranging in cost from $5,000 to $50,000 each.

"The occupants, who are usually the owners, have come mostly from Manhattan, desiring the privacy of a home in a detached dwelling, and securing better accommodations for less money. These sections include such locations as Flushing, Jamaica, Kew Gardens, Forest Hills, Elmhurst, Corona, Whitestone, Bayside, College Point, Hollis, Queens, Richmond Hill, Woodhaven, Far Rockaway, Rockaway Park, &c.

"Five years ago Queens hardly knew the presence of an apartment house, whereas there are hundreds in all parts of the borough today. The official count of the Tenement House Department in 1914 showed there were 23,196 apartments in Queens, containing 92,379 rooms. This number included 776 four-room apartments, 532 five-room apartments, 224 six-room apartments, 183 seven-room apartments, and 25 eight-room apartments.

"A gigantic pent-up metropolis, through the aid of bridges and transit, has burst its bonds, and a deluge of trade and population is pouring into Queens. The construction of immense plants is drawing masses of workers from all parts of the country, who must be housed and fed and supplied with living necessities, thus creating demands for new and more local forms of business.

"It means that apartments and homes must be scattered through all the adjacent districts, where land is inexpensive and transit facilities adequate.

INCREASING VALUES ON PARK AVENUE

Apartment House Demand in Choice Blocks Leads to Higher Assessments.

FIFTH AVENUE STATIONARY

Nearly $1,000 a Front Foot Added in the Lower Fifties— Colony Club Increase.

Park Avenue's influence upon the realty as well as the residential conditions of Manhattan Island has been clearly recognized within the last few years. That the demand for splendid apartments on that broad thoroughfare has by no means ceased is evidenced by eight or ten new houses on and adjacent to the avenue, chiefly in the lower section.

The blocks south of Fifty-ninth Street, since the completion of the railroad yard work and the artistic adornment of several of those blocks, have witnessed some of the finest building operations on the avenue. The end is not yet, for work is now under way to improve three block fronts, all on the west side, respectively from Fiftieth to Fifty-first, Fifty-first to Fifty-second, and Fifty-third to Fifty-sixth Streets, with big apartments for occupancy next year.

Park Avenue, naturally, can only furnish a limited amount of ground area, and as nearly all the desirable sites are either occupied or closely held by investment interests it is not surprising to see that this lively demand for good building sites has added considerably to property values. This phase of Park Avenue has been strikingly exemplified in the new assessment rates for 1916, in which Park Avenue stands out conspicuously as the only great residential thoroughfare where values have been materially increased. On the west side West End Avenue duplicates these conditions in some degree, but not to the same extent as Park Avenue.

Another interesting feature of this upper east side home area is that while Fifth Avenue north of Fifty-ninth Street has not only shown no change in values, but in some cases a decrease, everything on Park Avenue from the Fifties to Eightieth Street has gone up in land values. The greatest increase is seen as one gets nearer the Grand Central Station zone, where ground values have advanced from $750 to nearly $1,000 a front foot.

The Goelet estate block, on the west side, Fifty-second to Fifty-third Street, 200.10 by 100 on Fifty-second Street and 60.6 on Fifty-third Street, has advanced in land value from $415,000 last year to $613,000. The northwest corner of Fifty-second Street, 100 by 100.5, is placed at $360,000, an increase of $95,000, or $23,750 for a twenty-five-foot lot. The land value of the Montana apartment, on the easterly block front, 184.8 on Fifty-second Street by 165 on Fifty-third Street, has advanced $230,000, the new assessment being $970,000. With the building the total is $2,850,000.

An increase of nearly 100 per cent. has been made in the westerly block front, Fifty-fifth to Fifty-sixth Street, 66.8 feet deep, now being excavated for a seventeen-story apartment. In 1915 the rating was $308,000, and for 1916 it stands at $610,000. The easterly block between Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Street shows a large advance. In marked contrast to the two fine apartments on the remainder of the block front is the old-fashioned saloon on the northeast corner, 25.5 by 70. Less than a full lot, it has been advanced $20,000, to $64,000 from $44,000. The seventy-five-foot, twelve-story apartment adjoining advances in land value from $115,000 to $220,000, while the Fifty-fourth Street corner building represents a land value of $365,000, against $280,000 last year.

The following table of the 1915 and 1916 assessments for some of the important buildings on the avenue will indicate the general ratio of change in different localities. As most of the properties mentioned are big apartments, the total value is given, but the increase is solely due to land value.

81st Street, n. e. cor.	715,000	715,000

The last two mentioned show no change. The Seventy-ninth Street plot is occupied by the seventeen-story house purchased by the late Mrs. Morris K. Jesup. Its land value, however, is raised $25,000, being placed at $325,000 for 1916, but the total is unchanged, as that amount is credited to building depreciation. The Eighty-first Street corner, a thirteen-story house, remains the same on both land and building.

The Colony Club plot at Sixty-second Street has advanced in land value $55,000 in a year. It is 100.5 by 125. With the new building, although uncompleted, the total assessment is placed at $975,000.

SUBWAY TICKET SALES SHOW THE CITY'S CHANGING CENTRES

Figures of the subway travel for the year ended June 30 last show another considerable increase in the number of tickets sold. The total was 345,585,749, or 1,016,429 a day, an increase for the year of 5,172,646. Satisfaction at this increase however is modified by the fact that it is not as rapid an increase as it has been in years past. Taking the daily average it appears that the increase of 1913 over 1912 was 72,053, of 1914 over 1913 38,063, and of 1915 over 1914 only 15,214.

Looking at the rises the steady progress of the Times Square district stands out clearly. Times Square station attained the extraordinary figures for a local stop of 14,307,694, or 42,081 a day, and, for the first time, this year surpassed the express station at Fourteenth Street. Fiftieth Street also increased, and, taking the two stations together as embracing the Times Square district, it appears that in the year 21,014,455 persons bought their tickets at them, and that this was an increase of 1,225,878 over the preceding year. It is a fair assumption that for every one who starts a subway trip at a station another ends a journey, and this means that each day of the year 123,614 persons either entered or left the subway at these two busy stations.

Grand Central has made a considerable advance this year and now sells annually 20,494,333 tickets, an advance of 942,928 over the total for 1914, but it is far behind Atlantic Avenue, one of the gateways of Manhattan from Brooklyn, which sells annually 23,309,340 tickets, or 751,567 more than in 1914. Perhaps its great increase may explain partly the curious decline in Fulton Street. This is, of course, the station for the Hudson tubes and has always been one of the busiest on the island, yet last year it declined for the first time by 151,429 to 16,230,317.

No one can really tell what it is that diverts the streams of traffic, but the temptation is irresistible to read together the fall-off in the takings at Brooklyn Bridge with the sudden great increase at Canal Street. Thus at the bridge there were sold last year only 17,190,309 tickets, or 466,939 less than in 1914, while Canal Street has the largest increase of the entire subway system of 905,910. This amounts to 2,664 a day and is an increase of 6,806 since 1913. Probably it is caused by the diversion to the Williamsburg Bridge of much Brooklyn travel. Passengers from the Centre Street Loop alight at Canal Street and walk from the Bowery to Broadway to take the subway uptown.

Another prominent feature of the report is the steady decline of that part of the city between Worth and Eighteenth Streets. In the last two years Worth Street has lost a daily traffic of 393 persons, which is explained by the change in the location of the great wholesale districts, while in the six stations from Spring to Twenty-third Street there was last year a decline of 1,157,103 passengers.

Morningside Heights, too, shows a considerable weakness, its three station, 103d, 110th, and Columbia University recording a fall-off of 178,340 in the year, which may be set off against the steady growth of Washington Heights, where one station, 181st Street, has the excellent growth of 1,050 a day, while still further to the north there is a satisfactory increase at Dyckman Street.

On the other side of the city the Bronx branch shows a decline from 110th to Third Avenue, although beyond that the increase of former years has continued. The stations at Lenox Avenue and 135th and 125th Streets began to develop weakness in 1914, but it is only this year that 116th and 110th Streets have been affected. Considering all that has been said of the congested transfer at 149th Street and Third Avenue, it is odd to find that the Third Avenue station has actually lost 374 passengers a day, but no fault can be found with Simpson Street, which has progressed so well that it can claim 959 more passengers every day this year than last.

REAL ESTATE NEWS

SOUTH AMERICAN REALTY.

Market Conditions No Better in the Argentine Than in the U. S.

That real estate conditions are no better in South America than they are in the United States is shown by the following report of William H. Lough, a special agent of the Department of Commerce, entitled "Financial Development in South American Countries":

"There is one class of credits outstanding in the Argentine which has not been liquidated, and which it is expected has still to face a painful period of liquidation. This consists of credits based upon land holdings. Prior to 1913 land values in many instances were fixed by an unrestrained speculation rather than by any considerations of real worth.

"Suburban property was 'developed' and sold in small lots on the installment plan, the payments extending frequently as long as five years. It is reported that many persons, especially those of low salary, who have been paying installments for two or three years, now find that the value of their land is far below the remaining amount to be paid. It is thus cheaper for them to forfeit all that has been paid heretofore than to go on with their contract.

"The placing of first mortgages on land in the Argentine has been greatly facilitated by the establishment of the National Banco Hipotecario, and also by the services of certain large loan companies, working with European capital, which specialize in first mortgages. The Banco Hipotecario issues its own bonds, which are backed by the guarantee of the National Government, to the owner of land up to a conservative percentage of its appraised value.

"For its services the Banco Hipotecario receives a small commission. The recipient of the bonds, which are known as 'cedulas,' sells them on the open market. They are widely distributed, not only in the Argentine, but also in Europe, and are regarded as excellent securities.

"It is reliably stated that both the Banco Hipotecario and the larger mortgage companies have been well managed, and have operated conservatively, and that they did not allow their appraisals to be greatly affected by the absurd values which were current at the height of the speculative craze.

"However, in addition to placing first mortgages upon their land, many purchasers were indirect borrowers of large amounts. As has already been noted, funds secured from banks ostensibly for commercial purposes were frequently diverted to what seemed to be attractive speculations in land. Moreover, there were and are a number of mortgage companies—some started during the boom—which are said to have loaned money incautiously and to possess many doubtful assets.

"Throughout the crises the land owners have been almost uniformly 'carried,' even though they were unable to meet their interest obligations. It is stated that there has been so little capital available for land investment since the beginning of the crisis that sales could not be made at prices that would cover even conservative mortgages.

"This is regarded as an abnormal situation, and it has been thought best to withhold foreclosures and forced sales until a better demand for land begins to show itself.

"As the result of this policy, there is still overhanging the market an undetermined but probably great volume of forced liquidation of land. If the optimistic forecasts as to the probable volume of sales of Argentine products prove to be justified, it is possible that this liquidation may be effected through private sales without greatly disturbing the real estate market. A series of poor crops, however, would very seriously affect not only mercantile credits, as pointed out above, but also this large volume of credits based upon land.

"This leads back to the general proposition previously referred to: If the Argentine enjoys even a short series of good crops which it is able to sell at fair prices, the process of liquidating mercantile, banking, and real estate credits will go on steadily, and within a period of one, two, or three years healthy financial conditions will have been restored. On the other hand, even one or two poor crops would be likely to produce serious disturbances. Banking operations and investments in the Argentine at the present time, and at the present level of values necessarily retain a speculative character. The prospects seem favorable, but there is some uncertainty in the situation.

"In this connection, too, attention should be called to the unknown amount of international obligations which are now held in suspension by the moratorium."

Dwelling Leases.

Pease & Elliman have leased for the Clark estates the four-story house at 51 West Eighty-fifth Street to George de Forest Brush, and for Mrs. Riley Miles Gilbert at 18 West Fifty-third Street to Mrs. George Wilde.

The Delafield estate has leased at Fieldston a new house to J. J. Hamilton. It will be ready for occupancy about May 1.

Sales at Pelhamwood.

Plots at Pelhamwood have been sold for future improvement by Joseph Lambden & Son to Edward E. Pollock, William H. Steffens, Mrs. Ada M. Clemens, George W. Eichelberger, L. S. Smith, Malcolm Johnson, and Henry G. Weitmer. Several dwellings are nearing completion.

Brokers' Staff Elect Officers.

At the recent annual meeting of the brokers' staff of M. & L. Hess, Inc., the following officers were elected for the year: L. W. Flaunlacher, President; J. M. Wainwright, Vice President; A. F. Koehler, Secretary, and H. B. Fox, Treasurer.

DASH ESTATE SALE.

Tract of 329 Lots in Riverdale Section at Auction This Month.

The coming sale of the Dash estate, one of the few remaining undeveloped tracts fronting on Broadway just below Van Cortlandt Park, will be watched with interest in the realty world, in view of the present condition of the market. The sale will be held on Oct. 26 in the Vesey Street salesroom under the auspices of Joseph P. Day and J. Clarence Davies.

The tract includes 329 lots in the Spuyten Duyvil and Riverdale sections of the West Bronx, at the 238th and 242d Street (Van Cortlandt Park) subway stations, and on the line of the Broadway subway and the Putnam Division of the New York Central Railroad.

In the Dyckman section, just south of the Dash estate, the construction of apartment houses has advanced along the line of Broadway to about 217th Street. The 215th Street subway station has been the centre of an active building movemnt. North of that point apartment house building has been most prominent in the vicinity of the 231st Street subway station, east and west of which a number of multi-family houses have been erected.

The Dash estate property, west of Broadway, in many respects is similar to the Dyckman tract in the early stages of its development. Dyckman lots have advanced to $5,000 and $6,000 for inside street lots, and $12,000 to $15,000 for apartment building corners. In the interim, the Dash estate neighborhood has stood still, because of the large holding which controls the future development of the section east and west of Broadway.

The agents and auctioneers admit that in the present market conditions the lots, even including the more valuable Broadway, Kingsbridge Avenue, 238th Street, and Spuyten Duyvil Road frontages, must be sold cheap to attract investors and builders and that the prevailing Dyckman and Washington Heights values must be greatly discounted to encourage immediate building.

West of Kingsbridge Avenue most of the lots are below grade and extend to Spuyten Duyvil Road, now being paved and improved with a sewer. In addition to the Spuyten Duyvil Road frontage a number of the lots front on Corlear and Tibbett Avenues, 236th, 238th, and 240th Streets.

One of the choice sites includes the major portion of four blocks frontage on Spuyten Duyvil Road at 244th and 245th Streets, being the entrance to Fieldston and Riverdale. These lots lie at a high elevation, being within a few blocks of the Barnard School for boys and the Horace Mann School.

TO REBUILD STEWART R. R.

Long Island Railroad Asks Permission to Operate Old Line.

The Long Island Railroad Company has applied to the Public Service Commission for permission to construct and operate a two-branch railroad from Flushing to Creedmoor, in the Borough of Queens, a distance of 5.4 miles.

This requires the building and operation of that portion of what is known as the "Stewart Railroad," built in 1871 by A. T. Stewart, operation of which was abandoned in 1879.

As soon as the Public Service Commission issues the necessary certificate of necessity and convenience, the matter will go before the Board of Estimate to arrange the financial terms.

The entire right of way has been acquired. The new road will connect with the North Shore Division at Flushing, and with the existing spur of the main line at Creedmoor.

The territory that will be served by the new line is as yet virgin farm land untouched by the hand of improvement, and yet it is beautiful rolling country, an elevated plateau, and admirably adapted for thousands of homes for toilers in the business section of the metropolis from ten to fifteen miles away.

NEW BANKING OFFICES.

Metropolitan Trust Company's Uptown Branch at 716 Fifth Avenue.

The Metropolitan Trust Company will open its new uptown branch at 716 Fifth Avenue about Feb. 1 next. The façade of the building will be extensively altered and work is now under way. Holmes & Winslow are the architects. The front will be of white marble in a classic design.

The main banking floor will be 24 feet high, lighted by a large window on Fifth Avenue and a decorative skylight in the ceiling. The basement will be used for the safe deposit vaults.

The Metropolitan Trust Company, whose main office is at 49 Wall Street, has been established thirty-four years. George C. Van Tuyl, Jr., is the President, Beverly Chew, Vice President, and Edwin F. Rohrebeck, Second Vice President.

FLORIDA—FOR SALE OR TO LET.

Hotel People Take Notice.

At St. Petersburg, Fla., a rare opportunity is offered to secure an ideal, first-class hotel site with waterfront, all developed, and right in front of city; the site consists of entire block, 300x300 ft., on the water, including a new 2,000-ft. pier to deep water. Steamboats can land at this pier. This site was preserved and developed exclusively for a hotel site at great expense by the owner. Large, stately palms, and the most beautiful tropical foliage are on the grounds. This place is a show place in the city. A first-class hotel I believe would be a great success. This city is said to be the fastest growing tourist city in Florida. Another railroad has just entered city. A new, modern depot has just been completed by the A. C. L. R. R.

OXFORD MEN SWELL BRITISH ARMY LIST

Thousands of the University's Sons in All Divisions of the Service.

PEERS AND M. P.'S ON ROLL

Three Oxonians Have Won the Victoria Cross—Quaker Members Active in Ambulance Work.

The Oxford University roll of service, recently compiled by Dr. E. S. Craig, Assistant Registrar of the university, shows an astonishing variety of service taken up by the several thousand university men who have entered the volunteer armies of England.

Thirteen members of the House of Commons and a considerable number of Peers are included. The list contains the names of many Chaplains in the army and navy, men serving with British and Belgian field hospitals, with the British ambulance service attached to the French Red Cross, with the hospital units sent to Serbia by Lady Paget and Cornelia Lady Wimborne, with the motor patrol, with the anti-aircraft forces, and with home defense volunteer battalions in every colony of the empire.

At least twenty-five members of the Society of Friends, who, of course, would be unable to join the fighting forces, are with the Friends' Relief Council or the Friends' Ambulance Corps attached to the Red Cross. Perhaps a dozen Oxonians are interpreters with the field forces or in prisoners' camps. Something like a hundred are officers or privates in the Twenty-eighth Battalion of the London regiment known as the Artists' Rifles.

Three Oxonians have received the Victoria Cross. Captain J. Norwood of Exeter College, who matriculated in 1904, commanded a troop in the Fifth Dragoon Guards and was killed in September last. Whether he won the Cross in that campaign or previously is not stated. Major General Walter Norris Congreve of Pembroke College, commander of the Eighteenth Infantry Brigade, entered the army in 1885 and won his Victoria Cross for conspicuous bravery at Colenso in December, 1899. The third man on the list, however, is an undergraduate who had just completed his third year when the war broke out—G. V. Wooley of Queen's, a Second Lieutenant in the Ninth Battalion of the London Regiment.

Among the dead are a number of Canadians killed by poisonous gases in the second battle of Ypres, two men who were lost on the Falaba, and one killed in the railway accident at Gretna.

Two American Rhodes Men on List.

Two former American Rhodes scholars are on the list—both men who went from Pennsylvania to Christ Church. T. Ellis Robins, the first Rhodes scholar from Pennsylvania, who is now a British subject and was secretary to the Earl of Winterton when the war broke out, is a Lieutenant in the City of London Yeomanry. R. Schellens, who went over in 1908, is serving with the Serbian Relief Fund Unit in Serbia.

More than 150 Oxonians are serving with various Indian forces. Many of these men are men who went into the regular army after leaving Oxford, and had commands in the expeditionary forces to France, the Suez Canal, and Mesopotamia; but probably a third of them are civilians serving in India who joined volunteer forces after the war broke out. Twenty are serving in West Africa and seventeen in East Africa. In South Africa there are thirty-five, and the majority of these are South African Rhodes scholars, including a considerable number of Boers, whose kinsmen had fought against the British.

Besides several dozen colonials who were in King Edward's Horse, a cavalry regiment of the British Territorial Army composed of colonial students, there are thirty-four Canadians, two Newfoundlanders, eight Australians, and two New Zealanders listed in the forces of their various colonies. Most of these are Rhodes scholars, who had gone back home after the completion of their studies and left civil life to join the expeditionary forces sent out.

Following are some of the names of particular interest in the lists, with the date of matriculation given:

A Notable Absence in the List.

There is, of course, one notable absence in the roll. It is the names of the German students, of whom, in the ten years between the arrival of the first Rhodes scholars and the outbreak of the war, there was a great influx to Oxford.

Some fifty Rhodes scholars came up to the university in that time, and with them, perhaps, two hundred other Germans who were sent by their families. These men, almost without exception, came from the leading families of the Empire. Among the Rhodes scholars was a son of the Imperial Chancellor, a son of the President of the Reichstag, a son of the War Minister, a son of the Ambassador to England, a nephew of the Governor of Alsace Lorraine, a nephew of the Ambassador to the United States.

They were as a body regarded as the ablest class of undergraduates in the university, for they were the picked men of the German Empire; and while few of them made any effort to do serious studying, they were among the most successful and popular students in Oxford. Their Anglo-German Society, open to any student interested in German affairs, never met with the criticisms so freely hurled at the American Club, and the men themselves, who made serious and successful efforts to become acquainted with Englishmen and the English point of view, were in almost every case thoroughly well liked.

At the opening of the academic year last November, when all England was hysterical over the spy peril, the Vice Chancellor and Dean of Christ Church, Dr. T. B. Strong, said in his address on assuming office:

"Hardly any college probably has been without German members in recent years. We have welcomed them and loved them; they have passed easily into the inmost circle of our friendship; we have never believed, we do not believe now, that these men were spies and that all our frank and direct intercourse with them was unreal. Now we are at war, and at war on such terms that it is difficult to see how a time of real friendship between the two nations can ever come again. But it is worth nothing that the first name which gave me the shock which we all now dread in opening our papers to the list of casualties was the name of a German—now a foe."

Germans on Memorial Tablet.

The following month New College erected a memorial tablet in its chapel to the members of the college who had died for their country in the war up to that time, and the list contained the names of three Germans killed fighting against the Allies. There was some protest, but in the main English opinion seemed to approve; and the suggestion made later that the Rhodes scholarships in Germany, which were of course suspended at the outbreak of the war, should be abolished and the income which supplied them turned over to the India has never resulted in any action.

Cecil Rhodes hoped that the foundation of his scholarship at Oxford would bring together the best men from England, Germany, and the United States and would thus cause such a rapprochement of those three countries that war among them would be impossible and that their united efforts would make impossible war anywhere else on earth. His ambition failed; but in the outburst of revolutional hatred between England and Germany Oxford University and the associations formed there by German undergraduates offer at present the visible hope of a restoration of friendship after the war.

BRITISH TROOPS SAY THEY SAW ST. GEORGE

Strange Stories of Apparent Supernatural Appearances on Battlefield.

THINK THEY SAVED PARIS

English and French Soldiers Alike Tell of Phenomena in the Critical Days of August, 1914.

In every great war in the world's history there have been stories of supernatural occurrences in favor of one or the other side, sometimes of both. The present war, the greatest in the recorded story of humanity, is no exception to the rule, and Ralph Shirley, the editor of The Occult Review, in a little pamphlet called "The Angel Warriors at Mons," tells of certain strange happenings testified to by English and French soldiers serving in France and Flanders. The sub-title of the pamphlet reads like the title page of a seventeenth century book: "Numerous Confirmatory Testimonies. Evidence of the Wounded and Certain Curious Historical Parallels. An Authentic Record."

Though Mr. Shirley does not say so in his introductory, in so many words, he hints that the sudden change over the whole outlook when the German army seemed to be carrying everything before it in its victorious advance toward Paris, may have been due to supernatural intervention. The failure of the Germans to capture Paris has been attributed to various causes, but never properly explained. A number of English and French soldiers explain it in an astounding way.

Miss C. M. Wilson, an English nurse, says this story was told to her by a lance corporal in regard to the events on or about Aug. 28, 1914:

"The weather was at the time very hot and clear, and between 8 and 9 o'clock in the evening we were standing with a party of nine other men on duty. Immediately behind us half of our battalion was on the edge of a wood resting, when an officer suddenly came up in a state of great anxiety and asked if we had seen anything startling."

The impression was at the moment that a German surprise attack was threatened, but immediately afterward the lance corporal's attention was drawn to a strange appearance in the sky.

"I could see quite plainly in the midair," he said, "a strange light which seemed to be quite distinctly outlined and was not a reflection of the moon, nor were there any clouds in the neighborhood. The light became brighter and I could see quite distinctly three shapes, one in the centre having what looked like outspread wings; the other two were not so large, but were quite plainly distinct from the centre one. They appeared to have long, loose-hanging garments of a golden tint, and they were above the German line facing us.

"We stood watching them for about three-quarters of an hour. All the men with me saw them, and other men came up from other groups who also told us that they had seen the same thing. I am not a believer in such things, but I have not the slightest doubt that we really did see what I now tell you."

Other soldiers tell similar stories. A Dublin Fusilier says in regard to the "cloud" to which many testify that it quite hid them from the enemy.

The Apparition of St. George.

But the most extraordinary stories are in relation to the apparition of a single angel, whom the British took to be St. George and the French St. Michael. Miss Phyllis Campbell has for months been a nurse at a hospital near the front in France. On one occasion, she says, while she was bandaging a shattered arm, the President of the post, Mme. de A—, came and took her place, asking her to attend to an Englishman who was begging for a "holy picture." The idea of an English soldier making such a request at such a time seemed curious, but she hurried off to attend to his needs. He proved to be a Lancashire Fusilier. This is what happened, in Miss Campbell's words:

"He was propped in a corner, his left arm tied up in a peasant woman's headkerchief, and his head newly bandaged. He should have been in a state of collapse from loss of blood, for his tattered uniform was soaked and caked in blood and his face paper-white under the dirt of conflict. He looked at me with bright, courageous eyes and asked for a picture or a medal (he did not care which) of St. George.

"I asked if he was a Catholic. No, he was a Wesleyan minister, and he wanted a picture or a medal of St. George because he had seen him on a white horse leading the British at Vitry-le-François when the Allies turned. There was a Royal Field Artillery man, wounded in the leg, sitting beside him on the floor. He saw my look of amazement and hastened in, 'It's true, Sister,' he said, 'we all saw it.'

"'First, there was a sort of yellow mist, sort of risin' before the Germans as they come on to the top of the hill, come on like a solid wall, they did, springing out of the earth just solid—no end to 'em. I just give up. No more fighting the whole German race, thinks I; it's all up with us. The next minute comes this funny cloud of light, and when it clears off there's a tall man with yellow hair in golden armor, and a white horse, holding his sword up, and his mouth open as if he was saying: "Come on, boys! I'll put the kybosh on the devils." Sort of "This is my picnic" expression. Then, before you could say "knife" the Germans had turned, and we were after them, fighting like ninety. We had a few scores to settle, Sister, and we fair settled them.'

Both these soldiers "knew it was St. George," for "had not they seen him with his sword on every quid they'd ever had?" The "Frenchies," however, they admitted, maintained that it was St. Michael. The French wounded Miss Campbell describes as being in "a curiously exalted condition—a sort of rapture of happiness." It was quite true, they maintained. The Germans were in full retreat, and the Allies were being led to victory by St. Michael and Joan of Arc.

An Officer's Testimony.

Miss Callow, Secretary of the Higher Thought Centre at South Kensington, contributes to The Weekly Dispatch the following record:

"An officer has sent to one of the members of the centre a detailed account of a vision that appeared to himself and others when fighting against fearful odds at Mons. He plainly saw an apparition representing St. George, the exact counterpart of a picture that hangs today in a London restaurant. So terrible was their plight at the time that the officer could not refrain from appealing to the vision to help them. Then, as if the enemy had also seen the apparition, the Germans abandoned their positions in precipitate terror. In other instances, men had written about seeing clouds of celestial horsemen hovering over the British lines."

Of all nationalities engaged in the war, the Russians are undoubtedly—if one excepts the handful of Indians on the western front—the most spiritual minded, and one would naturally expect stories of supernatural occurrence from that side of the fighting. There are many of these. The following was communicated by a Russian General who was with the army operating in East Prussia.

"While our troops were in the region of Suwalki, the Captain of one of my regiments witnessed a marvelous revelation.

"It was 11 o'clock at night, and the troops were in bivouac. Suddenly a soldier from one of our outposts, wearing a startled look, rushed in and called the Captain.

"The latter went with the soldier to the outskirts of the camp and witnessed an amazing apparition in the sky. It was that of the Virgin Mary, with the Infant Christ on one hand, the other hand pointing to the west.

"Our soldiers knelt on the ground and gazed fervently at the vision. After a time the apparition faded, and in its place came a great image of the cross, shining against the dark night sky.

"Slowly it faded away.

"On the following day our army advanced westward to the victorious battle of Augustovo."

Mr. Shirley is noncommittal in his conclusions. "One important point," he says, "is inevitably raised with regard to these apparitions on the European battlefields. They have this in common with many similar apparitions—that is, they are not seen alike by all witnesses. Where one sees St. George, another sees St. Michael, and a third Joan of Arc. Were all three of these heroes of the past actually present on the battlefield, or, indeed, were any of them? Even assuming that we accept the authenticity of the visions, we are not, I think, called upon to say that they were. Spirit is plastic. May we not rather say that it is Protean. It is clothed upon by the imagination of the beholder to an almost limitless extent."

Some Clergy Dislike the Stories.

One of the most remarkable effects of these persistent stories of phenomena on the battlefield is that many of the clergy dislike them and regard them as dangerous, threatening a return to mediaeval superstition. The Christian Commonwealth, while not indorsing the phenomena, takes a more liberal attitude than some other religious publications. It says in the course of an editorial article headed "Are Visions About?":

"There are many serious students and religious teachers who would regard it as an intellectual disaster if such stories gained general credence. They fear a return to superstition. It has, indeed, been said that democratic liberty in Europe would be dearly purchased at the price of a revival of belief in angels, supernatural interventions, and miracles. We can easily believe, however, that there are multitudes of reasonable and intelligent men and women to whom these stories appeal, as they do to us, not as evidence of a native and childlike disposition to believe in signs and wonders—and to imagine them if they do not spontaneously appear—but as evidence of the persistent desire to identify our human concerns with some larger purpose and meaning. These stories prove that man is essentially religious, even if they do not prove that religion finds an objective sanction in them."

GERMANS USE DIVINING ROD.

Kaiser a Believer in This Means of Discovering Water.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—It is reported that the Germans are making considerable use of the divining rod in their attempts to obtain water for their armies. Emperor William is said to be a thorough believer in this means of discovering water, and some years ago he sent a special "diviner" to German Southwest Africa to prospect for water and gold. This man claimed to have found over a hundred wells by means of his divining rod. He was sent to Southwest Africa by the Kaiser after the latter had watched a number of experiments with the "magic hazel-twig" in Germany.

There is no doubt that the British, when they conquered German Southwest Africa, found the country sufficiently supplied with wells, though the quality of the water is said not to have been all that could be desired.

WAR CHANGES OWNERSHIPS.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—Some celebrated art objects are changing hands as a result of the mortality among English officers in the war. Lieutenant Lord Spencer Douglas Compton of the Royal Horse Guards, who was killed in action on May 13, aged 22, second son of the fifth Marquis of Northampton, and heir presumptive of the present Marquis, left unsettled property of the gross value of $747,195. He made various bequests, including:

To his brother, the present (sixth) Marquis of Northampton, ten original drawings bequeathed to him by his grandmother, Louisa Caroline, Baroness Ashburton, consisting of a Raphael, three Titians, two Prouts, one Correggio, one Cuyp, one Albert Dürer, and one Mantegna.

To his sister, Lady Loch, the picture by Watts, "Love and Death," and other pictures at Castle Ashby near Northampton.

BELGIANS DECORATE EMPTY FLOUR BAGS

Grateful People Beautify Them and Send Them Back to the United States.

MUCH GOLD EMBROIDERY

New Office of Commission for Relief Has Several of These Sacks on Exhibition.

Among the many thousand of expressions of gratitude from the Belgians to the people of America for their aid in warding off famine and hunger when the ravages of war struck the little kingdom where they lived, the most novel received at the offices of the Commission for Relief in Belgium, 71 Broadway, are emptied flour sacks.

Only a few of these sacks have been received by the commission, but it is said that there are several thousand still in Belgium that may be shipped to the commission later on. These flour sacks, after having been emptied of their contents, were in a great many cases taken by Belgian women and decorated artistically and, in many cases, exquisitely in water colors and embroidery. Perhaps the most beautiful of all received at the commission's offices was a sack that was sent with a shipment of Canadian flour into the province of Limburg. It fell into the hands of a woman artist in the little town of Marche, in that province, who has elaborataed an idea clever enough for the best cartoonists. In water colors there is a representation of the little village in the background and a little group of peasants in the foreground; sailing through the air is a gorgeous aeroplane, which flies an American flag, and it is supposed to represent an invasion of Belgium—a peaceful invasion, of course, for the bombardment from the air is a bombardment of all kinds of foodstuffs, bags of flour, barrels of sugar, caddies of tea, and other necessary articles of food. The coloring is excellent, and the picture has real life and animation.

The shipment of Kansas flour, sent early in the Winter, evidently fell into appreciative hands. One bag from a mill in Anthony is handsomely decorated with the Belgian coat of arms in the Belgian colors, and the expression "L'Union Fait la Force." Below is the expression "Remerciements aux Américaines." The brand of the flour is exquisitely embroidered and is surrounded by a sheaf of wheat in yellow and gold, also embroidered.

From Wichita, Kan., another beautifully embroidered bag shows the name of the milling company in embroidery in the Belgian colors—black, yellow, and red—with the expression below "Hearty Thanks from the Belgians." From Alton, Kan., comes a bag with the United States and Belgian flags daintily hand-painted and the flour brand embroidered in purple and black.

A little unconscious humor is shown in a bag of flour which is labeled "Our Buck." These two words are embroidered exquisitely in black, crimson, and gold and a picture of a buck printed in the centre of the bag is also outlined in embroidery, horns and all. There is little probability that the artist had any idea what the words "Our Buck" meant. A Richmond (Va.) mill contributed a bag which an artist has elaborately decorated with Belgian fleurs de lis in black, purple, and gold. Another pretty bag is from the Moyenne School in St. Gilles and shows across the entire width of the bag a strip of violets embroidered in natural colors.

One of the most artistic bags in the collection received at the offices of the commission is a sack from Buffalo, N. Y. The name of the flour is surrounded with Belgian flags and a floral wreath embroidered on both the front and reverse sides of the bag. An unidentified bag has a regular flower garden in embroidery showing violets and roses.

These are only a few of the many and the commission's officials in New York have not yet determined what disposition they will make of the bags, but it is believed that the millers who put up the flour would be eager bidders for them as souvenirs.

The commission announces for Oct. 20 at the New York Custom House an examination for junior electric engineer, grades 1 and 2, for men only, to fill vacancies as they occur in the Interstate Commerce Commission under the act providing for the valuation of the property of common carriers. The salary for grade 1 is from $1,200 to $1,680 a year; for grade 2 it is from $720 to $1,680 a year. In addition to the above salaries necessary expenses will be allowed when absent from headquarters in the discharge of official duties. Appointments to these positions will be principally for field service. Competitors will be examined in theory and practice of the design and construction of timber, steel, concrete and masonry bridges, buildings and other structures, including foundations, and the mathematics used in this branch of engineering, including algebra, geometry and trigonometry, but not including calculus; education, training and experience. Applicants must have reached their twenty-first but not their thirty-sixth birthday on the date of the examination. Further information as to these examinations may be obtained from the commission, Washington, D. C.

CITY SALARY CUTS AS SEEN BY A VICTIM

Points to Men of Long Service and Much Ability Reduced to Laborers' Pay.

BIG INCOMES NOT TOUCHED

History of Standardization Bureau —Cost Quarter of a Million to Save $174,000.

What the men who would be most affected are said to think about the proposed reduction of the salaries of city employes was expressed yesterday by a court house employe, who presented his opinions to a representative of THE NEW YORK TIMES, after they had been censored by County Clerk Schneider. The court house employe first paid his respects to the Bureau of Standards which has recommended the salary cuts.

"Despite the fact that much space has been allotted by the press to this Bureau of Standards," he said, "the average citizen has only a vague idea of its origin, duties, powers, and personnel. Three years ago the Board of Estimate decided to 'standardize' the salaries of all city employes, and by resolution created the Bureau of Standards, appointing as its Directors George L. Tirrell and Tilden Adamson, who were placed over a force of about one hundred 'experts.' The Directors received $6,000 each per annum and the 'experts' from $5 to $25 per diem. The initial appropriation for the bureau was in the neighborhood of a quarter of a million dollars.

"Mr. Tirrell was a reporter on The Brooklyn Eagle in 1910 when Mr. Prendergast made him his private secretary at a salary of $2,500. Subsequently his title was changed from 'Private Secretary to the Controller' to 'Private Secretary to the Finance Department'—the difference between the titles being equal in reality to the difference between Tweedle-dee and Tweedle-dum—but the salary was increased to $6,000. Mr. Adamson is a brother-of Fire Commissioner Adamson.

"Experts" Called from Afar.

"The 'experts' aiding the Directors were culled from all parts of the country—from Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, Gary, and other 'educational centres.' They are, for the most part, settlement workers, social uplifters, and male 'sob sisters.' After giving them quarters in the Municipal Building and providing them with such 'standardized' articles as solid mahogany furniture, Oriental rugs, an immense stock of cards and ten-cent lead pencils, these 'experts' went to 'work.' I have seen these gentlemen come into an office under the process of standardization at the unearthly hour of 10 or 11 o'clock in the morning, and begin their labors by reading the morning paper and commenting on the news therein, or entertaining the subjects of standardization with little anecdotes of some personal exploit."

With further remarks calculated to show the "experts" hold sinecures or are unfitted for their positions, the court house employe went on to discuss specific results of their "standardization."

"The law clerk in the office of the Clerk of New York County," he said, "whose job requires a thorough knowledge of the law relating to taxation of costs and disbursements incurred in an action in the Supreme Court, of methods of procedure, &c., has held his position for thirty-five years and receives a salary of $3,500. He is recommended for a reduction to $2,900. It transpired that the 'expert' who made the recommendation did not have the faintest idea of what was meant by 'taxing costs.' After he had recommended the cut he blandly asked to be enlightened as to the meaning of the phrase.'

An Ordinance Authority.

"The Ordinance Clerk of the Board of Aldermen; who has all of the city ordinances at his finger tips, who is invaluable to the Aldermen in giving them information and in drafting resolutions, ordinances, &c., is recommended to be cut 50 per cent in salary—as the 'expert' reported that his work was 'purely clerical.' The Chief Clerk of Bronx County will have his salary slashed from $3,500 to $1,800, while his subordinates remain at $2,000. The confidential stenographer to the te nJustices of the City Court will be cut from $1,800 to $1,200, while other stenographers in the court remain at $2,500 and $3,500.

"A man, after twenty-nine years of faithful service, is to have his salary cut from $2,100 to $1,200. A man twenty years in the service, having charge of a force of twenty men docketing and indexing judgments, liens, &c., involving millions of dollars, will be slashed from $2,400 to $1,800. A man in charge of the notorial and certificate department of the County Clerk's ofice, New York County, who handles about $75,000 a year in fees, to whom approximately 100,000 persons come in a year, who is an authoity on the law and practice of notaries public and commissioners of of deeds, and who has written a text book on the subject that has the approval of the most prominent members of the bar and bench, is to be reduced from $2,000 a year to $1,200.

"Twenty-three men in the County Clerk's office, each receiving $1,500 a year, will be reduced to $1,200 without regard to length of service, character of work, tact or initiative. A man reduced from $1,800 to $1,200 told the 'expert' that another man in another office was doing exactly the same work as he and was scheduled to receive $2250, and the 'expert' replied that some other 'expert' had rated the other office."

The court house employe set forth County Clerk Schneider's buisness abilities and experience, and complained that his recommendations were ignored for the recommendations of the "experts." He then deduced the "net results of standardization" as follows:

Orders Small Salaries Cut.

"After an outlay of more than three-quarters of a million of dollars, the Bureau has recommended the slashing of the small salaries of men in the competitive class to the extent of $174,000—not enough to change the tax rate a single point. Men receiving large salaries—more than $3,000—are hardly touched. More than 75 per cent. of the $174,000 falls upon men receiving $2,000 a year or less."

That there are sinecures and overpaid positions in the civil service, the Court House employe admitted, and he said that tthe city employes "would welcome standardization along true lines, broad, practical, humane, and gradual." He argued that the standardiztion should not be ttempted by "individuals entirely out of touch with actual condition, but should be effected by the heads of departments who were familiar with the conditions of their own offices and who would be able to include in their estimates such things" that cannot be put into a card index" as "tact, initiative, resourcefulness, and ability to handle the public."

The Court House employe also pleaded for gradual standardization.

"There are overpaid as well as useless positions in the city service," he said, 'and the heads of departments may be trusted to point out such instances. When they do so, the Board of Estimate should permit the contemporary incumbent to continue in his position, but provide for the abolition of his position or the reduction of the salary upn the removal, death, transfer, or resignation of the incumbent. This is the system adopted by some of the greatest employers of labor in the country. It is sane, logical, and just. It works no hardship upon anyone."

The Social Side of the Question.

Taking up the "human side of the question," the Court House employe defined the standardization recommended as "scientifically refined cruelty." He said:

"Let us go into the homes of the small victims—the men whose salaries are to be reduced from $1,200 or $1,500 to $1,000 or less. Such a man has been in the service from one to forty years and has a family and other dependents. He is giving the best that is in him to the city. He has spent his entire earnings within the city. Now, after years of service, his salary is to be cut to an amount that will barely enable him to exist. The cut means that the man and his family must move from a clean, comfortable home to the cheapest tenement; it means the total elimination of those little pleasures that help to make life worth living; it means the taking away of his children from their chosen professions in life; it means the darkening of the lives of the man and his family and the planting in them of the seed of hate against the authors of the inhuman system of standardization.

"Is this system of reduction and dismissal regardless of years of service good public policy? In a business house a young man starts, let us sty, as a packer at $6 a week. After twenty years he is still a packer but receives $20 a week. The increased pay is simply a reward for long service and in recognition of the man's needs. Messrs. Mitchel and Prendergast, if admitted into partnership in the business house, would immediately reduce such a packer to his original $6 a week. Such, in a nutshell, is the scientific system applied to the employes of the city."

In conclusion the Court House employe said:

"In justice to Messrs. McAneny, Marks, Pounds, Mathewson, Connolly, and Van Name let it be said that their minds are open. The city employes centre their hope in these men. With Messrs. Mitchel and Prendergast, the famous Judge Duffy may be quoted: 'Before I give you thirty days what have you to say for yourself.'"

The Court House employe made the point that "none of the high-salaried exempt positions within the gift of the city administration" had been touched by the proposed reductions.

Athletics and Business.

That most everything that happens in any walk of life has some effect on business is well illustrated in the great increase in the sale of tennis and golf goods because of municipal athletics. Playgrounds and free tennis courts and golf links are fast becoming one of the features and characteristics of every large city. St. Louis alone, from recent statistics, has over 40,000 tennis players and 8,000 golfers, the large majority of whom use the city courts and links. Some of the larger cities, as Chicago, far exceed these figures. The results are seen in a sale this season of tennis and golf goods far in excess of previous years. As municipal athletics spread to the smaller cities and larger towns these results will become more and more pronounced.

TOPICS OF INTEREST TO THE MOTORIST

LONG NORTH AND SOUTH HIGHWAY IS PROJECTED

Trunk Line Road 3,308 Miles Long from Mackinac to Miami Hoped For by Road Enthusiasts in Michigan—Present Status.

A trunk-line highway linking the Strait of Mackinac with the Gulf of Mexico—3,308 miles from Mackinac, Mich., to Miami, Fla.—is the dream of good roads enthusiasts that promises to come to early realization. With the enthusiasm already awakened by tours and meetings that are being held along the route, a very few years are expected to witness the major portion converted into modern and substantial roadway. The highway traverses a territory populated by 40,000,000 of people, owning 800,000 automobiles.

When the conference of Governors of the States interested in the "Dixie Highway" was held last fall at Chattanooga, Governor Ferris, on invitation of Governor Ralston of Indiana, sent two Commissioners representing Michigan, to urge that the route be so chosen as to make the Gulf to Strait Highway—"Lake Shore all the Way," so far as Michigan was concerned. The West Michigan Pike Association, now in the fifth year of its activity in the promotion of road improvement, at once became interested in the movement.

The West Michigan Pike concerns fourteen counties. A land of countless lakes and streams, swept by the cool breezes of Lake Michigan the Summer through, Western Michigan has long been a favorite playground of the Middle West. Rail and boat lines touch all the more important points in this territory, but by the autoist alone may all its rarer beauties be enjoyed. Five hundred miles along Lake Michigan, the West Michigan Pike links resort to resort, from Michigan City and South Bend, Ind., to the Strait of Mackinac. A delightful variety of scenery lures one on from the prosperous cities, farms and orchards, to the wilder scenes and virgin forests of the Northland. Never an hour without a lake or forest fringing the road; perhaps a glimpse of the blue of Lake Michigan in the distance, or miles of touring along its very beach.

Lower Michigan's peculiar situation guarantees it immunity from the excesses of great heat or great cold. The prevailing winds are from the west. In Northern Michigan cool nights are not rare. Sleep and absolute rest are two of the gifts of this vast north country.

The route of the West Michigan Pike is designated by legislative enactment of the State of Michigan, and constructed under State supervision by the various counties through which it passes. The State pays a high reward for every mile of the pike which meets its rigid specifications, and these stretches of highway are commonly known as "State reward" road. Seventy per cent. of the pike is now completed as State reward road and about 15 per cent. is under construction during 1915. The poorer sections are receiving first attention in order to put the whole route into the best possible shape pending its final completion, and there are no sections where autos cannot pass without difficulty. Several counties have completed the entire road within their boundaries, and the remaining counties are bending every effort to finish the pike in order to earn the double reward.

The more thickly settled southern counties are not alone in the possession of fine roads, for the northern counties have roads which are a marvel to the tourist. Between Grand Haven and Frankfort, a distance of 147 miles, there are but twelve miles which have not earned the State reward and eight miles of this is excellent natural clay road. Two counties and three townships have just bonded to secure funds to complete the pike, and the Fall of 1916 will see a first-class highway every mile from the Indiana line to the Strait of Mackinac.

The Pike Association is a voluntary organization of those interested in the promotion of good roads, and in its life has done much along this line. The laying out of the route, its construction and sign-boarding, and the promotion of tourist travel over the pike have been its chief work. In addition to its general officers, it is represented in each county by a resident Vice President, who is in charge of its local affairs and tourist matters pertaining to his county.

Father Allouez is credited as being the first white man to discover the St. Joseph River, coming down the Lake Michigan shore from Sault Ste. Marie, which he had reached in 1666. Accompanied by the famous Père Marquette, a complete circuit of the shores of Lake Michigan was made, the party entering all the principal bays and rivers. To the St. Joseph River they gave the name "Miamis." This was about 1669, but no permanent establishment was made here until 1679, when La Salle sailed as far as Mackinac in the Griffin, the first sailing ship to navigate the Great Lakes. From Mackinac the Griffin was sent back to Niagara for supplies, with instructions to meet La Salle's party at the mouth of the "Miamis."

La Salle reached the river mouth on Nov. 1, 1669, and at once built a fort of hewn logs, 40 by 80 feet, on the site now occupied by Lake Front Park in the centre of the city of St. Joseph. A month later, the Griffin having been lost with all on board, La Salle and his men went up the St. Joseph River, and portaged into the Kankakee, finally reaching Peoria, where the Winter was spent.

In 1700 a mission was established at St. Joseph by the Jesuits, and shortly after, a second one near the present sito of Niles. Both these missions were attacked and the occupants massacred on May 6, 1763, when Pontiac's war opened with the destruction of all the forts and missions west of Niagara except Detroit.

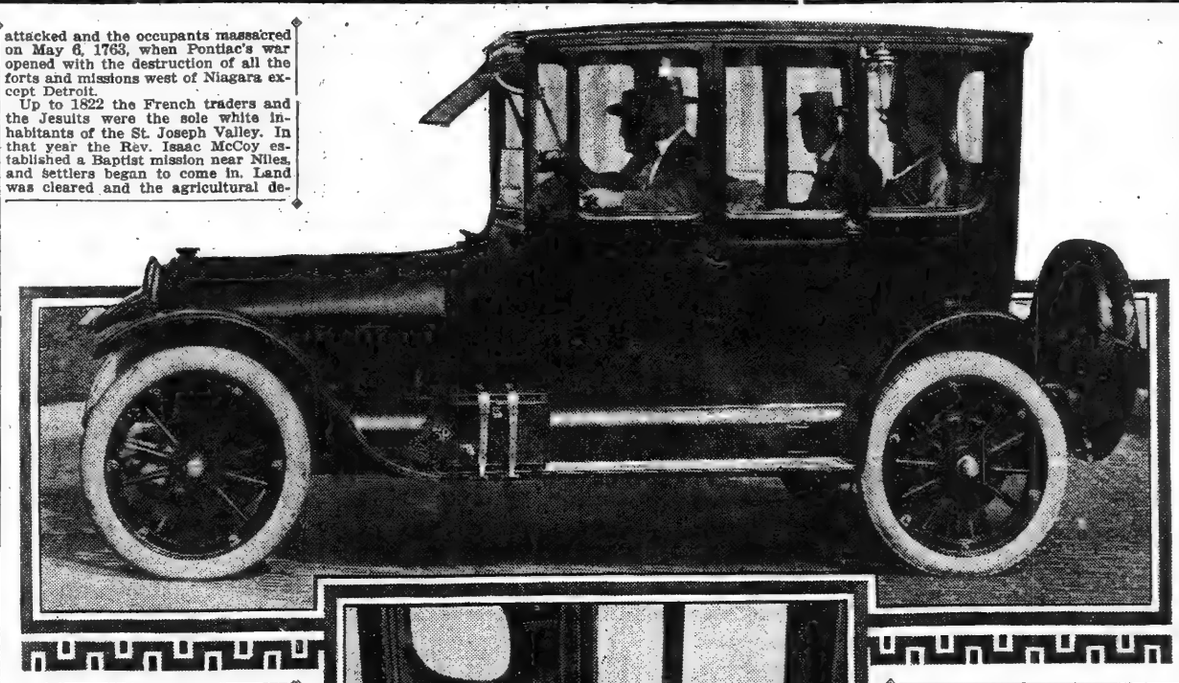
Up to 1822 the French traders and the Jesuits were the sole white inhabitants of the St. Joseph Valley. In that year the Rev. Isaac McCoy established a Baptist mission near Niles, and settlers began to come in. Land was cleared and the agricultural development began. Most of what is now Berrien County was ceded to the Government by the Pottawatomie tribe in 1826. The first steamer was put on the river in 1833, and in the forties there was a flourishing trade with Chicago.

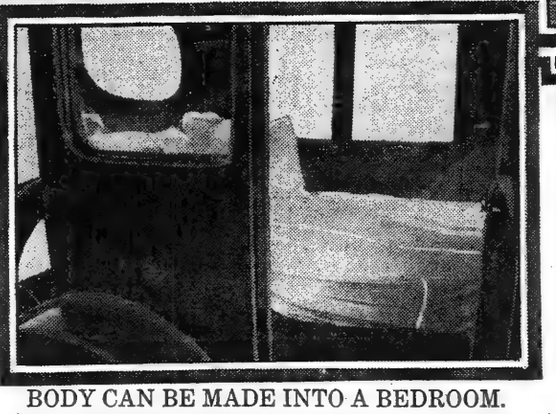
Berrien County, the land of fruits and flowers, has already made appropriations for the greater part of the route through the county, to be built of macadam, the appropriation becoming available in January. Cass County, of which Dowagiac is the county seat, is enthusiastic. Paw Paw is another little city which is preparing for the coming of the Gulf to Straits Highway, and will have its roads in good shape well before the allotted time. Special meetings have been held here to crystallize the sentiment for building the necessary stretches of road. Kalamazoo has been from the very start the dynamo of enthusiasm for the Dixie route, both to the west and north of the city, and will continue to be so, as a full realization of the benefits to accrue by the building of this roadway exists and nothing will be left undone.

Portions of the highway as routed are in need of considerable road work. The report of the State Highway Commission shows the following condition of the pike roads in their principal divisions, between South Bend and the Straits of Mackinac, via Frankfort:

State line to Muskegon, mileage, 1,294; miles paved, 21.7; miles State reward road, 75.1; clay unimproved, 5.5; dirt, 16.5; sand, 11.6. Muskegon to Traverse City, mileage, 173; miles paved, 7.5; miles State reward road, 139.3; clay unimproved, 5; dirt, 5.2; sand, 16. Travers City to Mackinac, mileage, 109.4; miles paved, 5; miles State reward road, 55.6; clay unimproved, 8; dirt, 28.8; sand, 11.

The figures on State reward road include mileage under construction at present, on which application for reward has been made, as well as roads on which the reward has already been paid. Arrangements are now in making to mark the pike with concrete posts eight feet high, placed one to every mile, two on every turn, and one at the limits of each city and village. This work will require at least nine months' time. The course through the cities will be marked by white bands placed on wire poles.





BODY CAN BE MADE INTO A BEDROOM.

This 1916 Studebaker chassis has been fitted with a special body for long touring for S. Sproat of New York. In the lower picture it is shown with the inside chairs converted into a roomy bunk. In the upper picture the compact ice box, carried on the running board, may be seen.

ELECTRIC MEN TO MEET.

Partial Program of Convention at Cleveland This Week.

The program of the sixth annual convention of the Electric Vehicle Association of America at Cleveland, Oct. 18 and 19, is in part as follows:

"Industrial Trucks in the Service of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company," by T. V. Buckwalter.

"The Electric Taxicab," by I. S. Scrimger.

"Data on the Hartford Electric Light Company's Experience with the Battery Exchange System for Commercial Vehicles," by Willis M. Thayer.

"The Function of the Electric Garage," by R. Macrae.

"Comparative Development of the Commercial Power and Electric Vehicle Loads," by H. H. Holding and S. G. Thompson.

"Problems We Are Facing and How They May Be Met," by George H. Kelly.

"The Small Electric Vehicle and Its Application," by Charles A. Ward.

"Electric Vehicles in Municipal Service," by Arthur J. Slade and R. Duval Dumont.

"The Comparative Performance of Gasoline and Electric Vehicles in Similar Service," by W. J. Miller and S. G. Thompson.

In addition to the papers indicated there will also be the reports of the association's officers, sixteen sections, and the standing and special committees. Exhibits of electric vehicle equipment, appliances and parts of new design, will be held in the hotel adjacent to the convention hall.

MANITOBA BUYING AUTOS.

Car Sales Show Prosperity of Winnipeg, Says Consul Ryder.

Manitoba is receiving upward of $100,000 this year from the motor business. Licenses have already been issued for 8,600 automobiles and probably 500 more applications will be filed. The straight license fee of $10 would make a total of about $90,000. In addition licenses have been granted to 1,144 chauffeurs at $5, making a total of $5,720, a falling off of about 400 from the number granted in 1914, indicating the tendency of auto owners to handle their own cars. Owners of 888 motor cycles have been licensed at $2 apiece, aggregating $1,676.

These figures are significant, according to United States Consul General Frederick M. Ryder, stationed at Winnipeg, indicating Winnipeg's prosperity during a year of recognized financial depression. For instance, there was a total of 7,000 automobile licenses granted in the province last year, showing that fully 2,000 cars have been purchased by residents during 1915, an increase of about one-third of those previously owned. The jitney business is supposed to be responsible for this increase. There has been but a slight increase in the number of motor-cycle licenses granted for 1915. Contract has been awarded to a local firm for a $200,000 automobile assembling works in Winnipeg for a popular-priced American car. When in operation 200 men will be employed.

NEWS AND NOTES OF THE AUTOMOBILE TRADE

For the third successive year the Willys-Overland Company will occupy the position of honor at the New York Automobile Show, to be held at the Grand Central Palace from Dec. 31 to Jan. 8. The space allotments are based entirely upon the volume of business done by the companies affiliated with the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

The Michelin Tire Company has perfected an entirely new type of tire known as the Michelin Universal Tread. It is really a combination of the Michelin racing type flat tread, having the same characteristic heavy added tread, and the plain tread, a full, round tire of the "oversize" type. The non-skid feature is a combination of the raised or studded tread non-skid, with the flat or suction tread type.

Automobile Row was interested to learn last week that Nilla Dearborn, widow of Frank Dearborn, the automobile racing driver who died as a result of an accident to the car he was driving at Brighton Beach last year, he was about to start in business for herself under the name of Nilla Dearborn Cigarette Company at 220 West Forty-second Street. Since her husband's death Mrs. Dearborn has been supporting herself as a cigarette agent, her principal customers being the automobile fraternity in New York and Detroit. Her first order since starting out for herself was from Gil Anderson, winner of the Astor Cup race, for 3,000 cigarettes bearing the Stutz monogram.

The Delco Company is building a large addition to its factory, 420 feet long, 88 feet wide, and five stores high, which will double the present floor space. It will be completed in a few weeks.

The Hudson Company after experimenting with eight and twelve cylinder motors has decided to stick exclusively to the six-cylinder motor. This decision is important, as it fixes a certain definite value for a Hudson six in case an owner desires to dispose of his machine.

The M. & S. Gear Company has brought out a new type of differential that acts on both rear wheels to the end that when the wheels get trapped in mud or sand the new differential makes it easy for the engine to pull the car out of the hole. This differential is used on Jeffery war trucks and the American manufacturing rights have been purchased by the Brown-Lipe-Chapin Company.

The Velie Motor Vehicle Company of Moline, Ill., has announced a new type inclosed car body for the "Biltwel" six chassis. This body is built on coupe lines, but has a seating capacity of four passengers. The main seat is amply wide for three persons, the driver being seated slightly ahead of the other two. A fourth seat is mounted on a stationary pedestal, and may be revolved into any desired position.

Promotions in the organization of the Packard Motor Car Company of New York are announced by the company as follows: B. C. Day has been appointed branch manager at Buffalo; T. P. Myers has been chosen manager of the truck sales department.

The Isotta Company, distributers of the Scripps-Booth roadster, has completed arrangements for Dinguid Brothers to represent this car in the Brooklyn territory.

Dodge Brothers' motor car has been selected at the Panama-Pacific Exposition to be given as the grand prize to the winning exhibitor in the Palace of Machinery.

Prospective truck buyers may secure a copy of the 1915 edition of Motor Trucks of America from the local branch of the B. F. Goodrich Company. This book gives the essential facts about nearly 100 of the leading makes of trucks, with illustrations.

E. R. Benson has resigned as Vice President and Director of the Studebaker Corporation, to become distributer of Studebaker cars for the State of Maine and a part of New Hampshire.

The R. E. Taylor corporation, Eastern distributers of Garford Motor Trucks, recently has put two worm-drive fire-fighting machines in near-by towns.

Sedan top equipment for both six and four cylinder models is the latest announcement of the Empire Automobile Company. The tops are of special design and can be attached to any of the company's 1916 models.

James Joyce has joined the forces of the Houk Wire Wheel Company at Broadway and Fifty-eighth Street.

Of interest to the automobile world is the purchase, by the Remington Motor Company of the Vaughn Car Company's plant, located at Kingston, N. Y.

W. O. Allen, general manager of the Allen Motor Company, Fostoria, Ohio, motored to Bucyrus, Ohio, last week to officiate at a banquet which celebrated the completion of a large addition to its factory.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors Charles F. Lott, for the past fifteen years private secretary of Hugh Chalmers, was elected Secretary of the Chalmers Motor Company. C. A. Pfeiffer, Vice President and Assistant General Manager of the company, who has previously fulfilled the duties of Secretary, will turn over that portion of his work to Mr. Lott.

J. G. Perrin, who has been for nineteen years chief engineer and factory manager of the Lozier Motor Car Company of Detroit, has joined the forces of the Timken-Detroit Axle Company as chief engineer.

Kent Motors Corporation, distributers and export agents for Abbott-Detroit and Marion cars, announces the appointment as Superintendent of service of William Watson.

The Pathfinder Company has enlarged its present organization. The Directors are: W. C. Teasdale, Jr., President; W. E. Stalnaker, Vice President; W. K. Bromley, Secretary and Treasurer; Crawford Fairbanks, C. J. Root, George H. Mosher, and Karl Feilcke. The management of the business will be in the hands of an Executive Committee composed of C. J. Root, Crawford Fairbanks, W. K. Bromley, W. E. Stalnaker, and W. C. Teasdale, Jr. Mr. Stalnaker remains as general sales manager. Homer McKee is advertising counsel.

Ground was broken last week for the first of an important series of building operations at the plant of the Kissel Motor Car Company, Hartford, Wis. President George A. Kissel explains that the Company is preparing for the doubling of its production in the near future.

One of the curious sights of Indianapolis is the method of testing cars adopted by the branch of the Ford Motor Company in that city. To get the best view of it one would have to go up in an aeroplane. At the Indianapolis branch the cars are tested on the roof of the building, the manager deciding to use the broad expanse of aerial floor space for that purpose.

A. G. Seiberling, general manager of the Haynes Automobile Company, Kokomo, Ind., announces the appointment of D. L. Watson to the position of general sales manager, to succeed R. Crawford, who has resigned.

SAFETY FENDERS TESTED.

Did Not Save Dummy from Injury—Live Subject Needed.

But little of the merit of safety fender devices for automobiles was made apparent in a test held last week under the auspices of the Safety First Society and certain officers of the Police Department connected with traffic matters. To demonstrate the action of the fenders in saving pedestrains from injury, two dummies stuffed with sand and sawdust were used. A device known as the American Safety Truck Fender was first tried. Mounted on the front of an electric truck, it was allowed to strike the dummy at a speed of about twelve miles an hour. Three trials were made, with the dummy standing, sitting on the pavement, and prone. In each case the dummy was considerably damaged, with loss of sawdust, and in the last trial it was rolled roughly between fender and sidewalk.

Next, another device, called the Glasgow Safety Fender, which was pictured in THE NEW YORK TIMES last Sunday, was tried. This device is actuated by a foot or hand plunger, and becomes a sort of curtain of heavy canvas, in which the object struck is supposed to be picked up. In the test the dummy was rolled along the ground until, on the third trial, the protective curtain was only dropped a few inches and both front wheels of the car ran over the already mangled man of sawdust.

Although the results were so far from satisfactory, the inventors of both devices said that this was caused by the inadequacy of the dummy rather than by any fault of the fender, the lay figure acting quite differently from a living person. Each was eager to demonstrate his device with a live subject, and said that in that way alone a fair test could be had and the safety value of the fender be convincingly shown.

Not all good cars are as yet covered with Pantasote tops—but you can always take

as the sure sign of a good car

It shows that the maker of the car is giving full value. It shows that the present price cutting competition in the automobile industry has not turned that maker toward a less expensive and less durable top material.

Genuine Pantasote is the top material that is recognized as without a peer—for perfect shelter, perfect appearance, longest wear and ability to withstand all weather conditions, folding and misuse.

In buying a big thing like a car, the top material may be considered an unimportant little detail, but just think about this for a minute. Consider that the top is chiefly responsible for the trim, new and stay-new appearance of your car and your personal comfort in bad weather.

CURRENT NEWS AND NOTES OF THE AUTOMOBILE WORLD

ARMY IS TESTING MOTORS FOR ARTILLERY HAULAGE

Power Trucks Being Compared at Fort Sill with Animal Traction for Guns and Ammunition Supply Under Varying Conditions.

"It is believed," says The United States Field Artillery Journal, the organ of the officers of that arm of the regular service, in its current issue, "that the service will learn with interest and approval that the question of motor traction is at last receiving in this country the careful consideration which it deserves."

The reference is to the tests now under way at the field artillery training station at Fort Sill, Okla., where, under the direction of the Field Artillery Board of the regular army, various tests involving the use of motor traction for artillery purposes are being conducted. Two motor trucks, one a Jeffery, and the other a Duplex, figure in the present experiments, which have to do with the transportation of 4.6-inch gun and 6-inch howitzer batteries. Eventually it is stated the new 7-inch type of howitzer will figure in the tests.

"The tests," says The Field Artillery Journal, "will be conducted so as to determine as far as possible the comparative efficiency under service conditions of motor and animal traction, as well as of the two kinds of motors, in the draft of heavy field artillery, and also the comparative economy of motor and animal traction, taking into consideration original cost, maintenance, probable length of service, and the like.

"The tests will be carried out with the view of ascertaining the greatest amount that can be accomplished with motors when ingenuity and care are exercised in overcoming obstacles, and not with a view to the undertaking of unnecessarily severe tasks."

The tests scheduled and which have begun at Fort Sill are three in number. The first has to do with the problem of "efficiency in the supply of ammunition," which is intended "to determine the most favorable combination of tow and load of motor, considering the amount of ammunition transported, the rate of speed desired, the overcoming of obstacles, and so forth."

The load of the motor in this test is equivalent to the weight of ammunition carried in one chest, and the cannoneers normally assigned in the battery to the carriages constituting the tow. The tow consists of one loaded caisson and limber, and the distance to be covered in the test is five miles, of which three miles will be over Oklahoma roads and two miles cross-country. On the same day and over the same roads an animal-drawn battery will be driven for the purpose of comparing the two modes of transportation.

The speed of this test calls for half of the distance to be made at the speed of an ordinary animal-drawn battery, and the other half at the speed most favorable to the motor. The obstacles prescribed are similar to those that the battery with animal traction is accustomed to successfully encounter in ordinary field work, such as fords of various depths, banks and bottoms, ditches, sharp corners, winding roads, grades, ascending as well as descending, sand, mud, and soft ground.

A second part of this same series of tests calls for two loaded caissons and one loaded limber in tow of the motor truck, while the truck itself will be burdened with a load of ammunition equivalent to that carried in two chests, as well as the cannoneers.

Another interesting feature, which is also a part of test No. 1, involves the working out of ammunition supply problems, in the solution of which the motor-drawn batteries will travel about three miles to a given point, in part over roads covered by obstacles. As soon as the battery is posted the motors will operate between the firing line and the ammunition supply depots in the rear, taking away the emptied chests and returning with replenished chests under conditions that will "simulate the replenishment of ammunition under service conditions."

"In this problem," adds The Journal, "will be sought the determination of the greatest number of empty caissons and limbers that, in the general case, the motors may be expected to haul."

The second general test of the motors will be one to determine the "efficiency in the traction of elements of the firing battery," the load to be transported being the "weight equivalent to ammunition carried in chest, and gun squad, excepting cannoneers, at brakes of tow."

There are two problems to be worked out in this test, and each problem will include "the reconnoissance and occupation of a position, the pieces being hauled to their positions by the motors; the resupply of ammunition by motor traction, filled chests being brought to the battery from the combat train and empty ones returned thereto, and the withdrawal from the position." The distance covered in the test will be five miles, two of which will be cross-country, in which obstacles will be featured. The speed will be that most favorable to the motor.

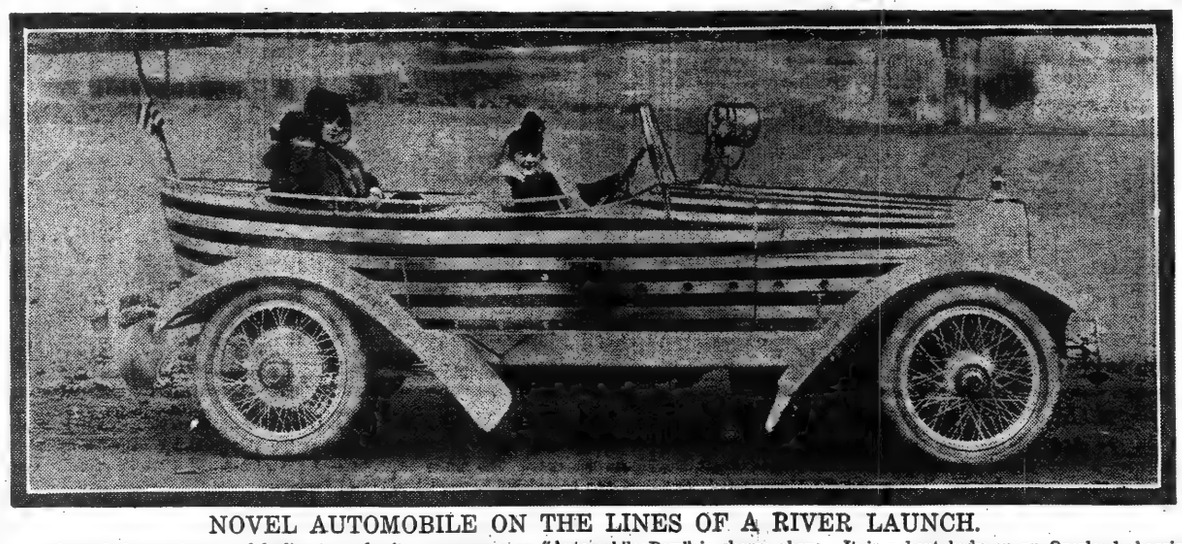
The third and last series test is that to determine "efficiency on marches," in the working out of which animal traction will be used to furnish a comparative test. In the working out of this problem both the motor and animal traction will start in the same direction, the motor element preceding, each of the elements proceeding at the rate most favorable to itself, and to make only the halts required by its personnel or tractive power in an ordinary day's march. This test will last at least eight hours.

"During the progress of the several tests prescribed," adds The Journal, "the obstacles should increase in difficulty until the use of the cannoneers on the ropes and wheels, the use of blocks and tackle, the overwhelming of the obstacle by a motor hauling one element of its tow at a time, or by one motor assisting the other, and other expedients, shall be necessary.

"At the completion of the tests in each battalion a detailed report will be submitted by the battalion commander. In these reports should be considered, among any other points that may be deemed pertinent: The necessity for tires different from those with which the motors are at present equipped. The necessity or desirability of equipping each motor with an emergency winch for the purpose of pulling itself or its tow over difficult ground. The necessity of elastic couplers between motor and tow, and between the elements of the tow, and the efficiency in this respect of the springs now assembled on the shanks of the pintles of the motors. The most favorable distribution of the load of the motor. The advantages, if any, in having all four wheels guide wheels. Any changes in the present material that would be required if the battery were to be equipped with motor tractors.

No Axles Available for Tests.

A peculiar condition confronts the makers of internal gear drive axles in this country. Some time ago tentative arrangements were made for a very comprehensive test of several types of axles of this kind. The tests were to have been made in an Eastern laboratory especially fitted, but a few weeks ago, when the word came the apparatus was ready, a canvass of the manufacturers showed that not one of them could spare a single axle at this time.



NOVEL AUTOMOBILE ON THE LINES OF A RIVER LAUNCH.

One of the most unusual bodies to make its appearance on "Automobile Row" is shown above. It is a boat body on an Overland chassis, now on view in C. T. Silver's salesrooms. The body is built of alternate two-inch strips of mahogany and white holly, and the deck is in bird's-eye maple. Mounted on the circular radiator is a ship's bell, while a nickel propeller serves to keep the spare wheel in place. The front bumpers represent anchors and those at the rear oars. The upholstery is pigskin.

HIGHWAY TO COAST OF MILITARY VALUE

Through Artery, Like Lincoln Highway, Would Mean Much to Army, Says O'Ryan.

The following statement by Major Gen. John F. O'Ryan, N. G. N. Y., on the importance of a proper coast-to-coast highway was received last week by the Lincoln Highway Association:

"The value of a coast-to-coast highway, such as the Lincoln Highway, is self-evident from the military point of view. Motor transportation has been developed so rapidly during the past few years, and there are now in use in all the States in the Union so large a number of commercial trucks, that they constitute an important factor in any problem involving the transportation of men and supplies within the continental limits of the United States in time of war. It may be safely assumed that this wonderful development in mechanical transport has not reached its limit, and that the factor of motor transportation will each year have an increased value.

"The efficiency, however, of motor transportation is largely dependent upon the character of the route over which the vehicles operate. It is the experience of every motorist touring in this country, that the good roads over which rapid progress may be made with safety are unfortunately separated from other roads of like character by miles of wretched country road, and that the good time made in traveling on the former is frequently neutralized by accident and delay superinduced by the latter. It is this 'crazy-quilt' pattern of road-making which lessens the value of good road work in the United States so far as military uses are concerned.

"The Lincoln Highway project when completed will avoid this objection throughout the entire length of the immense travel zone which it will traverse. Few civilians realize how inadequate the great railroad systems of this country would prove for immediate concentration of large military forces with all their horses, mules, guns, wagons, camp equipage, impedimenta, and supplies.

"The availability of a highway such as that proposed would permit its use by fleets of motor trucks carrying supplies, the effect of which would be to relieve to that material extent the pressure on the railroads, and permit the transportation of a greater number of troops in a given time.

"Certainly the project would appeal to military officers whose studies force upon their attention the value of time in a defensive concentration."

Follow French and German Lead.

The British War Department has followed the lead of the German and French War Departments in showing a preference for motor trucks equipped with internal gear drive axles. Only a few weeks ago a prominent British truck manufacturer announced for the market a new 3½-ton model with an internal gear drive axle. Immediately the British War Department contracted for the available supply of this type. At the same time it released for delivery for home consumption a number of trucks equipped with another form of final drive and of the same carrying capacity.

PORTO RICO BUYING MANY AMERICAN CARS

Big Increase in Importations for Last Fiscal Year, with Total of 548 Cars Valued at $433,408 —No Foreign Makes.

The past year has shown a remarkable increase in the number of motor cars purchased in the Island of Porto Rico, 548 cars having been imported during the twelve months ended with June 30, 1915, according to a correspondent of the Department of Commerce. These cars were valued at $433,408 and were all of American manufacture. No foreign cars have been sold there in recent years. With the importation of cars during the past year insular officials say there are approximately 2,000 motor cars in the island, most of them in constant use.

In 1913 the number of cars brought into Porto Rico was 323 and their value $406,440. From these figures it will be seen that there has been a marked decrease in the average price paid for motor cars, the average price being under $800. There is no demand for high-priced cars. In 1914 there were 291 cars imported at a cost of $320,680. Automobile parts purchased in 1915 were valued at $91,045; in 1914, $70,025, and in 1913, $93,813. Automobile tires showed a falling off during the past year as compared with the previous fiscal year. Tire imports for 1915 were $251,426; for 1914, $296,201, and for 1913, $241,714.

Importations of motor cycles, bicycles, and tricycles have shown a decline for the past two years. These purchases for the twelve months ended with June, 1915, were $27,877, as compared with $43,967 for the previous twelve months and $51,367 for the twelve months ended with June, 1913.

The motor car is used as the chief means of passenger transportation, both private and public, about the island. There are regular motor lines running from San Juan to all sections of the island, and in many instances the fares charged are less than those charged by the railroads. Mail to about half of the towns of the island is delivered by motor, and most of the established motor lines operate an express and parcel delivery service.

Recently the jitney has made its appearance in competition with an interurban steam railroad running five miles between the towns of Catano and Bayamon. The railroad has carried 500,000 passengers a year, and the fare has been 10 cents until the arrival of the jitney. Then the railroad cut the fare to 5 cents, but the jitney continues to get many passengers at the old fare of 10 cents.

BIG BRIDGE FOR KINGSTON.

Monumental Structure Over Rondout Creek to be Built.

The State Highways Commission engineers last week came before the up-State Public Service Commission and asked for its approval of the monumental highway bridge which the State is to build across Rondout Creek and the Ulster & Delaware Railroad from Kingston to Port Ewen. There was no opposition to the plans and the commission indicated that its formal approval would be granted.

The bridge, which will span the creek from the high ground in Kingston to the high ground in Port Ewen, running from Wurth Street in Kingston, will be one of the important links in the New York-Albany automobile highway up the west shore of the river. At present it is necessary for motorists to detour back through Eddyville, around the "bay" in Rondout Creek. With the construction of this bridge the road will be much shortened and a great improvement effected for the city of Kingston. The State will pay the entire cost of the bridge out of the highways funds.

Non-Skid and Smooth Tread TIRES

at All Distributing Depots

Firestone Tire users created an over demand. For months the Firestone factory, largest exclusive tire plant in the world, has been way behind on orders.

We work a double shift of specialists, but we will not hurry the work. As much as we dislike to disappoint you on deliveries, it was out of the question to build more than we have built—and build them up to the Firestone standard.

We could have slighted workmanship but would not. We could have relaxed our inspection but would not. We could have shortened the period of aging and turned out "green tires" but would not.

And that policy is the very reason why we were oversold for so long in spite of our tremendous output. It is the very reason why thousands of motorists have waited weeks for Firestones, risking trouble with old tires and tubes rather than equip beyond imperative need with any other kind.

To these good loyal friends—to all who have been patient with us—we express our sincere thanks and deep appreciation. And to this thanks we add this promise—a full stock of Firestone Tires and Tubes in all sizes and styles—will be found at all our distributing points now.

We have never stopped adding to our enormous plant. The large wings, adding acres of floor space, that were constructed last year are now swelling our output with their efficient productiveness. This has enabled us to catch up to demand. And as "most miles per dollar" wins more and more converts to the host of Firestone users there will be more factory additions in readiness to answer the demand.

Never before has the car owning public been so positive and so unanimous in its verdict. Never before has the tire industry been made to feel so keenly the intelligent discrimination car owners have gained in tire selection. Firestone quality is irresistible.

Call on your dealer. He now has the Firestones you want, or can get them without delay.

INTERESTING HAPPENINGS IN MOTORDOM DURING THE WEEK

BRITISH MOTORISTS URGED TO MEET TAXES CHEERFULLY

War Increases on Gasoline and on Imported Cars Will Not Help the British Industry, Says Automobile Authority.

Concerning the effect of the new British taxes on motorists and car selling H. Massac Buist has something to say in a recent issue of the London Morning Post.

"Mr. McKenna's Autumn budget," he writes, "is of very special interest to motorists by reason of the fact that two of the comparatively few new taxes imposed directly concern them. Of these that which will have by far the widest effect is the increase of the petrol duty from 6 cents to 12 cents a gallon. This increase coincides with an advance, long anticipated, in the price of motor fuel to the consumer, with the result that the private motorist is now being asked to pay 8 cents a gallon more for his petrol at the various garages, though only 6 cents of that 8 cents enriches the Exchequer, and our stores of motor fuel are better than they were when war broke out.

"Against this, however, it must be observed that slight increases were made in the retail price of motor fuel in America a few months ago, whereas until the last few days there has been no corresponding advance in the price of fuel to the consumer in this country for two years or more. Further, of the motor fuel the world has been using since the outbreak of hostilities, an exceptionally heavy proportion has had to be supplied by the New World owing to transport difficulties in the Eastern Hemisphere.

"Rumanian supplies have been accumulating month by month, and sundry other sources of supply are also being held up until the Dardanelles shall be forced. The private motorist has, therefore, been very lucky in having come thus far through the war without having had to pay more for his fuel. One trusts, however, that matters will be so adjusted at no distant date that every farthing of the higher price that the car owner is now having to pay for petrol will be netted by the Exchequer. Hitherto certain classes of motor users have paid only half duties at the rate of three-halfpence a gallon for their fuel, as instance doctors, owners of commercial vehicles, and so forth.

"In regard to the increased rate of duty, this extra rate will be applicable without distinction to all classes of motor users. Thus on the petrol used for an industrial machine, or to run the doctor's car, the duty will be 9 cents per gallon, which sum is arrived at by adding to three halfpence duty already in vogue the new duty of 6 cents. In face of the facts that we are at war and that mortoring for other than military purposes is not possible in some of the other countries involved, it must be allowed that admirable judgment has been displayed in the Government's proposals as regards the new duty, which, while heavy for peace time, is certainly not excessive in war time. We must all prepare ourselves cheerfully to meet this increased cost.

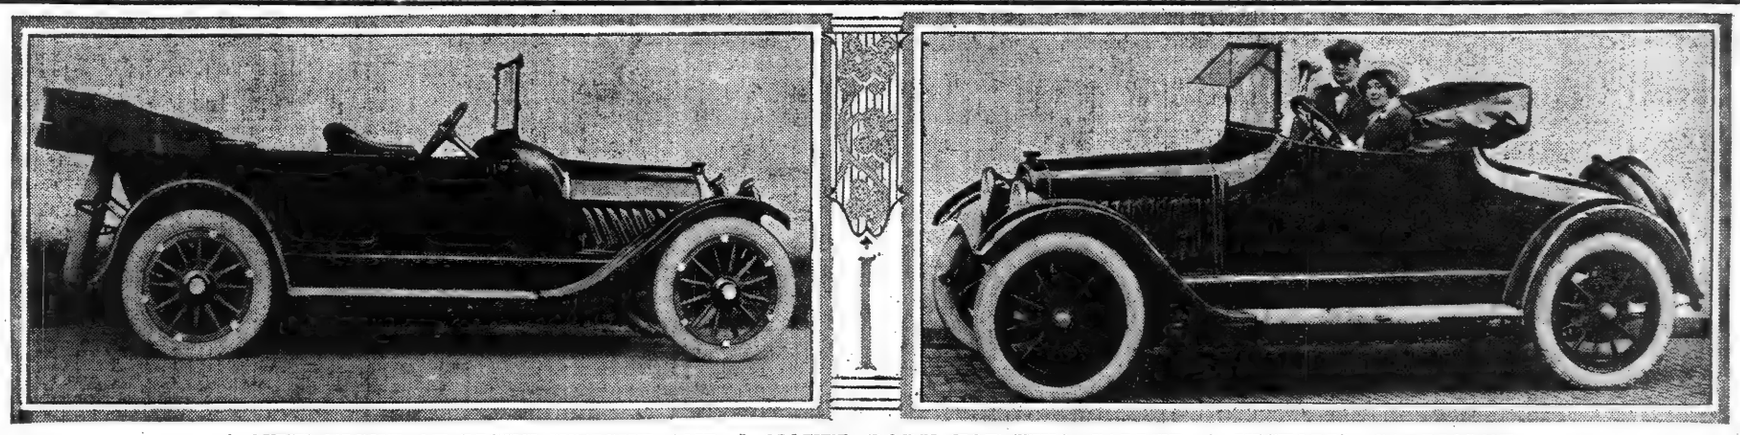
"Nor need the socialistic element cavil that it is not more in the case of the private motorist, because when Mr. McKenna's proposals are considered as a whole it will be appreciated that even the wealthiest of car owners is paying an extraordinarily high proportion of the dues being levied by taxation for carrying on the war, as instance notably the combined effects of the acts governing limitation of profits on war work in controlled establishments, the 50 per cent. tax on war-time excess profits from industries not controlled by the Government, and the new rates of income tax and of super-tax. Further, the revenue reaped from the new taxes on petrol goes into the Exchequer's general funds, and is not ear-marked for roadmaking.

"With our motor manufacturing industry controlled practically in its entirety by the Government under the Munitions act, it is not possible to deal at present with the question of what effect the higher price of fuel to the consumer will have on the further development of the mechanism of the self-propelled road vehicle. Obviously, however, it puts an additional premium on increasing the efficiency of carburetors and on endeavoring to eliminate, or at least greatly to reduce, the at present excessive waste of the power generated by the engine as it passes through the complicated transmission gear of the car to the back wheels by which it is propelled. Equally plain is the fact that dearer fuel will put a greater premium than ever on the evolution of the light car, with its proportionately modest appetite for petrol.

"The second point for motorists in Mr. McKenna's Budget is the imposition of a duty of 33 1-3 per cent. on imported motor vehicles, motor cycles, and component parts of them. This last section reveals an apt understanding on the part of the Exchequer of the business it has tackled. To impose a duty only on the import of complete vehicles would merely have led to a great increase in the practice of economizing freight charges by importing the parts and assembling them here. For example, for a long time past cars have been imported in parts and assembled in this country as being by far the most economical method. Under Mr. McKenna's Budget, however, 33 1-3 per cent. must be paid on the value of the parts imported.

"To avoid this, of course, American makers with large businesses in this country will instead manufacture their vehicles here in their entirety. In at least one case preparations have been making toward this end for a considerable time past. By taxing imported parts, too, a necessary check is imposed on firms adopting the policy of ordering the components for motor vehicles from America for assembly in these islands, to be marketed either in the guise of British-made or as partly home-made vehicles. On the other hand, there is nothing in Mr. McKenna's plan that can be interpreted in the guise of a protection of the British motor industry.

"This is sufficiently evident from the scale of the import duty imposed. It may be described as having no relationship to the problem of motor vehicle making here. It is instead merely a rate of duty to be paid in common on the importation of such diverse articles as cinema films, hats, plate glass, musical instruments, and clocks. The British car maker can take no advantage of it because he is engaged on war work, and is, therefore, unable to supply the public. Were Continental makers in France, Italy, or Belgium able to supply us with cars as well as our own industry the rate of duty would be practically prohibitive. As they are not available, however, the point does not matter. On the other hand, as a protection against the American industry under peace conditions the scale would be inadequate, being 11 2-3 per cent. lower than the American tariff on European built cars."



A NEW EIGHT OF LIGHT WEIGHT AND A NOVEL BODY FOR TWO CALLED A VICTORIA CABRIOLET.

On the left is the new Oldsmobile eight-cylinder touring car which weighs but 2,700 pounds. It has the V-type motor with the cylinders set at the usual 90-degree angle. The crank case is divided vertically and cast integral with the cylinders. There is a single camshaft having sixteen cams. The motor has a bore of 2⅞ inches and a stroke of 4¾. On the right is a new type of two-passenger body just brought out on the Chalmers six-cylinder chassis. It is called the Victoria Cabriolet, and can be quickly converted to closed form.

EARS TESTED BY SOUND OF MOTCRS

An Experiment Tried That Casts Doubt on Reliability of Human Hearing.

With a view to ascertaining the value, or otherwise, of personal judgment in the passing of timing gears, the following experiment was conducted recently by the engineers of the Pierce-Arrow Motor Car Company. A number of cars were taken and phonographic records were made from each, the receiver of the phonograph being placed six inches in front of the radiator and the motors run slowly, then speeded up to full throttle and shut down again. The number of observers were then requested to listen to the record and classify cars according to the noise they made. The following cars were selected:

A.—A 38 horse power runabout belonging to one of the officers of the company, which has run about 30,000 miles.

B.—A 48 horse power new chassis, which the testers stated was "not bad."

C.—Five-ton truck for domestic order.

D.—Two-ton truck for domestic order.

E.—A 38 horse power car prepared for Russia, in which the testers said the gears were fair.

F.—A 48 horse power experimental car which had run about 12,000 miles.

G.—This was a second record of E, purposely taken with the idea of confusing the observer.

H.—A 30 horse power six-cylinder Sunbeam, which has run nearly 13,000 miles.

I.—A 48 horse power, Model 4, which has run 2,700 miles.

J.—Touring car, just before shipment to Pittsburgh.

K.—The same car after being warmed up.

L.—A 38 horse power brougham ready for shipment to San Francisco.

M.—A 38 horse power touring car ready for shipping.

N.—A 38 horse power car prepared for Russia, not tested. This last car was an extremely noisy example, screeching badly.

Every car was placed in at least three different classes, five were placed in four different classes, while two were placed in every class. Taking the case of the first car A, the majority of observers placed this in Class 2. Treating all the cars in the same way, they may be classified as shown in the following table:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.
D	A	K	B	E
I	C		J	F
	G		N	H
				M

It is particularly to be noted that in the first class we have a two-ton truck and in the second class a five-ton truck, while in the fifth class, as agreed by the majority of observers, are two cars ready for shipping. Other idiosyncrasies of a similar nature will be found in each class. Perhaps the most ludicrous feature of the whole selection is that G is found in Class 2 and E in Class 5, while, as stated above, both are the same record, and this is in spite of the fact that most of the observers were given an opportunity of hearing these two records over again to see if they wished to correct their first impressions.

It must be admitted that the personal feature in the selection of quiet cars is almost, if not quite, worthless. It is even debatable whether the whole question is not one of psychology in which the mental condition or the nervous system of the observer very largely enters and makes his selection still more unreliable. Some further experiments are being prepared at the suggestion of Professor Curtian of Canisius College, who has devised a means of recording the sound optically.

FREE TIRE SERVICE SPREADS

Mobile Squad of Repair Men Ready to Perform Road Rescues.

Out on the road and the last spare tire or tube goes bang!—the last of them sometimes do go out with too scant equipment—who wouldn't welcome being able to get to the nearest telephone and have a casing or a tube whisked out day or night to one at full speed and put on quickly, too, and no charge for the service? Imagine, for instance, a woman motorist dressed in her "good clothes" going to a lawn fête or tea at the country club. Sqssh! goes a tube, and she surveys with dismay the prospect of having to get down in the dirt. It should please her to be able to telephone downtown and get a man to come out and do the job free.

This sort of service is the idea back of the Cleveland Free Tire Service Company, Ajax tire dealers in the Ohio city who originated a plan that is being widely copied. A motor cycle squad is in readiness at all times to go out on calls. The men change tires of any make, it matters not, without charge. If it is a puncture, the tube goes back to the service company to be repaired. The motorist has to have this done somewhere, and the company wants the work chiefly to remind the motorist of the service he got. The repair charge is just as low as anywhere. Of course, if a new tire or tube is supplied it is charged for at regular prices. This is to be expected. But the motorist is not expected to pay for having the goods brought to him, no matter what the run is.

FEW WOMEN WANT SUFFRAGE IN JERSEY

Census Figures Show Less Than One-Eighth Enrolled in Organizations.

INFANTS ON THE LISTS?

Newark to Have Continuous Oratory from 6 A. M. Today Till Just Before Polls Open Tomorrow.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 17.—Less than one-eighth of the women in New Jersey who would be eligible as voters in case the woman suffrage amendment should be ratified at the special election on Tuesday have shown sufficient interest in the votes-for-women movement to enroll with the two organizations which are actively engaged in the present battle to win the ballot for women.

This deduction is reached from statements made by the suffrage leaders themselves regarding the membership of their respective organizations and from irrefutable statistics compiled by the United States Census Bureau.

Mrs. Minnie J. Reynolds, Executive Secretary of the Woman's Political Union of New Jersey, one of the two woman organizations engaged in the equal suffrage fight, told THE TIMES correspondent recently that her organization claimed a membership of some 75,000. From all accounts Mrs. Reynolds did not undertake the number. Mrs. E. F. Feickert of Plainfield, who is President of the New Jersey Woman Suffrage Association, the other organization of women enlisted in the battle for the ballot, in reply to a question from THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent, said that the association had about 25,000 enrolled members. The Woman Suffrage Association is the older organization, having been in the field since 1867.

Census Figures of Women.

According to statistics contained in the reports of the United States Census Bureau from the Federal Census of 1910, the most recent, there were 736,659 women in New Jersey of 21 years of age or over. This was in a total population of 2,537,167. Taking the normal growth of the ten preceding years as a basis, the estimated population in this State at the beginning of the present year would have been 2,813,603. Taking the ratio set down in the Census reports of 100 women to each 108 men, 130,803 of the increase would represent women and of these 78,634 would be of voting age, making a total of 815,293 at the beginning of the present year.

Thus, even if all the enrolled members of the two suffrage organizations of this State, accepting the figures given by the leaders as correct, were women qualified to vote if the suffrage amendment should carry, the total membership would be less than one-eighth of all the women in the State qualified by age to exercise the right of suffrage.

But no woman is required to have attained her majority in order to enroll as a recruit with the suffrage organizations. It is safe to assume that a considerable proportion of the membership is made up of women below the voting age established by statute in New Jersey, even though the vast majority of those fighting in the suffrage ranks are women above 21.

Enroll Infants in Cradles.

The New Jersey Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, which has been in the field for many years claims a membership of only 25,000. When one of the leaders in the anti-movement was asked if the large number on the membership roll of the pro-suffrage organizations did not indicate that more women were in favor of woman suffrage than opposed she smiled.

"It might be an indication," she said, "if the suffragists followed our rules and enrolled only women of voting age. But they will accept infants in cradles as members in order to swell their numbers."

The Women's Political Union of New Jersey does not charge any membership fees, but an admission fee of 25 cents is levied on each new recruit as she enrolls with the organization. The work of the Women's Political Union is maintained by voluntary contributions from members who can afford to give, collections taken up at the meetings, and in some instances from the sale of tickets at the large meetings where speakers of unusual interest are scheduled to appear.

Men Urge Antis' Cause.

The Men's Anti-Suffrage League of New Jersey today issued an appeal to the voters in which it was urged that the men should vote against the amendment unless they felt satisfied that a majority of New Jersey's women wanted the ballot. The appeal was signed by Colonel William Libbey of Princeton, President of the league; all its executive officers, and the entire State Committee, on which are men prominent in every walk of life in New Jersey.

Ex-Chancellor William J. Magie of Elizabeth, T. H. Powers Farr, John C. Eisele, Edward Q. Keasbey, Walter C. Ellis, Garret A. Hobart, Dean W. F. Magie of Princeton, C. F. Randolph, Coleman E. Kissam, William H. Baldwin, Stockton B. Colt, Rabbi Solomon Foster, Henry M. Darcy, and I. Snowden Haines were among the signatories. Here it is in part:

"The suffragists' open contempt for the mental qualifications of women who refuse to follow their lead argues a notion that their own will is alone worth counting, but the average man perceives no marked superiority in the suffragist, and he would be quite ashamed to approve, by his vote, contempt for women who do not seek the ballot, who, by the bye, are likely to comprise most of his acquaintances. Fortunately, we need no referendum to show that only a minority of women demand the ballot."

Will Talk Till Polls Open.

Both suffragists and anti-suffragists rested on their oars today. Sermons on the suffrage issue were preached in many churches and there were some evening and afternoon meetings but little or no open air oratory. The antis

GERMAN TORPEDO BOAT SUNK BY FERRYBOAT

Forty Lost as the Result of a Baltic Collision in the Dark.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18.—A large German torpedo boat was run down and cut in two by a German steam ferry, which left Trelleborg, Sweden, at 6 o'clock Friday night with all lights out, says a Reuter dispatch from Malmo, Sweden.

Only five of the torpedo boat's crew of forty-five were saved.

MISS CAVELL SHOT BY GERMAN OFFICER

Englishwoman, Condemned to Death, Said to Have Fainted Before Firing Party.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 17, (Dispatch to The London Daily Mail.)—Such details as it is possible to collect here concerning the execution of Miss Edith Cavell, at Brussels, are as follows:

The charge against her was of aiding Belgians to escape to England. It is stated that she hid them in her house and provided them with money and addresses in England, and helped to smuggle them across the frontier. A German military court found her guilty and sentenced her to death by shooting.

The execution ground was a garden, or yard, in Brussels, surrounded by a wall. The German firing party of six men and an officer were drawn up in the garden and awaited their victim. She was led in by soldiers from the house near by, blindfolded with a black scarf. Up to this minute the woman, though deadly white, had stepped out bravely to meet her fate, but before the rifle party her strength at last gave out and she tottered and fell to the ground, thirty yards or more from the spot where she was to have been shot.

The officer in charge of the execution walked to her as she lay prone on the ground motionless. The officer then drew a large service revolver from his belt, took steady aim from his knee and shot the woman through the head. The firing party looked on as the officer quietly returned his revolver to its case and ordered the soldiers to carry the body to the house where charge was taken of it by a Belgian woman, acting under instruction of the Spanish Minister, who had undertaken the responsibility for the body, pending arrangements for burial.

The execution has shocked the whole Belgian community, who speak of it as the bloodiest act of the whole war.

WARSHIPS MAY JOIN HUNT FOR GERMANS

Five Great Sea-Fighters, Norfolk Hears, May Search for the Fugitive Interned Officers.

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Oct. 17.—Five large United States warships, according to a persistent report, have put to sea to join in the search for the power boat Eclipse, in which are six warrant officers and five seamen of the interned German cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm. The fact that the New York, Louisiana, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, and Minnesota slipped from Hampton Roads early this morning, twenty-four hours in advance of their scheduled time to sail, lends color to this report. It is said that these warships, which were ordered to begin target practice on Tuesday, have been ordered to cruise several hundred miles to sea during the night and tomorrow, in search of the Eclipse. The Navy Yard officials deny the report.

A report current early tonight that the Eclipse had been picked up, was officially denied. Admiral Beatty said that there was no news from the Eclipse. The Virginia Life Saving Station confirmed the report that a craft answering the description of the Eclipse was sighted off the coast on Monday afternoon, going south. Admiral Beatty said later that his investigation had developed the fact that a fishing yacht resembling the Eclipse passed south at about this hour. He believes this was the craft which the life savers saw.

Incoming steamships reported today that two English cruisers were standing off the Capes, evidently intent on intercepting the Germans. Approaching men assert that the Navy Commandant has been deceived as to the time of the departure of the Eclipse. They believe that she left ten days before the alarm was given.

The revenue cutter Onondaga sailed this morning to join the searchers for the Eclipse. The other cutters engaged in the chase are the Seminole, Androscoggin, Panther, Itasca, Tallapoosa, Apache, Monawk, and Seneca.

MAIL BY AEROPLANE IN MIDDLE WEST SOON

Two Experimental Routes Planned —Force of 300 Aviators in Time as Nucleus of War Corps.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 17.—The work of planning and mapping the first aeroplane mail routes to be instituted by the United States Post Office Department has been completed, according to Albert Bond Lambert, St. Louis aviator and balloon enthusiast, and ranking Captain of the United States Aviation Corps. Two routes of sixty miles each have been planned, one entirely in Missouri and the other taking in parts of both Missouri and Illinois. The interstate route will start at Peruque, Mo., cross the Mississippi River to Golden Eagle and Brussels, Ill., detour westward to Beechville, on the Illinois shore, and thence back to Peruque. The Missouri route will cross a country without railways.

This plan, fathered by Postmaster General Burleson, is now in Congressional appropriation to put it into effect. The service is to be a peg upon which to hang aerial preparedness for war. It is planned to place in the Government service between 200 and 300 aeroplanes in a short time after the aerial mail routes are started. The aviators will be trained by the Government; all will be listed in the Aviation Reserve Corps and must serve in case of war.

WRECK STOLEN AUTO; ONE KILLED, 6 HURT

Son of A. B. Wenzell, Artist, Has Neck Broken When the Car Hits Telegraph Pole.

TWO OF PARTY IN NYACK JAIL

Seven Englewood Boys Take Prosecutor Huckin's Machine for a Joy Ride to Haverstraw.

Special to The New York Times.

ENGLEWOOD, N. J., Oct. 17.—As a result of a joyride by high school boys in a stolen car, which resulted in a wreck in Rockland County, New York, early this morning, one of the party is dead, four others are in the hospital at Nyack, N. Y., with serious injuries, and the two remaining members of the party are held in the Nyack Jail on the charge of manslaughter. All the boys live in Englewood.

The Dead.

WENZELL, ARTHUR ALLAN, 16 years old, of Winthrop Place, son of A. B. Wenzell, the illustrator; neck broken.

The Injured.

BOLEN, EDWARD, of William Street; nose broken, cuts about the head and body; in Nyack Hospital.

FLOTARD, GEORGE, of South Dean Street; head and face cut and bruised.

LACHMUND, WILLIAM, of Palisade Avenue; fracture of skull and lacerations; may die; in Nyack Hospital.

MARSA, FRANCIS, of Railroad Avenue; shoulder sprained, bruised about face and head.

MINSKY, JAMES, of Palisade Avenue; spine injured, face cut and bruised; in Nyack Hospital.

According to the story told by Flotard and Marsa, the chief blame lies with Lachmund. Wenzell was a student in the Englewood High School, and a chum of Flotard, who is in the eighth grade and attends school in the same building. The two boys went downtown together last night, and there met the other five. The party then walked past the Englewood Theatre and saw at the curb in front a Ford automobile belonging to Prosecutor Thomas J. Huckin of Bergen County, who with his family was watching the show.

Lachmund is employed in his father's delicatessen store and drives his father's Ford. Prosecutor Huckin had taken out the spark plug from his car, but Lachmund had a Ford spark plug in his pocket, and the boys decided to take the car out for a drive.

They rode through Teaneck, Emerson, Westwood, Harrington Park, Tappan, and Orangeburg, and reached Haverstraw, where it is said that Lachmund and another boy had two or three drinks. At 1:30 they started home, traveling at high speed to make up lost time. Between Congers and Valley Cottage the car crashed into a telegraph pole and was knocked to pieces. All of the occupants were thrown out, and Wenzell and Lachmund struck the telegraph pole.

Hardly had the accident happened when Leopold Kley of Congers drove up on his way home and found the boys. He notified E. F. Anderson, a garage owner of Congers, and Dr. Ralph De Baun was summoned by telephone.

When he came to the group of boys, all badly cut, bruised, and shaken up, he went first to Wenzell and found that he was dead. This horrified the others, and Flotard and Marsa, who were still able to walk, slipped away and walked to Nyack.

Meanwhile Prosecutor Huckin, who had come out of the theatre a little after 11 o'clock and found his car gone, had started an investigation. Sheriff Heath and County Detectives Louis Nestel and W. V. A. Blauveit were searching the main roads out of Englewood, and all near-by towns had been notified by telephone. At a little before 2 o'clock this morning a Nyack policeman who knew of the automobile theft strolled into the Northern Railroad station and found two injured and badly frightened boys, who admitted they had been in the wrecked automobile. They were taken to Nyack Police Headquarters, and told their story to the local authorities and to Prosecutor Huckin and Sheriff Heath. The four badly injured boys had already been taken to the Nyack Hospital in Anderson's automobile.

Coroner Theodore Semendinger of Rockland County said he would await the result of Lachmund's injuries before holding an inquest. The body of Wenzell, which was at first taken to Haverstraw, was brought back to the home of his parents this afternoon.

AUTOS KILL 2 BOYS AT PLAY.

Lad Dashes in Front of E. S. Hatch's Car—One Driver Arrested.

Thomas Cain, 4 years old, of 442 West 125th Street was mortally injured yesterday afternoon when an automobile owned by Edward S. Hatch of the law firm of Hatch & Clute, 100 Broadway, struck him as he was playing tag in the street near his home. Mr. Hatch was not in the machine, which was being driven by his chauffeur, G. T. Swanson of 250 East Sixty-seventh Street.

The boy ran from the sidewalk, chased by a playmate, Thomas Brown, also 4 years old. He dodged from the path of one automobile only to dash before the machine operated by Swanson. Patrolman Richard Jensen of the West 125th Street Station called Dr. Frascola from Knickerbocker Hospital. The boy died in that institution last night from a fractured skull.

In the car with Swanson was Hugh A. Flood, who lives at 124th Street and Amsterdam Avenue and is a patrolman attached to the Poplar Street Station, Brooklyn. Swanson was taking him home.

Philip Janson, 5 years old, of 314 East Eighty-second Street, was knocked down by an automobile driven by Joseph Lionetti of 340 East Twenty-second Street yesterday afternoon while he was playing in the street between First and Second Avenues. He was removed to Flower Hospital, where he died. Lionetti was arrested on the complaint of the boy's father, who charged him with reckless driving and with being on the wrong side of the street.

FATALLY HURT IN CRASH.

Newark Motor Cyclist Runs Into Heavy Automobile.

71 Persons Lost on Amiral Hamelin When Steamship Is Sunk by Submarine

PARIS, Monday, Oct. 18.—Seventy-one persons lost their lives when the French steamship Amiral Hamelin was torpedoed and sunk by a submarine.

A dispatch to the Havas Agency from Marseilles, which brings this news, does not specify whether the victims were passengers or members of the crew.

A Paris dispatch sent early on Sunday morning said that the steamer Ispahan had arrived at Marseilles from Madagascar, having on board Captain Guibert and the crew of the steamship Admiral, which was recently sunk by a submarine. Probably this is the same vessel referred to in this morning's dispatch from Marseilles. It is not stated when and where the steamer was sunk.

The Amiral Hamelin was a steel screw steamer of 5,051 tons gross. She was built in 1901 by Forges & Co. at Havre. She was owned by the Chargeurs Réunis, her home port being Havre.

Her movements have not been reported in the Maritime Register since March 5, when she left Havre for a destination not stated.

GERMANY CHARGES MURDERS AT SEA

Bernstorff Sends to Lansing Nicosian Affidavits Accusing British of Killing Submarine Men.

USE OF OUR FLAG ASSERTED

Four Muleteers on American Boat Swear Drowning Men and Prisoners Were Shot.

Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, announced yesterday that he had forwarded to Secretary Lansing several affidavits alleging that eleven German sailors of a submarine crew were slain in cold blood by the crew of a British patrol vessel named the Baralong, which flew the American flag at the time of the attack. It is also alleged that the British patrol boat was emblazoned with the American flag painted on boards and hung over the sides.

The affidavits were prepared in New Orleans, where the steamship Nicosian, on board of which some of the German sailors sought refuge, arrived a short time ago. On the vessel's arrival several of the crew said a British patrol boat had sunk a German submarine vessel, and subsequently when the survivors of the submarine were struggling in the water, or had sought refuge aboard the Nicosian they had been killed by the British seamen.

Count von Bernstoff issued the following statement:

"According to the affidavits, six of the German sailors were shot while seeking rescue in the water, the Captain after raising one hand in surrender, and the others were shot down after taking refuge on the steamship Nicosian. The British patrol boat, up to the moment of firing, it is alleged, not only flew the American flag, but conspicuously exhibited the flag on large boards suspended on either side of the boat.

"One of the statements is signed by James J. Curren, foreman of the gang in charge of transporting mules on the Nicosian from New Orleans to England. The other statement, corroborating in detail that made by Curren, is signed by Charles D. Hightower, Amerson Palen, Edward Clark and R. H. Cosby, all employed as muleteers on the Nicosian. The affidavits were prepared in New Orleans before Charles E. Denechaud.

"According to the sworn statement of Foreman Curren, the Nicosian reached the war zone on Aug. 16. On Aug. 19 a submarine was sighted. The submarine fired a warning shot and hoisted a signal directing all aboard the Nicosian to abandon the ship. While Captain Manning was giving orders to the wireless operator, a ship was sighted on the horizon. The submarine fired a second warning shot, which went high over the heads of the men and carried away the wireless. After telling of the departure of the crew in boats, Curren continues: 'The ship we had sighted on the horizon was sufficiently close to us now to make out her flag, which we recognized as an American flag. On her respective sides amidship were two boards with the American flag painted on each. The size of these painted flags was about 12 by 16 feet.

New Arrival Opens Fire.

"'After the submarine had opened fire on the deserted Nicosian the Baralong came up behind and passed the attacked ship, immediately opening fire on the submarine with rifles. Then the Baralong began firing with cannon, whose screens fell away and exposed the muzzles of the guns. After the screens mentioned fell away and the guns began to fire the American flag at the pole at the stern of the Baralong was dipped and the British flag hoisted instead.'

"One of the shots from the Baralong carried away the conning tower of the submarine and killed several Germans. As the submarine had begun to sink, the rest of the crew, numbering eleven, plunged into the ocean, five reaching the rope ladder of the Nicosian and clambering aboard, while six swam about, finally securing hold of the fall lines of the lifeboats. The submarine disappeared, and the men from the Nicosian boarded the Baralong. The Captain shook hands with the Nicosian crew, and, according to Curren, was highly elated over the outcome of the encounter. He then ordered his own men along the rail, and, according to Curren, directed them to shoot the German sailors cling to the Nicosian's rigging. Some of the men started firing, and all of the six men in the water were killed in cold blood.

"The Baralong was then made fast to the Nicosian, which was boarded by the British crew. Captain McBride of the Baralong, when ordering out the marines in charge of a petty officer, gave the command: 'Get them all; take no prisoners.'

Saw the Captain Shot.

"Curren tells of the killing of the Germans on board the Nicosian. The ship's carpenter, he was told, killed one with a revolver after he threw up his hands. One was killed in the engine room hatch as he was descending a ladder. The chief engineer, says Curren, boasted of having killed another. Curren says he saw the bodies of the slain, and adds: 'Each one of them had a hole in the forehead made by shots, and, which I was told, were fired to make sure a good job was done.'

"Curren says the German Captain, who had been hiding in the bow of the ship, rushed to the side and leived overboard. He threw up one hand in surrender, but several volleys of shots were fired. After the Captain was shot the marines returned to their own ship, and there was great rejoicing among them. 'The steward of our ship opened a bottle of whiskey and presented it to the gunner and his friends.' Curren as-

ITALY GETS A LOAN OF $25,000,000 HERE

Money to be Used to Buy Clothing, Food, and Coal in America, as Well as War Munitions.

YEAR NOTES TO BEAR 6%

Lee, Higginson & Co. Forming Distributing Syndicate and Promise a Conversion Privilege.

Lee, Higginson & Co. have arranged with the Italian Government for a loan of $25,000,000 in one-year notes bearing 6 per cent. interest, the proceeds to be used in the purchase of supplies and to stabilize Italian exchange. The banking firm is forming a syndicate to distribute the notes. A public offering will be made in a few days. A statement issued by the bankers yesterday said that valuable conversion privileges would accompany the notes.

The transaction grew out of the appointment of Lee, Higginson & Co. as fiscal agents in this country for Italy. Dispatches from Rome three weeks ago told of the appointment, and it was reported shortly afterward that financing in behalf of the Italian Government would be undertaken as soon as terms could be arranged. It is understood that the amount originally contemplated was $10,000,000, but that after this was tentatively agreed upon the bankers found that conditions were good in this country for the flotation of a larger amount. The notes will be issued in $100, $500, and $1,000 denominations, with the greater part in the small sizes.

Want Italians Here to Buy.

As in the case of the great Anglo-French loan, especial effort will be made by the syndicate to bring about as wide a participation as possible. This is the reason for the division of the issue into many small denominations, as it is believed that citizens of Italian descent will welcome the opportunity to help the Government meet its war expenses through purchases of the notes. The issue will be payable, principal and interest, in gold in the United States.

This is the first loan arranged in this country by Italy since the war began. Last Spring, before Italy entered the conflict, a commission of Italian bankers came to New York and submitted proposals to the bankers here for a loan of about $50,000,000. It was understood at the time that banking credits, to be drawn against in the purchase of supplies, were sought rather than an arrangement entailing the public sale of securities. The negotiations were dropped after a few days, and reports had it that local bankers declined to participate when it was found that certain terms regarding security for the loan would not be complied with.

In announcing the $25,000,000 loan Lee, Higginson & Co. made no mention of the terms, but it is believed that this borrowing is a part of the general credit scheme of the allied nations, and that the British Government had a part in the arrangement of the matter.

Italy Must Buy in America.

The proceeds of the note sale will by no means be limited to the payment for war munitions, it is said. Foodstuffs, coal, and clothing are needed in Italy on a large scale, and the markets of the United States are about the only ones where supplies may be bought. Italy in normal times gets the bulk of her coal from England, but will be unable to fill her demands from that source this year, and the hold of the Turks on the Dardanelles precludes the importation of Russian wheat. For several years before the war American manufacturers of shoes and clothing widened their market in Italy, and this trade is expected to receive greater impetus than before with the nation in a position to finance purchases readily.

An important phase of the loan is expected to be its effect in bringing Italian exchange rates back to a basis more nearly approaching normal. The depreciation of lire in terms of the dollar has for months been a serious handicap on trade relations between the two countries. At present lire checks are quoted around 6.43, which shows a decline from the normal rate of approximately 23 per cent. Italian agents were reported in September to be seeking several hundred thousand tons of coal in the domestic market, but the fall of exchange, coupled with high freight rates, was a factor in terminating the negotiations.

TOWN TO HONOR MRS. GALT.

Wytheville, Va., Her Old Home, to Send Wedding Gift to Her.

Special to The New York Times.

ROANOKE, Va., Oct. 17.—Citizens of Wytheville, Va., the childhood home of Mrs. Norman Galt, President Wilson's fiancée, are preparing to present to the couple on their marriage a suitable wedding present, which will be in the nature of a municipal gift.

All of the residents of Wytheville, school children and grown-ups, will be asked to contribute. Although Mrs. Galt has never returned to her childhood home since her marriage, in 1906, she is still remembered by many of the residents there.

The following communication was received today from President Wilson, replying to a message of felicitation sent to him on behalf of Wytheville people by the Mayor:

My Dear Mayor: Thank you most warmly for your message of Oct. 8. You may be sure that I am exceedingly proud of the honor that a daughter of Wytheville has conferred upon me. Cordially and sincerely yours, WOODROW WILSON.

ALLIED FORCES INVADE BULGARIA, DEFEAT ARMY AND CAPTURE STRUMNITZA; MACKENSEN ASKS FOR MORE TROOPS

Greece Impressed by Allies' Balkan Plans, and May Abandon Neutrality to Join Their Ranks

ATHENS, Oct. 17.—Apparently the energetic action of the Allies and the opening of actual hostilities between Bulgaria and Serbia is rapidly modifying the attitude of the Greek anti-war party.

There is credible authority for the statement that King Constantine is preparing to go to Saloniki in the near future, and it is said in circles usually well informed that Greece will abandon her attitude of neutrality as soon as the concentration of troops is completed and army arrangements perfected.

The impression prevails here that Rumania also will soon ally herself with the Entente powers.

OFFICIAL REPORT ON ZEPPELIN RAID

Extensive Damage Inflicted in Five Distinct Areas of London.

ONE SMALL HOTEL WRECKED

Described as a Haphazard Attack, Airships Flying Too High to See Definite Targets.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The following account of the Zeppelin air raid on Wednesday night was prepared by a writer appointed by the Home Office:

"On the evening of Oct. 13 another aerial attack was directed against London, which differed in no material respect from those made on previous occasions. The enemy's vessel or vessels flew high, at an altitude chosen, no doubt, in order to prevent as far as possible the danger of damage or destruction from anti-aircraft guns.

"The darkening of the metropolitan area, together with the height at which the aircraft traveled, certainly prevented the enemy from discovering the exact position of places of importance.

"As on the last occasion, the official report issued in Berlin proves the raiders to have been grossly in error in most cases as to where they were dropping their bombs, and if we can suppose that they had really some definite objective, other than mere haphazard destruction of the lives and property of noncombatants, then, owing to the height at which they flew, they entirely failed to attain that objective.

"Except for one chance shot, the damage was exclusively on property not connected with the conduct of the war. Of the 127 persons killed or injured, none, save one or two soldiers, who were in the street at the time, were combatants.

Failed to Cause a Panic.

"As for the moral effect for which presumably the enemy was seeking—that was all to his disadvantage. The raid occurred at an hour when practically no one except children was in bed, and, though the shops in the principal shopping areas were closed, places of entertainment were full, and the masses of the population were about their ordinary evening's pleasure or at business.

"A very much larger number of people, therefore, were aware of the enemy's presence than on previous occasions, but the population of London, though hundreds of thousands heard the sound of bursting bombs and the guns, remained cool and free from panic. There were, if possible, even less signs of excitement than on the previous occasions. The official warnings to take shelter were better observed, and when the aircraft passed and the guns ceased firing, most of the people who had been watching the bombardment went quietly to bed, and were undisturbed by the second raid, which took place about midnight in another part of the London area.

"In the theatres, from which the sounds of the firing and explosions could plainly be heard, there was a commendable absence of panic. Altogether the imperturbability of the people of London would appear to offer a striking contrast to the behavior of the population on the occasion of rehearsals of aircraft attacks recently said to have been made on certain German towns.

Bomb Misses Big Crowd.

"When the results of the raid were examined next morning five distinct areas could be distinguished in which damage was done. The first of these is an area in which there is little or no residential property, some large buildings devoted to various kinds of business, and comparatively wide streets. In this area bombs were dropped containing high explosives, which in four cases fell upon the streets, and in the fifth upon the back premises of one large building thronged with people.

"One of the bombs, which apparently was of large size, penetrated the street into the subways containing gas and water mains, and, in exploding, melted the gas pipes, setting alight a fire which, though slight in extent, lasted for several hours. The explosion of this bomb damaged the buildings round about considerably, and destroyed almost all the glass in the neighborhood. It also was responsible for a number of casualties, which will all be the subject of an inquest. Those killed were either sitting in the front rooms of the buildings, or were working or walking in the streets.

"The second area contains a large block of residential flats, some of which are occupied as offices. Like many other blocks of flats in London, this one has a stretch of garden behind the buildings, and one of the enemy's high explosive bombs fell in this garden, close to the flats themselves. One or two rooms on the ground floor were totally wrecked, and on the first floor considerable damage was done. Another bomb fell on the top of one of

CRITICAL WEEK FOR BRITISH CABINET

Conscription Question Acute and Many Queries Put by Uneasy M. P.'s.

CHURCHILL MAY GO TO FRONT

Must First Quit Cabinet—Sir Edward Carson Stays Away from Council Board.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18.—The Daily Chronicle's Parliamentary correspondent says this morning:

"This week promises to be one of exceptional importance in the political world. The order paper of the House of Commons is studded with questions which reveal the uneasiness of mind on the part of the members of Parliament in regard to various aspects of the war, and a much more critical attitude toward the Government than heretofore.

"It is reported that Winston Churchill, who has long been itching to be in the fighting line, intends to join his regiment. In that case he would of course resign his office as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

"Sir Edward Carson's position is peculiar. To the report of his resignation he himself gave an emphatic denial; but his absence from three successive Cabinet councils at a time of grave emergency remains unexpained.

"Another Cabinet council will be held today. Subjects of momentous importance will come under review at this meeting of Ministers. It had been generally assumed that the question of compulsory military service would be left in abeyance until Lord Derby had completed his task of chief recruiter.

"That, however, is not the intention of some members of the Cabinet. They intend, it appears, to attempt to force a decision now in favor, not of immediate, but of ultimate compulsion. Doubtless the conscriptionists feel sincerely that compulsion is necessary to win the war; but the voluntarists, who are still in a majority in the Cabinet, are equally convinced that the abandonment of our present system, before it has been tried to the uttermost, would not strengthen, but weaken our arms.

"The truth is that, though there is urgent need for a larger flow of recruits, men are still coming in fast enough to supply all the requirements of our present armies in the field, but Lord Kitchener, as in duty bound, looks ahead, and in order to maintain in the field for the whole of next year the seventy divisions which the War Secretary estimates to be necessary at the present rate at which recruits are coming in, will need to be doubled.

"In the next four months Lord Kitchener will want in round numbers 500,000 new men. A weekly flow of 30,000 men for the infantry is needed, with 5,000 more for ancillary services, such as the Army Service Corps and the Royal Army Medical Corps, branches of the army into which men above the present military age can be drafted.

"The national register has revealed the existence of 1,900,000 unstarred men of military age, (meaning by unstarred men those who are not engaged on munitions, in productive industries, and on railways; for the railway service, though not a productive employment, has already yielded all the men of military age who can be spared.) This total of 1,900,000 includes a considerable percentage of men who have been already rejected for the army on account of physical disabilities. The number of men really available for the army does not exceed 1,250,000. We shall know when Lord Derby's task is done how many of these we can get under the voluntary system.

"It is worth nothing that Lord Derby was appointed chief recruiter not as the result of a Cabinet decision but on Lord Kitchener's own initiative. An attempt to rush the Cabinet in favor of compulsion almost as soon as Lord Derby put his hand to the plough might produce disastrous consequences. It can only divide the Cabinet, and if there is a breakup of the Cabinet there will be division in the nation. The conscriptionist Ministers will be frustrating their own objects by precipitating a crisis."

London Times Flouts Peace Rumors.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18.—Rumors that peace overtures have been made between Berlin and London are again current in Berlin, according to a Times correspondent, but The Times in an editorial characterizes the idea that Great Britain is in a temper to listen to any peace talk as "too grotesque for serious refutation."

These rumors probably are the outcome of discussions in the British newspapers concerning the differences of opinion in the Cabinet and the dissatisfaction with the Government mani-

Strumnitza Taken by the Allies

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18, 4:20 A. M.—A dispatch from Rome, just received by The Daily Chronicle, reports that the allied British, French, and Serbian forces have occupied Strumnitza, in Bulgaria, after having been attacked by 40,000 Bulgarians at Vilandovo, in Serbia, whom they defeated and pursued into Bulgaria.

Capture Officially Confirmed

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18, 5:10 A. M.—Strumnitza, in Bulgaria, has been occupied by the allied armies of Great Britain, France, and Serbia, according to official advices from Saloniki telegraphed by the Reuter correspondent at Athens.

Various points, dominating the railway from Saloniki to the interior, have been occupied by allied troops, the correspondent adds, and the protection of the line is regarded as assured.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18.—The allied forces from Saloniki have begun operations against the Bulgarians with unexpected zeal, and already the Serbo-Anglo-French forces have penetrated into Bulgarian territory, just north of the Greek boundary, and are attacking the Bulgarian stronghold of Strumnitza, which is about five miles from the Serbian frontier.

Advices to this effect come from Saloniki by a Reuter message by way of Athens.

It is declared that "the fall of Strumnitza is imminent," and the dispatch continues:

"The Serbs, aided by the Allies, repulsed the Bulgarians, who retreated on Strumnitza.

"It is learned from diplomatic sources that Field Marshal von Mackensen, the German Commander, has demanded reinforcements."

A Rome dispatch quotes this message from Athens, published in the Idea Nazionale, dealing with the operations:

"Serbo-French troops initiated after their success at Vilandovo, a rapid counter-offensive action and penetrated into the enemy's territory and are marching victoriously on Strumnitza, the occupation of which is probable, owing to the feeble resistance of the enemy.

"One-third of the Serbian army has been sent against Field Marshal von Mackensen on the Drina, Save and Danube Rivers, while the other two-thirds have been placed along the eastern front against the Bulgarian forces. The latter at many points have taken the offensive."

This Rome dispatch gives the only inkling of the result of the battle which early Athens messages said was proceeding between French troops and the army of 40,000 Bulgarians, who were reported in Saturday's dispatches as attempting to cut the railroad near the bridges between Hudovo and Vilandovo, about twenty miles from the Greek frontier.

One dispatch from Athens said the Bulgarian artillery was bombarding the Vilandovo garrison, which was offering a stout resistance. Allies were also reported in contact with the invaders near Gievgeli, about nine miles from the frontier. These movements of the Allied forces probably marked the beginning of the drive into Bulgaria, Vilandovo being about twelve miles southwest of Strumnitza.

The allied troops are going to the aid of the Serbians as fast as the railroad facilities from the base will permit. A Malta dispatch of Reuter's says that "signs are not wanting that the Allies in the course of the next few days will be landing strong new forces at Saloniki." Meanwhile France has formally declared war on Bulgaria as from Oct. 16, at 6 A. M.

In addition to pushing the expedition landing at Saloniki, the British, according to a dispatch from Athens to the Paris Journal, will operate along the Bulgarian-Turkish coast at Dedeaghatch and Enos, from which points quick access may be had to the route the Teutonic forces must take to reach Constantinople.

Coasts Mined by Bulgaria.

The Bulgarian Government has announced officially that mines have been laid along the coasts of the Black and Aegean Seas. Lights have been extinguished and the Port of Dedeaghatch has been closed, except to neutral merchantmen.

In their resistance to the Teutonic-Bulgarian invaders the Serbians are being helped by the weather, which is cold and Winter-like. The rains have set in and are impeding the movements of troops and guns, which, at the best, must be slow over what answer for roads in the Balkan States. The Germans, however, say they have taken the heights south of Belgrade, while along the Danube the army of General von Gallwitz is pussing the Serbians back.

The official report of the operations issued by the Berlin War Office yesterday reads:

The German, Austro-Hungarian and Bulgarian troops continue victorious in Serbia.

All the heights south of Belgrade are in German hands. General von Gallwitz's army has thrown the enemy behind Ralja, southwest of Semendria.

General Boyadjieff's Bulgarian army has forced a passage of the lower Timok and stormed Glogovica mountain, 1,198 metres high, and made prisoners of 200 Serbians. He also took eight cannon. The Bulgarians also have advanced toward Pirot.

General von Mackensen's army up to the present has taken sixty-eight Serbian cannon.

Sofia Reports Many Successes.

The latest Bulgarian official bulletin, received from Sofia yesterday, is dated Friday and is as follows:

Yesterday, despite the bad weather in the theatre of operations—rain and fog and snow on the mountain tops—our armies pursued the offensive slowly, with great exertions, all along the whole front.

On the western slopes of the great Balkan range our troops reached the line of Novokorito, Aldinatz, Repuchnitza, Travynobouche, and Travivrh. In the Valley of Nichava our forces occupied the important strategical point of Vraja.

In Macedonia our advance proceeded rapidly. In the region of the Upper Bregalnitza Valley our troops have attained the line of Dratcha, Tchougagolak, Tchjavka Peak, and Colak Planina, and occupied Tzarevoselo, Pehtchevo, and Beroyo.

A heavy Winter rain fell yesterday in the Austro-German theatre. Nevertheless, the German advance continued, the Serbians being repulsed on the whole front south of Belgrade.

The armies of our allies have reached the line of Rouschani, Pinossava, Lechtani, and Pitopek, and in the Morava Valley have reached the line of Oudovitche, Salakovatz, Smolianaz, and Gradevo. The Serbians have evacuated the bank of the Danube as far as Golubatz.

The Vienna War Office bulletin has this to say of operations:

Austro-Hungarian and German battalions stormed yesterday in an encircling attack from the north and west the Serbian positions on the Avala Mountains. Austrian troops, advancing on both sides of the road from Belgrade to Grocka, captured the heights of Velky, Malmein, and Pasuljisse.

Southwest of Semendria and southeast of Pozarevac the enemy was again repulsed by the Germans.

The Bulgarians crossed the Timok below Zaievar and stormed the height of Glogovica, east of Knaszevac, capturing 200 prisoners and eight guns. Their attack is everywhere progressing.

Additional reports, says another dispatch from Sofia of the same date, show that the Bulgarian losses in the fighting at Trin and Bosgilegrad were 70 killed and 500 wounded, instead of 18 killed and 190 wounded, according to the figures first available. It is added that the second day's operations by the Bulgarians were notably successful, especially in the direction of Sultan-Tepe, which is considered one of Serbia's strongest positions.

Teuton Force Estimated at 280,000.

The Austro-German troops on the Save-Danube front are estimated at fourteen divisions, (280,000 men,) according to a dispatch to the Paris Temps from Nish under Saturday's date. The Teutonic pressure continues in the region of Pozarevac.

"The Bulgarians," the dispatch continues, "are attacking with large forces along the line between Zaiecar and Kotchane, in the vicinity of Timok and Breganitza. They have succeeded in passing Raikov, Savat, and Stoikovo Brdo.

"To the south the Bulgarians have forced back the Serbians in the region of Knjazevac.

"In the region of Kriva and Palanka, situated on the Kumanovo-Kustendil road, the Bulgarians made an attack with several regiments and succeeded in reaching Tchoupino Brdo, whence they can menace the cities of Kumanovo and Vranie, and the Nish-Saloniki railroad. At Kotchane, on the Breganitza River, the Serbians are successfully resisting an attack by two Bulgarian divisions.

"The situation is becoming serious, especially in the region of Kumanovo, as it appears that the Bulgarians plan to seize the railroad on this side and separate the Serbian army from the allied troops coming up from Saloniki, and then turn toward the north through the Morava Valley in order to reach Nish.

"The prompt arrival of the Allies at Kumanovo and Vranie is necessary, and the Government and army, as well as all Serbians, are awaiting them with growing impatience."

In its efforts to repress the dissatisfaction that has manifested itself among the people and in the army at its course in turning against Russia, the Bulgarian Government has dismissed summarily from the diplomatic service M. Majoroff, its Minister to Petrograd, who when relations were broken off was quoted in a Russian newspaper as criticising Premier Radoslavoff's policy. He is also to be prosecuted. General Radko Dimitrieff, who has been leading a Russian army against the Austro-Germans, and all other reserve officers who have not returned to Bulgaria are to be considered deserters and treated as such.

Strumnitza is a town of about 8,000 inhabitants, fifty-five miles northeast of Saloniki, in the territory conquered by Bulgaria from Turkey in the first Balkan war. In the second war it was the scene of a Bulgarian victory over the Greeks on July 17, 1913, when the Greeks lost about 4,000 men.

SEND TEUTONS FROM SERBIA.

One Army Sent Back to Meet Russian Menace in Galicia.

ATHENS, Oct. 17.—According to information from a diplomatic source here, the army of General von Linsingen, which was originally intended to be thrown by the Teutonic allies into the Serbian theatre of war, was forced to return to the eastern field of operations to face a successful advance of the Russians.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18.—The Italian capture of Pregasina, an important advance point of the fortified Riva group on Lake Garda, will be of indirect aid to Serbia, preventing, as it does, the movement of any more Austrian troops from that front.

SERB PRINCE NEAR CAPTURE.

Heir to Throne Directed Defense of Belgrade to Last Moment.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 17.—Crown Prince Alexander of Serbia narrowly escaped capture when Hungarian troops entered Belgrade, according to a Bucharest dispatch to the Berlin Kreuz Zeitung.

The dispatch pays high tribute to the Prince's bravery in personally directing the defense of the city up to the last moment, and not leaving until the Hungarians were entering.

Several of the Prince's staff officers were captured and others were killed.

FRANCE DECLARES WAR.

PARIS, Oct. 17.—The council of Ministers, at a special Sunday meeting held at Elysée Palace, after going over the diplomatic and military situation, adopted the following declaration of war against Bulgaria.

Bulgaria, having taken action with our enemies against the Allies of France, the Government of the republic announces that a state of war exists between Bulgaria and France, from Oct. 16 at 6 o'clock in the morning, through the action of Bulgaria.

ITALIAN MINISTRY SPLIT OVER BALKANS

Nation Also Divided Over Advisability of Sending Army to Aid Allies There.

ROME, Oct. 17.—The question of Italy's participation or non-participation in the Balkan campaign is still agitating the country, which is divided into two camps, one favoring the sending of troops to aid the Serbians and the other believing that all the Italian forces are required at home.

It is asserted that the difference in opinion even extends to the Cabinet and threatens its solidarity. A rumor was in circulation today that Baron Sonnino, the Foreign Minister, following the lead of M. Delcassé, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, might resign.

Those of the people who are opposed to Italy sending troops to the Balkans are enumerating alleged diplomatic mistakes which have compromised the situation of the Allies there. This faction also argues that Serbia did not attack Austria when Italy began war against her and when, they declare, an offensive movement by the Serbians would have been most useful to Italy's front, preventing the Austrians from mobilizing there a half million men who had been removed from the southern front.

Military considerations at home also are advanced as a reason for non-participation. Italy might be able to send men, but no artillery to amount to anything. In addition, it is calculated by the opponents of participation that in case of a sudden invasion of Italy by the Austrians the Italians who had been detached for fighting in the Balkans could not return home within three months.

GERMANS TURN TO RIGA FRONT

Hindenburg Forces Russians Back East of Mitau and Takes 1,400 Prisoners.

PREPARES WINTER LINES

Russians Advance South of Dvinsk and Threaten an Enveloping Movement.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18.—The Germans have taken the offensive south of Riga and forced the Russians out of their positions, capturing a large number of prisoners and some guns. On the rest of the eastern front the offensive remains in the hands of the Russians, who are attacking west of Dvinsk, in the centre and to the south of the Pripet River.

On the whole, it appears to observers here as if the Germans were satisfied merely to hold their present line, except in the north, where they have made repeated attempts to take Dvinsk. This would mean the fall of Riga, and would compel the Russians to withdraw behind the Dvina River. This ambition has already cost the Germans many thousands of men, but they keep on trying, first in the north, then in the south, and then on the Dvinsk front. At present their attacks are developing the greatest force in the north.

South of Dvinsk the Russians report an advantage in the engagements. The German losses here are said to be very heavy, while the Russians continue to make gains toward the Dvinsk-Vilh Railroad.

Germans Preparing Defenses.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 17, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—The Germans have begun their preparations for acting on the defensive throughout the Winter, but they still hope to take Dvinsk. Preparation of triple lines of fortifications in various places west of the Dvinsk meridian do not indicate much confidence in the attempts that still are being made. The boast that the monster 16-inch guns will shortly be brought to bear upon Dvinsk is an empty bluff and in fact I hear the Germans have removed to the rear even those 8-inch guns, which a fortnight ago were supposed to be about to bring success. If the present attack which has been prepared by weeks of steady cannonading day and night for weeks also fails, it is probabiye the Germans may reconcile themselves to leaving the capture of Dvinsk for the Spring.

In the meantime concrete works with underground tunnels, provided with field railways to the rear, are being systematically constructed with comfortable underground quarters, which are evidently intended for Winter occupation. These have already been completed to the west and south of Riga, and in the neighborhood of Mitau. Similar defenses also have been constructed to the west and southwest Dvinsk, but there are signs that another last effort will be made before Winter to reach the coast of the Gulf of Riga, as well as to take Dvinsk, if possible.

The Russians, however, continue steadily sweeping westward from the line of the lakes south of Dvinsk, thereby threatening the German forces with a deadly enveloping move in the near future.

OFFICIAL WAR REPORTS.

BERLIN, Oct. 17, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The German official report on the eastern front is as follows:

Field Marshal von Hindenburg's army has thrown the Russians from positions east of Mitau and across the Missa River, north and northeast of Gross Ekau.

Russian attacks were repulsed west of Dünaburg, (Dvinsk,) and south of Smorgon. Field Marshal von Hindenburg's troops made prisoners of nine officers and 1,440 Russians.

General von Linsingen's army near Mulczyze threw the Russians across the Styr.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 17, (via London, Oct 18.)—The following official communication from General Headquarters was issued tonight:

South of Riga, after artillery preparations, the enemy attacked and captured the Garrozzen Railway station. Our counterattacks followed immediately and we recaptured and reoccupied the station.

In the region of Gross Ekau the Germans made several attacks and pressed our troops back in the region of the Jaeh River. Fighting occurred around the Neugut station, southeast of Riga.

Our aeroplanes yesterday threw dozens of bombs on trains and the railway works behind the enemy's lines.

In the region of Jacobstadt there has been artillery and rifle fire.

In front of Dvinsk the enemy continues his stubborn attacks. We repulsed four attacks in the course of the day in the Schlossberg region, west of Illiuksk. Hostile attacks, near the village of Pochilina were also repulsed.

At 10 o'clock yesterday morning the enemy developed an intense fire and attacked in the Chichkovo district, north of Lake Swenten. The movement of our troops was directed against the flank and rear of the Germans, who were cut off, and we captured part of their forces. All attacks were repulsed by our fire. The commanders of the various units engaged report that the field of battle before their intrenchments was covered with German bodies.

The fighting on the front between Lakes Dermmen and Dreswiaty continues. The Germans are resisting obstinately in the region of Krouklischki and Gatari. In the village of Ousti, on the west shore of Lake Boginshoie, the enemy's line was pierced, and our troops crossed the River Driviatitsa.

Near the village of Koulikovitchi, on the River Styr, above Czartoryisk, our troops yesterday captured enemy trenches. His counterattacks were unsuccessful. Yesterday also we seized an enemy position in the Carpalovska district, west of Derajno.

VIENNA, Oct. 17, (via London, Oct. 18.)—The official communication today says of the Russian theatre:

On the brook of Kormin (Volhynia) strong Russian attacks were repulsed. Otherwise in the northeast there is nothing of importance to report.

RUSSIAN ARMY TOLD NOT TO SPARE SHELLS

Order Issued to Forces in the South—Output Increased Many Fold.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18.—A dispatch to The Daily Mail from Odessa dated Thursday, says:

"A new order has been issued to our southern armies not to spare ammunition. Ammunition supplies are now fully organised and the output at present is several times what it was four months ago."

"State of War" in Moscow.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 17, (via London.)—An Imperial ukase has been issued proclaiming "a state of war" in Moscow and the Moscow district.

SAYS ENGLAND NEEDS 3,000,000 MORE MEN

Gen. Swayne Wants Them by Spring to Convince Germans of Defeat.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—"Great Britain needs 3,000,000 more men by Spring."

This declaration was made today by Brig. Gen. Sir Eric Swayne, Director of Recruiting in the northern command, in a speech at Hull. General Swayne estimated that Germany still had between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000 men from the ages of 18 to 45, and that therefore it was useless to talk about wearing her out.

In the Spring, he said, Germany would lose more men than the Allies, which would balance the numbers of the Allies and the Central Powers, but if Great Britain should raise 3,000,000 additional troops, Germany probably would recognise that it would be fruitless to continue. Great Britain, he added, did not want compulsion, but unless 3,000,000 more men were recruited by the Spring, the military authorities could not be responsible for the results of the war.

fested in political quarters regarding the Dardanelles campaign and the Salonika expedition and the enlightening nature of Sir Edward Grey's last exposition of these matters.

In addition, the recruiting difficulty is undoubtedly giving the British public serious concern, and in the popular mind any idea of the withdrawal of the Dardanelles expedition is exceedingly unwelcome.

The position of Sir Edward Carson, the Attorney General, is the subject of continuous spteculation. The Times thinks his position will be defined at the meeting of the Cabinet which will be held today. Sir Edward is believed to be protesting against Cabinet secrecy and the system under which everything concerning the war is in the hands of a small committee of about four or five members of the Cabinet.

The Times says the Cabinet still holds together, and that there are grounds for hoping it will hold together long enough to find a solution of the grave difficulties for which the country regards it as responsible.

"No resignation is tolerable at this stage. The Times adds, "except in the case of a man who has foreseen a long series of blunders into which the want of policy has led us, and has striven to warn his colleagues and has failed. That, we must assume, is Sir Edward Carson's case, and everything now points to his being the first to reach the breaking point."

JOFFRE'S MEN WIN ON TWO FRONTS

Capture a German Barricade Near Arras and a Trench in Lorraine.

ARTILLERY DUELS VIOLENT

These Rage Throughout the Day Near Loos and Souchez and in Champagne.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The French scored two successes in last night's fighting, capturing a German barricade southeast of Neuville-St. Vaast, in Artois, and a trench 100 meters long north of Reillon, in Lorraine. Violent artillery duels continued throughout the day on the Loos and Souchez fronts and in Champagne.

The German official report admits the loss of the Hartmannsweilerkopf trenches, captured yesterday by the French forces in the Vosges.

In reprisal for the recent Zeppelin raid on London, a squadron of French aeroplanes has dropped bombs on the City of Treves, in Rhenish Prussia. Another air squadron bombarded a provision post behind the German lines on Saturday.

The text of this afternoon's communication is as follows:

In Artois we seized a strong barricade last night to the southeast of Neuville-St. Vaast, and maintained ourselves there after having repulsed two counterattacks in the course of the night.

In the sector of Lihons there was a violent bombardment on both sides.

There is no incident to report from the Aisne front, in Champagne, or in the Argonne.

In Lorraine we again captured 100 meters of trenches to the north of Peillon in the course of stubborn combats fought at close quarters.

During the night of the 16th our aviators bombarded the German Army provision post of Maizières d'Azoudange, and the railroad station at Avricourt.

The following is the Berlin official report of the fighting on the western front:

The Germans have evacuated the west slope of Hartmannsweilerkopf without being disturbed by the enemy after the complete destruction of the enemy's trenches.

Lieutenant Boelke has shot down a French aeroplane southwest of Souain. This is the fifth aeroplane shot down within a short time by Lieutenant Boelke.

Tonight's report of the French War Office says:

Violent artillery engagements continue before Loos, the Bois-en-Hache, and to the east of Souchez. We have consolidated and enlarged our positions in the Givenchy wood.

On the Aisne close fighting with grenades is reported in the environs of Godat.

There has been a continuous artillery duel of an intense character in Champagne, particularly in the region of Tahure.

On the Lorraine front we have replied energetically to the cannonade of the enemy by an effective fire, which caused outbursts of flames at several points in the German lines near Leintrey, Amenoncourt, and Gondrexon. Violent and repeated German counterattacks against our positions to the north of Reillon were arrested by our barrier fire.

The Germans having again recently carried out aerial bombardments against English towns, and one of their aeroplanes having dropped yesterday two bombs on Nancy, a group of our aeroplanes today bombarded the town of Treves, (Rhenish Prussia,) on which thirty shells were dropped.

The official communication issued from Belgian Headquarters reads:

The night and morning were relatively calm. In the afternoon the enemy displayed more activity. He cannonaded the region to the south of Dixmude and bombarded with artillery and bomb throwers the district between Steenstraete and the "Ferryman's House."

HOW THE BRITISH WON HOHENZOLLERN REDOUBT

Aided by Gas Clouds, They Charged Through Shell and Machine Gun Fire.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18.—The Daily Chronicle publishes from Philip Gibbs, its special correspondent at British Headquarters, the following description of the British gas attack of Oct. 13 on the German trenches reaching from the southwest of Hulluch to the Hohenzollern Redoubt:

"The whole line of battle was in a grayish mist, which obscured all landmarks, so that even the 'Tower Bridge' was but faintly visible. But presently, when our artillery lifted, there were new clouds arising from the ground and spreading upward in a great, dense curtain of fleecy texture. They came from our smoke shells, which were to mark out our infantry attack. Through them and beyond them rolled another wave of cloud, a thinner, whiter vapor, which clung to the ground and then curled forward to the enemy's lines.

"'That's our gas,' said a voice on one of the slag heaps amid a little group of observers.

"'And the wind is dead right for it,' said another voice. The Germans will get a taste of it this time.'

"Then there was silence, and some of those observers held their breath as though the gas had caught their own throats and choked them a little. They tried to pierce through that great bar of cloud to see the drama behind its curtain—men caught in those fumes; the terror-stricken flight before its advance; the sudden cry of the enemy trapped in their dugouts. The imagination leaped out through the invisibility to the realization of the things that were happening beyond.

"Later, from our place of observation, there was one brief glimpse of the human element in this scene of impersonal powers and secret forces. Across the stretch of flat ground beyond some of those zigzag lines of trenches little things were scurrying forward. They were not bunched together in close groups, but scattered. Some of them seemed to hesitate and then fall and lie where they fell, the others hurrying on until they disappeared in the drifting clouds. It was all that one could see of our infantry attack, led by the bombers.

"The enemy were firing tempests of shells. Some of them were curiously colored, of a pinkish hue, or with orange-shaped puffs of vivid green. They were poison shells giving out noxious gases. All the chemistry of death was poured out on both sides.

"Below it and in it our men fought with fierce valor, and in these fields, swept by shell fire from heavy guns, reached the enemy's trenches and earthworks. For 1,000 yards they carried the German first line trenches to the south and west of Hulluch and swept up the main trench of the Hohenzollern Redoubt. But the enemy was strong, as usual, in machine guns and held on to some of his trenches with desperate courage, while those which we had captured came under the fire of their batteries. There were many acts of magnificent courage and superb endurance of officers and men in this difficult position. Only by the most resolute valor have they held to the ground which was gained at the cost of many lives."

SAY ALLIES' DRIVE USED 1,620,000 MEN

Germans Publish Another 'Secret Order' Found on a Dead French Officer.

BERLIN, Oct. 17, (By Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The following official communication was issued today:

"The hopes put by our enemy in their last offensive and the forces they employed in it are illustrated, aside from General Joffre's order of Sept. 14, which has already been published, by the following order found on a dead French staff officer:

East Army Headquarters, Third Bureau. No. 12,975. General Headquarters, Sept. 21.

Secret order for northern and middle army groups.

To all regiments must be explained, possibly in the following way, the enormous force of the blow which will be executed by the French and British armies:

In the operations will take part thirty-five divisions under General Castelnau, eighteen divisions under General Foch, thirteen English divisions, and fifteen cavalry divisions, among which are five English. Further prepared to enter the battle are thirteen infantry divisions and the Belgian Army. Three-quarters of the French forces will participate in the central battle, helped by 2,000 heavy and 3,000 field guns. The provisions of munitions are now larger than at the beginning of the war.

All the preliminary conditions for certain success have now been removed. It will be remembered that only fifteen divisions and 350 heavy cannon entered into the last offensive near Arras. JOFFRE.

As a division consists of 20,000 men, it will be seen that the alleged order of Joffre indicates that the Allies employed 1,620,000 troops in the recent drive.

PARIS, Oct. 17.—A Paris paper today gives an account of how General Joffre directed the operations during the battle in the Champagne region. Taking a post close to the front, in an innkeeper's kitchen where a telephone had been installed, General Joffre, bending over a large scale map, listened to officers at the telephone, at intervals giving his orders in an absolutely calm voice.

In this position, the newspaper account says, General Joffre remained longer than twenty-two hours—from 9 o'clock in the morning until 7:30 the next morning—neither eating nor drinking during the whole time. At the end of that period, after marking certain places on the map, he put down his pencil and said: "It is over. Let us go take a bite."

What it costs to bequeath property

AFTER a will has been offered for probate in the Surrogate's Court, the executor must prepare a sworn statement of the estate's assets and liabilities. This statement goes to the State Comptroller. It is for the purpose of determining the State Inheritance Tax.

This is a tax upon the right to receive benefits under a will. It is assessed upon each separate bequest and not upon the estate as a whole.

Everyone who contemplates making a will should know in advance what this tax amounts to.

The tax on bequests to father, mother, husband, wife, child, brother, sister, wife of a son or husband of a daughter, or any lineal descendant, is as follows:

First $	5,000 (Exempt)

the buildings, demolishing the top story. In this area there were no casualties, though several narrow escapes.

Concrete Resists Bomb.

"The third area contains two damaged business premises. The first of them is a large modern building constructed of reinforced concrete and with steel and concrete roof and flooring. Two bombs were dropped on this building, one of them actually on the roof and one on the pavement immediately beneath the doorway. The bomb on the pavement appears to have exploded sideways. At any rate, the damage done, which consisted chiefly of broken glass and plaster, occurred mainly in the houses on the other side of the street. The bomb which dropped on the roof of the building itself did little damage.

"In the same area a bomb was dropped on the roof of a small hotel, the ground floor of which was occupied as an office. In this case the strength of the building, which was an old one, was not sufficient to withstand the force of the explosion, and the whole of the hotel, which consisted of three floors of the building, was entirely blown up. Fortunately in this area those indoors had been warned by the sound of previous explosions, and by taking refuge in the lower floor they escaped injury altogether. In this area, as by a curious coincidence in one other, the effect of the bombs was severely felt in a small restaurant opened in the interests of Belgian refugees.

"The fourth district in which damage was done is one consisting entirely of what may be called working-class property, with small, low buildings, some of them used to house small shops of various businesses, but in most cases occupied, and in many cases overcrowded, by private residents of the poorer classes.

"In this area more bombs were dropped than in those previously described, and the damage done was exclusively suffered by private traders or householders, who behaved with the utmost heroism and coolness and who suffered damage and, in some cases, loss of life with no compensating military value for the enemy. One group of small houses in this area was entirely destroyed by a single explosive bomb, and in the ruins, above which floats an evil smell of gas and drains, are to be found, torn and covered with dust, account books and documents of some small business which up to 9:30 on Wednesday night no doubt kept alive the owner and his family.

"In another spot in this district a bomb fell on top of a building used for keeping dairy cattle. None of the cattle was killed, though one was injured. The dairyman, with presence of mind and coolness, made his way to the top story of his house near by, in which all the windows were broken and most of the ceilings destroyed by the force of the explosion, and brought down his children to safety below. On his way down stairs on the last journey a further explosion blew him backward on to the floor of one of the rooms, but he succeeded in bringing all his family out unharmed. After the aircraft passed they returned to their rooms until they were wakened again by the sound of guns about midnight.

"In the last area covered by the raid—this time in a suburb—there is not a single factory or business house and hardly any shops. There are no military encampments, no store sheds, no aerial defenses, and not even searchlights. All the property consists of detached or semi-detached houses surrounded by small gardens. It was in this district that for some obscure reason, the largest number of bombs were dropped, and they must have been launched by what the commander of a Zeppelin in his interview on the last raid described as 'rapid fire.'

"The actual period of bombardment did not last a minute, and the distance from the spot where the first bomb dropped to the last could not have been more than 900 yards. Within sixty yards no less than five fell together, while, near by, three fell in a single garden, which did not measure more than thirty yards square.

"The striking and fortunate feature of the bombardment in this district, and, indeed, of the whole attack on this occasion, is the number of cases in which the bombs dropped, not on the buildings, but on the ground. In only three cases in this suburban area were houses actually struck; though, of course, the force of the explosion was sufficient to destroy whole houses, even at a considerable distance.

Sleeping Women Hurled Into Street.

"Here there were many astonishing escapes. In one instance a bomb fell on a narrow passage, separating two houses, the entire fronts of which were blown out, causing the upper bedroom floors to collapse. In one of the upper bed rooms a mother and daughter were sleeping. They were thrown out onto the street through the place where the ground floor window should have been, both escaping with their lives.

"In the next house a little boy lying in his cot was buried under the debris of the wrecked roof of the house, and in order to release him the whole roof had to be lifted up, so securely was the cot pinned down. There was not a stick of furniture nor a piece of china left whole in either of these two houses; only two small pictures remained with the glass unbroken.

"A large house a few yards away suffered very badly. A bomb fell right on the centre of it, killing instantly two children and severely injuring a third child and the father and mother.

"In the road in which this occurred there are twenty houses without doors or windows, and every house is heavily pitted with shot marks. In one of the houses, where a woman was sitting on a sofa, the door of the room was forced open with such violence that the lock was wrenched from its fastenings and struck the wall within a few inches of the woman's head.

"At another point where a bomb fell in the street, a young man was saying good-night to a woman at the front door of the house. He was killed by a fragment of the bomb and the woman was severely injured. At this point also an old man, who was walking on the pavement, had his arm blown off and died in the hospital shortly afterwards."

ZEPPELINS MADE 2 ATTACKS.

Recent Raids on London Were Two Hours Apart, Say Dutch Sailors.

BERLIN, Oct. 17, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.—"An Amsterdam dispatch," says the Overseas News Agency, "says that the crew of the Dutch steamer Texelstroom, which was destroyed by a mine, have arrived in Amsterdam from London, in which city they were lodged at the time of the recent Zeppelin attack.

"The sailors," the dispatch says, "declare that their experience in the mine explosion was far preferable to that in the Zeppelin attack, because they felt safe once they were in their boats on the former occasion, but never knew from one moment to another during the Zeppelin raid whether a bomb might not fall on them.

"The crew was in the Sailors' Home in London when the Zeppelins attacked. A Belgian hotel in the neighborhood was destroyed by one bomb, they said, and six persons were buried in the ruins. All the windows in the Sailors' Home were broken. Two hours after their first visit, the sailors said, the Zeppelins returned and bombarded the south end of London."

MAGGIE TEYTE SAW RAID.

Singer Was Fascinated Rather Than Alarmed by the Zeppelins.

Maggie Teyte, the prima donna, who has just returned from London to sing with the Boston Grand Opera Company, was in one of the recent Zeppelin raid in London.

"If anybody thinks the Zeppelin raids on London have caused any panic or fear," said Miss Teyte, "he should disabuse his mind of the belief. It is an interesting psychological fact that the Zeppelins fascinate onlookers and that the interest in the spectacle makes one forget the danger. I know this from personal experience.

"I was in a theatre when a bomb from one of the German airships fell right outside. Together with the others I rushed into the street and was surprised to find that the people joked and laughed and, far from running away, refused to heed the warnings of the policemen. If anybody is blasé I advise a trip to the zones frequented by Zeppelins. A raid by them is a wonderful nerve bracer.

"As to the English opinion of the raids, indignation and anger are not so much in evidence as a feeling of utter abhorrence for what they term 'murderers of women and children.' Certainly if our foes thought of beating us into submission through their Zeppelins they have completely failed."

BRYCE OPPOSES REPRISALS.

Says Air Raids Would Lower the Nation's Standards.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18.—Lord Bryce, in a letter published in THE TIMES, joins with Sir Edward Clarke and Professor Pollard in protesting against reprisals for Zeppelin raids. He says:

"In this war Great Britain has stood firm from the first for respecting The Hague conventions, and the rights of non-combatants. To imitate the policy of savagery carried out by the German Government in Belgium and France and by the Turkish Government in Armenia, would be to lower ourselves to the level of those Governments. Such reprisals would have no military effect, nor would the enemy be deterred from his policy of slaughtering the innocent men, women and children alike.

"The German bomb raids do not shake in the least our resolution to prosecute the war. Would British air raids of a like nature affect the German Government differently or lead them to desist from useless cruelty! In reprisals the German Government will, to use a popular expression, always go one better. In a contest of inhumanity they will always be the winners.

ITALIANS CAPTURE TRENTINO FORTRESS

Storm Pregasina, an Important Outpost of the Fortifications of Riva.

FOG AIDS THE ASSAILANTS

They Cut Austrian Entanglements Under Cover of It and Then Rush the Positions.

ROME, Oct. 17, (via Paris.)—The Italians have stormed Pregasina, an important advanced position of the Riva defenses in Trentino, according to an official communication issued today. The communication is from the General Headquarters of the Italian Army and is dated Oct. 17. It says:

By a bold and well-conducted operation our troops took by storm the strong position of Pregasina, an important advanced point of the Riva group of fortifications in the rugged mountainous zone to the west of Lake Garda.

The action began on the night of the 15th. While on the eastern side of the lake our detachments advanced from the rocks of Monte Altissimo for the purpose of making a demonstration on the western side, the troops destined for the attack made for Pregasina, and, notwithstanding the difficult ground, the unfavorable atmospheric conditions, and the violent fire of the strong batteries of the Riva works, succeeded in advancing close to the enemy's trenches.

During the night our detachments, under cover of a thick fog, boldly approached the barbed wire entanglements and made several large breaches in them. On the morning of the 14th the attack was resumed under a murderous fire from rifles and artillery and gas bombs.

Our troops captured Pregasina and advanced victoriously on the heights which dominate on the north the Valley of Legro, and established themselves firmly thereon.

On the remainder of the front there has been no important occurrence.

VIENNA, Oct. 17.—The Austrian War Office tonight issued the following bulletin on the fighting on the Italian front:

After strong artillery attacks, the Italians commenced yesterday morning several assaults on the northwestern sector of the plateau of Doberdo. All of them failed before our entanglements. The enemy suffered great losses and retired to his positions.

A new attack in the afternoon was stopped by our artillery fire. During the evening and night, enemy infantry attempted further attacks, which failed. The attacking troops included three or four regiments of infantry.

Further north our positions on the bridgeheads of Gorizia and Tolmino stood the whole day against hostile artillery firing. The enemy fired gas bombs on a part of the bridgehead of Tolmino.

In Carinthia and Tyrol there were local heavy artillery combats.

GUN DUELS IN GALLIPOLI.

No Trench Fighting in Early October, French War Office Says.

PARIS, Oct. 17.—There was little activity on the French front in the Dardanelles during the past fortnight, the French War Office announced today. Only minor operations are mentioned in the official statement, which reads as follows:

In the Dardanelles the first two weeks of October have been calm. Attempts made by the Turks to approach our trenches with mines were defeated by the explosion of our countermines. The Turkish artillery has been active, but not effective, thanks to the superiority of our own batteries.

Our aviators have daily bombarded with success various establishments and camps of the enemy.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 17, (via London.)—The following statement on military operations was issued today by the Turkish War Office:

On the Caucasian front we repulsed a Russian surprise attack upon our positions in the region west of Kentek, inflicting heavy losses on the enemy.

On the Dardanelles front there have been only local fights. One of our mines destroyed an enemy blockhouse near Sedd-el Bahr, in the region of Kereves Dere.

ENGLISH CHANNEL BRISTLES WITH MINES

Two Lines of Nets and Wreck of a Submarine Necessitate Cautious Sailing.

Captain P. Van den Heuvel of the Holland-America liner Ryndam, which arrived yesterday from Rotterdam, said the greatest care had to be taken in navigating the English Channel to the North Sea on account of the mines which had been laid. Four weeks ago, ships were blown up by mines within a mile of Folkestone.

At the present time the British Admiralty has two sets of nets across the channel, one from Folkestone to Boulogne and the other from a point in the Downs between Deal and Ramsgate to the South Goodwin Lightship. Until recently steamers had to pass between two lightships 300 feet apart to get through the first line of nets, about a mile and a half off Folkestone.

"Now we have to pass to the north of the inshore lightship," said the Captain, "and go within a mile of the beach. I understand that a submarine has been sunk between the two lightships and the British Admiralty is afraid of a deep draught vessel striking her hull and exploding the torpedoes inside. A steamer was sunk that way by passing near the South Goodwin Lightship a little time back. All vessels pass now between that lightship and a trawler minus the accident."

Only One Man and One Woman Dissent from Resolutions Denouncing Outrages.

TURKS HAVE KILLED 500,000

Evidence, Taken from State Department, Shows Quarter of a Million Women Violated.

A great audience that packed the Century Theatre, Central Park West and Sixty-second Street, yesterday afternoon, had just acclaimed its approval of a resolution deploring the atrocities committed against the Armenians by the Turks, when a man, who said his name was Brown, arose and demanded a chance to discuss the resolutions.

A woman, who said she was Mrs. Brooks, shouted encouragement to the disturber and demanded that he be heard. He was forcibly ejected from the theatre, but in a few minutes was back, angrily demanding to have his say.

The meeting, held to condemn atrocities in Armenia, was under the auspices of a committee of prominent Americans and well-known Armenians. Hamilton Holt, editor of The Independent, presided, and the speakers were the Rev. Dr. James L. Barton of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, the Rev. Father John J. Wynne, S. J., editor of the Catholic Encyclopaedia; W. Bourke Cockran, the Rev. Dr. Ernest Yarrow of Van, Turkey, and the Rev. Dr. William J. Haven.

The resolutions adopted read as follows:

Whereas, The civilized world has been shocked by a series of massacres and deportations of Armenians in the Turkish Empire; and

Whereas, These crimes and outrages committed upon an industrious, thrifty, and peace-loving people, find no justification, viewed either in the light of law or humanity; and

Whereas, Those Armenians who survive are in great need of succor and relief, be it hereby

Resolved, That as American citizens, we make our most solemn protest against these cruel and inhuman practices and implore all officials and others having influence in the Turkish Empire, to put an end to these wrongs and to render every aid to the American Ambassador and others who would rescue and repatriate a people, who, by their history and achievements have been a credit to the empire,

Resolved, Further, That war, wherever and by whatsoever nation waged, affords no warrant for inhumanity toward innocent persons. The slaughter of noncombatant men, the tortures, mutilations, and outrages committed upon women and children wherever committed have given to the fairest places upon the earth the semblance of hell. In the name of the God of Nations and our common humanity, we call upon the nations at war to cease these crimes against civilization and morality.

Father Wynne seconded the resolutions and Mr. Holt had put them up for approval when Brown arose, red with excitement.

Several men hurried to the disturber and started him down the aisle. Mrs. Brooks then demanded that the man be heard and followed those who were ejecting him.

The audience was on its feet as were those on the stage, among the latter Mgr. Lavelle, who represented Cardinal Farley; Charles R. Crane of Chicago, the Rev. Dr. H. P. Mendes, Professor William W. Rockwell, Professor Samuel P. Dutton, and a score of other prominent men.

Angrily denouncing his ejectors and struggling every inch of the way the man was forced from the theatre.

"This meeting," said Mr. Holt in his opening address, "is called for the purpose of depriving the greatest hecatomb known to history. The massacres now being perpetrated in Turkey are the most atrocious in the history of the world, and if they are to stop we must prevail upon Christian Germany, who alone can save the Armenians. The appeal may not be listened to in Constantinople, but it can be heard in Berlin."

Dr. Barton was the first speaker. "We are here," he said, "to consider facts that bear upon the Armenian situation in the Turkish Empire, facts from which we cannot escape."

Referring to the report made by the Armenian Atrocities Committee, Dr. Barton said the disclosures were for the most part taken from official documents in the State Department at Washington.

"The committee," he said, "took steps to get only facts, and went to Washington and examined the official reports to the State Department. They ask why we did not publish the names of the persons who made the reports. The reason is obvious. One of the laws of Turkey is retaliation. One of our Consuls asked that his name be withheld because he would have to quit his post if his name became known."

Dr. Barton held up a great mass of papers, all copies of official reports, to the State Department. Excerpts were read telling of terrible tortures, in thousands of instances causing death.

Dr. Barton read a statement by a well-known Armenian, a graduate of an American university, just arrived in this country. He told of the fate of 1,215 men. These men were herded together and then in groups of twenty-five were sent away "by order of the Government and all of them brutally slain." The executioners, he said, were Turkish gendarmes and murderers and other criminals freed from jails to assist in the killing of Armenians.

"The reward of these murderers," said the statement, "was the money and valuables found on the bodies of their victims. One of these men boasted that he had killed fifty in one night and that he got 150 pounds in Turkish money for his night's work."

Bourke Cockran said he had been informed that between 500,000 and 800,000 Armenians had been massacred and that 250,000 women and girls had been outraged. The problem of Armenia, Mr. Cockran said, is the problem of the Cuba of 1898 aggravated a million times.

Rabbi Wise was the last speaker. He was present, he said, not as an opponent of Turkey, nor as a champion of Armenia, but to protest against inhumanity, whether committed by Germans against Belgians, by Russians against Jews, or by Turks against Armenians. He said that Germany and Austria could do much toward ending the Armenian atrocities, and if they did not do so, he said, those nations may find out that "certain victories are more disastrous than any defeats."

"If the Germans would alienate the good will of those who still remain neutral," he said, "let these outrages go on unchecked. If they would rehabilitate themselves, let them say to the Turks: 'Not one more drop of blood must be shed.'"

In all the seats were petitions, with blanks for signature, addressed to the Kaiser and the people of Germany, imploring them to use their good offices to end the atrocities in Armenia.

TO SEEK RELATIVES LOST IN WAR ZONES

Agent Sails This Week to Organize Search for Many Missing Families.

The Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America, of 229 East Broadway, announced yesterday that Isidore Hershfield, a New York lawyer, would sail for Europe on Thursday, charged with the mission of locating the families and relatives of American citizens in the various war zones of Europe. The State Department, Isidore Lipsitch, General Manager of the society, said, had given its support to the undertaking, and he added that the mission of Mr. Hershfield, if successful, would go a long way toward lessening the burden that the society has carried in its search for missing people in the war areas. A statement issued by the society says:

"The foreign countries which Mr. Hershfield will visit through their American representatives have given their official action to the mission and will aid the work in every way. All of the various Jewish national organizations of the United States have co-operated with the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, under the auspices of which the mission will be carried out.

"In addition to the work of relief, Mr. Hershfield will also undertake to make a thorough study of the conditions of the Jews in Europe. Among other things, he will endeavor to spread a knowledge of the American immigration laws, with a view of discouraging the coming to this country of those who are ineligible to land here and thus save them the hardships of deportation.

"The Department of Labor and the Bureau of Immigration have unqualifiedly indorsed this phase of the work, in a letter to Mr. Hershfield. Secretary of Labor Wilson states that the department is much interested in the undertaking, and especially in that part with reference to the immigration laws."

The society says that one of the most serious of the consequences of the war has been the breaking up of thousands of Jewish homes in Russia and in Galicia, and estimates that 1,500,000 Jews have been driven from their homes and have yet to find a new or permanent home.

"A large part of the Jewish population of America," adds the statement, "is vitally concerned by this tragic upheaval, as most of the Jews living in America have relatives living in the war zones to whom they would gladly extend help if they knew their whereabouts. The society has received thousands of letters from all parts of the United States from persons who are anxious to locate relatives abroad. The society has also received from European organizations the names of thousands of persons in Europe who desired to be put in communication with those to whom they are related in the United States and whose addresses have been lost.

"The State Department has been cooperating with the society since the beginning of the war in locating the present residences of families of American citizens, as well as of those who have declared their intention to become citizens. The task was found enormous, in view of the numbers involved, and a conference was held between Assistant Secretary of State Adee and Judge Leon Sanders, at which it was decided that as the American consular representatives were not properly equipped for this immense undertaking, the society should send its own representative to organize the necessary agencies to carry on this work."

ALL EUROPE CRAVING PEACE, SAYS BERNSTEIN

Herman Bernstein, an American writer on Russian affairs, returned to New York yesterday on the Ryndam after traveling three months in England, France, Germany, Italy and Austria, where he obtained interviews with several prominent persons.

"The war," he said, "resembles a panic in a madhouse, but little by little a certain order was established in this panic and riot of madness, and men and youths go to their deaths singing songs, smiling, laughing, with flowers on their helmets and on their guns. Nations have gone mad, and those who shouted 'Fire!' have sought to crystalize this madness into degrees of heroism and virtue.

"The people of all countries at war are craving for peace, and the statesmen and military firebrands who started this war also want peace now, for they, too, are beginning to realize that in the end they can achieve less by war than by peace. Their great task now is to find in all countries an adequate explanation and excuse for having entered the war and for having so uselessly slaughtered millions of innocent human beings. The Governments and the press of all countries are offenders in this respect, sowing hatred and spreading violence.

"In Europe all eyes are turned to President Wilson in the hope that he will bring about peace. His sane, dignified, and brilliant statesmanship, though not always agreeable to both sides of the nations at war, has made evident America's true neutrality and now makes possible her rôle of peace mediator. It is indeed one of the greatest blessings that at least America has kept her head in the midst of the panic of madness that has swept over Europe.

"In my journeys through Europe I have studied the condition of the Jews as affected by the war, and I found that the Jewish people was the most tragic victim of the war. In Russia the Jews were crucified during the war in Russian fashion. For their military defeats on the battlefield the Russian authorities made military pogroms against their own peaceful Jewish population.

"In Austria, where the Jews, even though economically wretched, enjoyed equal rights and freedom, where the Jews have fought bravely and loyally, they have now been deprived of many of their rights."

WILSON'S PLEDGE TO JEWS.

Will Try to Secure Rights of Those in Russia and Rumania.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 17.—In an address this evening at a public meeting, held to celebrate the founding of the Order of B'nai B'rith, Simon Wolf of Washington said that on the eve of his departure for California to attend the Peace Conference, President Wilson intrusted to him a letter in which the President wrote that when the hour of peace should arrive he, as the representative of a people firm in advocacy of civil and political rights, would use his best efforts to secure the rights of the Jews in Russia and Rumania.

Mr. Wolf said he had still another letter in which the President said that when the time should come for the making of another treaty with Russia, "none shall be granted by the Government of which I am President unless the Jews are given full rights."

MAORIS' WAR CHARGE THRILLS HOME LAND

Natives in New Zealand Aroused by News of Brothers' Valor at Gallipoli.

MAKES FOR ISLAND'S UNITY

Second Contingent Going to War and Then a Third, Including Men of Far-Away Niue.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WELLINGTON, New Zealand, Sept. 20.—"The Maoris entered into the charge with great dash, making the darkness hideous with wild war cries which struck terror into the hearts of the Turks. With the awful vigor of their bayonets and rifle butts the Maoris forged another link in the chain of the empire."

So cabled the English war correspondent, Ashmead Bartlett, the last of August in a graphic description of the night attack by the Australasian troops which marked the operations centreing about Suvla Bay, Gallipoli, and a thrill ran throughout all the native districts in New Zealand. The savage courage of the aboriginal race which fought the British so valorously about forty years ago was again exemplified—but this time in the British cause.

The Maoris have been treated considerately by the British for nearly half a century, as befitted an intelligent and gallant race, and now that England wants "men and yet more men," even from the remotest parts of King George's realms, they are responding to the call to arms quite as patriotically as their paheka (white) neighbors. The animosities which were engendered by the Maori war (though these were disappearing, thanks partly to intermarriage between Maoris and whites and partly to the paternal attitude of successive Cabinets toward the Maori tribes,) are now in a fair way to being wiped out by the opportunity which is being given a handful of the brown men to ply bayonets and rifle butts in far-off Turkey.

Like all other South Sea races, the Maoris have their strong susceptibilities, one of which is toward firewater, but again, like other Antipodean races, they are fighters to the backbone. It was, therefore, a question with the Massey Government when the demands of the war became pressing whether or not to recruit Maoris. That the decision in the affirmative, which resulted in the first contingent of 500 men, was wise is proved by the conduct of the Maoris in the action described by Mr. Bartlett. The contingent "made good," so much so that a second Maori contingent is about to be dispatched to the front; and, what is quite as interesting, with these Maoris are to go natives from the Cook Archipelago and Niue, or Savage Island.

A rather odd blending of ferocity and Christianity appears in a letter received in New Zealand from Lieutenant Lauchmen Ferris, an officer in the first Maori contingent which has given such a good account of itself. Writing from Malta, where, it seems, it was first intended to place the Maoris on garrison duty, he said:

"These 500 Maoris are getting a great hearing for so insignificant a body of men. * * * On arrival we were received by Lord Methuen. * * * Each day the hatred for the enemy grows more and more within us, and each report of our killed and wounded is like a red rag to an infuriated bull.

"We have just had good news. Lord Methuen is going to write to Kitchener that we are ready for the front, and from now on we have our instructions to be in readiness to move at eight hours' notice. When the men realized that they at last had real hopes of going, 'Ka mate! Ka mate!' (the same bellowing yell which so scared the Turks,) rent the air. They cheered and shouted for joy, and a holiday was granted to celebrate the occasion.

"Tell everybody that we are going to the front, and that every soul to a man is happy to do so. They must see what a great event it is for the Maori race. No one must worry a bit. We are going and we are coming back, but we are not going to retire until we have slaughtered enough of the enemy to make amends for the friends (white friends) we've lost.

It took a long time for the news of the outbreak of the war to reach the natives of Niue, one of the most remote of New Zealand's island dependencies, but when they did hear of it the tribes gathered and subscribed all the surplus money they possessed to the British war funds and offered to send to the front 200 warriors.

A letter was addressed to King George, which accompanied the money, in which the King of Niue and the tribal Chiefs explained that it came from "the smallest child of the great Motherland."

The Niuean contingent has since that time been receiving military instructions from Sergeant Holmes, an officer sent to the little speck in the South Pacific by the New Zealand Government, and this week a transport left Auckland to take on the island soldiery. The Niueans, together with fifty natives from Raratonga in the Cook group, will form the bulk of the third Maori contingent of 340 men.

SAYS TROOPS GET RUM ON GOING INTO BATTLE

But Merely as a Stimulant, Mrs. Blatch Explains—War Will Aid Suffrage.

Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, the suffrage leader, returned yesterday on the American liner Philadelphia from England, where she had been to settle the estate of her late husband, who was an Englishman.

She said that Jane Addams had made a mistake when she stated that the soldiers in France and England were made drunk before going into battle.

"That is not true," Mrs. Blatch added. "It is true that whisky and other stimulants are given to the soldiers to prepare them for the fight in the same way that stimulants are given to horses before a race. The reason for this is that no sane man wants to be killed, or really wants to fight, so he must be spurred on."

Mrs. Blatch said that her nephew, who is an officer in the English Army, told her that the Canadians had a great enmity toward the Prussians; but, like the English, they were friendly with the Bavarians and frequently exchanged rations with them in the trenches. During her visits to the hospitals in England and France Mrs. Blatch said she had become convinced that conscription was a proper thing for every nation.

"I come back," she went on to say, "firmly convinced of the necessity of universal military service, also for a systematic training of women to prepare them to take the places of men in industrial pursuits in time of war. Were there such a system as this in France and England now each of those two nations could place immediately an additional army corps in the field. Clerical work performed by men could be done by women even more intelligently.

"The men of England and France will be ready to grant women suffrage after the war, because it has shown them what woman can do and will do in time of need."

When told that President Wilson had declared himself in favor of women's suffrage Mrs. Blatch smiled grimly and said she hoped the eyes of the All-seeing One would penetrate the polling booths and find out how many of those who gave their promises really did cast their votes for suffrage.

BRITISH WANT PEACE BERLIN BELIEVES

Visitor Says This Idea Is Encouraged by High Officials of Kaiser.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18.—The Times publishes a letter this morning signed "Anglo-neutral," written by a Dutchman educated in England, relating his experiences in Germany and Austria last week, in which he intimates that people in Berlin are being encouraged by men in high place, to believe that Great Britain is anxious for peace, and that members of the British Government have made peace "approaches."

He says:

"Vienna is very gay at this moment and many of my Viennese friends almost apologized for it. 'We have been through such agonies of depression,' one of them observed, 'that now that we are victorious we are letting ourselves go a little.'

"The Austrians now have absolute confidence in their ability to win the war by the aid of their big brother, Germany, but they like the Germans less now than before. They say they do more than half of the work and Germany gets all the praise. They are very proud of the success of the Austrian troops in Russia.

"Bread is quite plentiful in Vienna, though there is a shortage of many commodities.

"Berlin, like Vienna, has passed through many changes of feeling. Today every German with whom I came in contact was openly exultant. While one part of the nation is concentrated on finishing the war, many of the higher authorities are organizing for after the victory. There have been conferences of bankers, manufacturers, agriculturists, and others, so that whether the war ends in one, two, or even ten years, Germany will instantly proceed to begin to recover her industrial position.

"Except for the bread cards, it is difficult to realize that Berlin is at war.

"Knowing that a short time back I had been in England and was there on Sept. 8, during a Zeppelin raid, I was asked by every one I met as to whether England was not terrified and as to the total destruction of Liverpool Street Station. I assured them I had been in London on the night of the raid, but had hardly seen anything of it, and had never heard Liverpool Street Station had been destroyed, and that the whole affair was regarded rather like a fireworks display at the Crystal Palace.

"In addition to the delusion that the English are in terror of Zeppelins and that the English fleet is afraid to come out, there is the constantly repeated statement, made, too, by men in high places in Berlin, that members of the British Government had had conversations in regard to peace with certain persons in London. I was continually informed that members of the British Government had made 'approaches' on this subject.

"I replied on this point in every case that I did not believe any such statement had a vestige of truth in it. It is believed as a fact in high quarters in Germany, none the less, and any one understanding the Prussian character will realize the avidity with which a chance remark of any prominent Englishman to any neutral or other in London would be seized upon and accepted as a sign of fear.

"I have seen it stated that anti-English feeling in Germany is diminished. That is untrue. I see it stated in your newspapers that Germany is short of many things. The only shortages of which I could hear were of India rubber, woolen garments, and Havana cigars. Germany is obviously importing certain supplies through neutral countries. You are not strict enough."

CONDEMNS PEACE MEETING.

Professor Halland Warns English Against Berne Congress.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 18.—Professor T. E. Holland writes to The Times, warning its readers against having anything to do with "The International Central Organization for a Durable Peace," which proposes to hold a meeting in Berne next December. Professor Holland points out that of thirteen members of the committee, the best known are Professors Lammasch of Vienna, and Schucking of Marburg. Great Britain is represented only by Mr. Lowes-Dickinson, and America only by Mrs. Andrews of Boston.

The "minimum program" of the organization demands "Equal rights for all nations in the colonies, etc.," of the powers, submission of all disputes to "Pacific procedure," joint action by the powers against any one of them resorting to military measures, and that "the right of prize shall be abolished and freedom of the seas shall be guaranteed."

CANADIAN MAJOR DIED TO SAVE HIS COMRADES

Roy Killed by a Shell He Tried to Throw from His Trench.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Oct. 17.—Incidents of recent fighting in the Arras sector in Northern France, in which members of the Canadian contingent were engaged, are described in an official communication received from the Canadian Headquarters in France by Sir Samuel Hughes, Minister of Militia, and made public tonight.

"On Oct. 6," says the account, "Major A. V. Roy, Twenty-second Battalion, Montreal, was standing in a trench issuing orders to Company Sergeant Major Marion and others. The enemy trench mortar shells were falling in the vicinity.

"Brig. Gen. Watson, Quebec, had just passed along the trench when a mortar shell fell into the trench a few feet from Major Roy and his men. The shell did not burst on impact, and, rushing toward it, Major Roy bent down with the object of seizing it and throwing it over the parapet in order to save the lives of those near him.

"Before he could grasp it the projectile exploded, inflicting wounds from which Major Roy died. His gallant self-sacrifice has been specially reported by his brigade and divisional commander.

"On the afternoon of Oct. 8," continues the account, "the enemy exploded four mines at points on the front of one of our divisions, simultaneously opening a heavy bombardment. The enemy advanced into the craters, but was driven out by our bombers.

"At one point two German officers led a party through a crater. One was blown to bits by our bombers and the other rolled back into the crater. This party then withdrew. A party of the enemy next reached our parapet and attempted to effect a permanent lodgment, but was driven off with fixed bayonets. Our companies manned their parapets and maintained a controlled fire wherever the enemy showed himself. The slight damage to our parapets was speedily repaired.

"The Twenty-second Battalion, under Colonel Gaudet of Montreal, and the Twenty-eighth Battalion, under Colonel Embury, Regina, displayed great coolness in dealing with this surprise attack, which consequently failed completely."

GERMANY CHARGES MURDER AT SEA

DENIED BY SHIP'S CAPTAIN.

Nicosian's Skipper Saw No Barbarity or Misuse of Flag.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 17.—Captain Manning of the steamship Nicosian, soon after the publication here of affidavits made by muleteers aboard his vessel, charging that marines of the British patrol boat Baralong had shot and killed members of the crew of a German submarine, after the under-sea boat had been sunk, denied that such a thing had occurred.

He said also that he did not see an American flag displayed on the Baralong when she approached the submarine.

TO INVESTIGATE USE OF FLAG.

United States Will Act When Nicosian Affidavits Arrive.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—The State Department has not yet received the affidavits of four muleteers of the steamer Nicosian, asserting that sailors of a German submarine were slain by the crew of a British patrol vessel which, according to the affidavit, flew the American flag at the time of the attack. No action in this matter will be taken by the department until the affidavits are received and examined.

It is probable that the department's first step will be to follow its usual course of making an investigation in order to determine whether there was a misuse of the American flag by the British patrol vessel, the Baralong. It is probable also that the department will make an inquiry of its own into the general charges contained in the affidavits.

SEES WOMAN VOTER AS AN INSULT TO GOD

Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady Denounces Feminine Ambition to Evade Nature's Laws.

UNFITTED FOR MAN'S PLACE

Points to Clothing and Adornment as Proof of Mental Inferiority.

I am weary of my life because of the daughters of Heth.—Gen. xxvii., 46.

From this text the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, the novelist, preached an anti-suffrage sermon yesterday afternoon at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church. He said that woman suffrage was an insult to man and an insult to God—an insult to man because it was an effort of woman to usurp duties imposed upon man in the scheme of creation, and an insult to God because it was an effort of woman to enter a sphere for which the Creator did not intend her.

"That vertebrate animal popularly called man," said Mr. Brady, "exists in two forms, male and female, man and woman, differentiated in sex by variant reproductive functions."

Mr. Brady then traced the development of the family, and said it represented the work of woman, a work which was not completed and would not be completed until man was monogamous to perfection.

"I spoke of marriage as a simple institution," he said. "So it is, but this simplicity is the result of the age-long and most painful struggle on the part of what is popularly referred to as the weaker sex. The passions of man, in spite of their overwhelming physical ability to gratify them, have been slowly brought into subjection by the influence, subtly exerted through countless generations, by his complement and opposite, woman. Her struggle has been for a monogamous marriage, one man and one woman, faith, fidelity, honor, and respect equally given; and her triumph, while not yet complete, is in a fair way of achievement, if she will continue her struggle on the legitimate lines marked out for her by her successes of the past.

Growth of Wife's Rights.

"The dominant tendency of the evolution of marriage is the extension of the wife's rights. A wife is no longer the property of her husband, and marriage should be and is a contract on a footing of perfect equality, but the equality is in function and position only. The power of decision is properly vested in the man and husband.

"Now the perfection of the family is woman's task. But this triumph of the effort for the recognition of inherent equality in marriage has not been won by the Kantipes of society.

"No one can say that the functions of the man in the family are entitled to more respect than those of the woman. In fact, it can be urged that in the perpetuation of the human race the woman has incomparably the harder part to sustain. Therefore who shall say it is not the more honorable?

"So I say deliberately that the so-called woman movement is an attempt to escape the function of woman, a revolt against the fact that woman is not a man, an attempt to enter the field of effort in which man's powers are properly exercised. It is a rising against nature. It is a revolt against God.

"It is degenerate in that it tends to reverse the existing order. It is atavistic in its attempt to revert to a past condition. It is essentially immoral in that it will undignify marriage. It is ruinous to the progress of civilization in that it conduces to undermine religion.

A Rap at Woman's Dress.

"Woman is a creature of impulse, man of judgment. This is the mental basis of the sexes. History illustrates it. The ablest exponents in art, letters, science, war, trade, and politics have been men. Yes, even in departments of effort regarded as peculiarly feminine, such as dressmaking, cooking, millinery, the rule obtains.

"Show me any considerable group of women strong enough to say what they will wear and wherewithal they will be clothed, booted, or hatted. The supineness with which you accept the dictum of fashion and clothe yourselves in the ephemeral sartorial idiocies current is indicative. We laugh at the nose ring, the flattened forehead, the blackened teeth, the tatooed cheeks, the feathered head of the savage. No savage woman ever wore a corset or a high-heeled shoe, or stuck on her head the atrocities for the concoction of which you pay great prices to men.

"Why should a woman wear feathers on her head? Does anyone think they are pretty? Imagine the Venus of Milo so adorned. I wish you could see yourselves from this pulpit. Begin your reforms on your heads and then go to your backs and to your feet. You are slaves, but not to men—to each other. Women do not dress for men, but for women. Break these shackles if you can, before you ask to be trusted with the vote.

"History shows us a shadowy and somewhat immoral Sappho, a ferocious Jezebel, a mythic Semiramis, a voluptuous Cleopatra, a vile Messalina, a lonely Elizabeth, an infamous Catherine, a frivolous Pompadour—and these are the women who have usurped the functions of men. Of course there are exceptions. We all personally know some strong, manly woman, and our acquaintance does not lack some sweet, womanly man. On the other hand, what a splendid roll of mothers does history present, from Rispah, Hannah, Mary, Cornelia, Monica, down to Mary, mother of Washington, and your own mothers.

Physically Unfit for Man's Place.

"Again from another point, the physical woman is built to endure certain strains, make certain efforts, resist certain forces, all of which are severe enough to tax the body and the mind to the highest degree. But in fitting woman for these things she has been unfitted entirely for the physical labor of men. Her terms of service on the bench, at the bar, in the army or navy, or militia, in Sheriff's posse, as doctor, clerk, or laborer would be so uncertain as to render her unavailable unless she totally abrogated the functions of woman.

"What will be the ultimate result of this woman movement? We will have no more families, no more mothers, no more society, marriage will be a failure, for it it exists at all it will be a condition in which the husband will be one man and the wife another. The field for the practice of the highest virtues, the home, will be eliminated. The social purity of mankind will be undermined, prostitution will flourish, as it always does when marriage is neglected, and the result will be ruin.

"This is carrying the argument to the extreme, I admit, but it is legitimate deduction from the attempt of woman to occupy the field of man.

"Now I will admit that the economic position of woman is not yet ideal—neither is that of man. Many women work. Many do not marry, it seems; some because they will not, more because they cannot. I wish I could procure a home and a husband for every woman. But how would the ballot in woman's hands better these sad conditions? The ballot in the hands of women has not made Colorado a better State."

The Rev. Mr. Brady preached the same sermon at St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, Yonkers, last night.

POTASH IS PRODUCED FROM UTAH ALUNITE

Recent Discovery May Save Importation of Millions of Dollars' Worth of Potassium Salts.

SUPPLY IS INEXHAUSTIBLE

Secretary Lane Announces Success of Experiment That May Make Us Independent of Germany.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—Production for the first time in the United States of commercial mineral potash, for which in the past Americans have spent millions of dollars abroad annually, was announced tonight by Secretary Lane of the Interior Department. A report had just reached the department from a special agent of the Geological Survey telling how by a simple process potash had been produced from alunite found in a great vein in Piute County, Utah.

As alunite is known to exist in large quantities in Utah, Colorado, Nevada, California, and Arizona, Mr. Lane believes that the discovery assures the country of an adequate supply of potash for agricultural purposes, and for use in the manufacture of explosives. Statistics show that imports of potassium salts from Germany amounted to $15,000,000 in 1913, the last year for which figures are available.

The Utah alunite experimented with is in a vein 10 feet wide which has been traced for 3,500 feet. Its depth has not been ascertained. Reports show that more than 200 tons of the mineral have been milled, producing two tons of 99 per cent. pure potash. At the present time that are 100,000 gallons of alunite containing large amounts of potash salts in the course of evaporation.

20% MORE GO TO CHURCH.

Campaign for Attendance Increases One Congregation 50%.

"Go-to-church Sunday" attracted larger audiences than usual to churches throughout the city yesterday, and at some churches special sermons on church going were preached.

Dr. S. Edward Young, Chairman of the committee which conducted the Go-to-church Sunday campaign, said that early reports from the churches indicated the attendance for the day increased 20 per cent. and that one church reported a 50 per cent. increase. The committee, composed of fifty pastors, favors holding a special meeting next Spring to plan a universal movement for next year's Go-to-church Sunday.

The Reformed Church of Harlem, Lenox Avenue and 123d Street, was one of the leaders in the campaign in Harlem. The Rev. Dr. Edgar Tilton, Jr., the pastor, applied his sermon to the recent war on the hyphen.

CALLS PREPAREDNESS 'GROTESQUE' AS A TEXT

Dr. Merrill Denounces Suggestion for Thanksgiving Sermon.

Ministers of this city received letters yesterday from the Conference Committee on National Preparedness, which includes most of the organizations in favor of better defense, urging them to talk in favor of preparedness in their Thanksgiving Day sermons. Several ministers have already discussed the subject of preparedness from the pulpit, some in favor of the movement, some against.

The Rev. Dr. William F. Merrill, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church, one of those who received a letter yesterday from Henry A. Wise Wood, Chairman of the Conference Committee, made a statement yesterday denouncing the suggestion and saying the subject was unfit for a Thanksgiving Day discourse, whether the preacher was for or against preparedness.

The letter from the Conference Committee was as follows:

Reverend Sir: The Conference Committee on National Preparedness is working in behalf of peace through adequate preparedness, and it has been suggested to us that you might be glad to participate in this work, to the extent of discussing national preparedness in your Thanksgiving sermon. The subject is appropriate. As President Wilson has well said, we do not want to change anything, but we do want to protect our homes and to insure our country against invasion. This we feel, we can best do by being prepared for defense, if the need for it be thrust upon us.

Our rich heritage of civic and spiritual freedom, handed down to us at the cost of many lives and much suffering by our ancestors, and the present great prosperity of men of all institutions carry with them grave responsibilities which can only be discharged by the performance of those duties which public intelligence and public conscience make clear. The events of the last year have shown us both our grave perils as a nation and the duty that lies before us in protecting our heritage, and in protecting the future of our children.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that Thanksgiving sermons this year may properly include at least reference to the duty of adequately safeguarding here in our own land the spiritual advance that the world has made at such a great cost. We are of course earnestly and ardently for peace, but we feel that the peace-at-any-price plan is by all historical precedents only an unmistakable invitation to aggression by those who covet what we possess. As I have the honor to be the Chairman of the Conference Committee on National Preparedness, representing in an organized way a very large membership among educated and peace-loving persons who are concerned for the welfare of our country, I should be pleased to have you write, if you will, of your proposed co-operation in the manner suggested. Yours very truly,

HENRY A. WISE WOOD.

The Rev. Dr. Merrill's statement was as follows:

"I shall be indebted to THE TIMES if it will allow me, through its columns, to voice an emphatic protest against the effort now being made to induce the churches to discuss the duty of national preparedness in their Thanksgiving sermons. I have received many strange and inappropriate suggestions with regard to Thanksgiving services, but never one more repugnant to good taste and proper religious sentiment than this.

"Even if we grant that an increase of armed force is necessary in the United States at the present time, it is no cause for thankfulness. At best it is a concession to a vicious and abnormal state of things in the world, and a confession that, as a people, we are not high-minded enough to dare to act as Christians should. It is grotesque to suggest such a subject for the national day of thanksgiving. One might as soon give thanks if an outbreak of crime all over this country should lead New York City, in a panic of fear, to double its police force, spending on it the money which should go into making the streets and homes of the citizens safer, better and cleaner.

"I hope the churches of this city will treat the request the way it deserves by refusing or ignoring it."

LAWMAKERS FOR DEFENSE.

Security League Gets More Assurances from National Legislators.

The National Security League made public yesterday excerpts from letters received from Senators and Congressmen regarding their stand on preparedness. About 200 members of the next Congress have answered the queries of the Security League. The great majority of the replies favor an adequate program of national preparedness, but there are several who remain on the fence or are opposed to the Administration's defense program. Chairman Henry of the House Committee on Rules is one of the non-committal contingent.

In the event that Congressman John J. Fitzgerald of Brooklyn, who is the Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, is elected to the Supreme Court bench, for which he has been nominated by the Brooklyn Democrats, his position as Chairman of that important committee will probably be taken by Congressman Swager Sherley of Kentucky, the second ranking majority member of the committee.

"I have always been in favor," Congressman Sherley writes, "of a more rapid increase in the army and navy than Congress, as a whole, has been willing to authorize."

Representative Murray Hulbert of the Twenty-first District, New York, expressed both his own attitude and the attitude of the league when he declares, in his letter, that General Charles C. Pinckney's declaration should read, "Millions for defense as an assurance of peace." Representative Thomas S. Crago of Pennsylvania is even more emphatic. "I am," he says, "in favor, not only as a citizen, but as a member of Congress, of giving our country a full measure of defense. Each is necessary for our self-preservation."

Representative George W. Edmonds of Pennsylvania says he has spent six months investigating army and navy conditions, and declares he "favors legislatio which will place our country in a state of preparedness commensurate with its greatness, and to preserve its standing among other great nations." Senator Penrose of Philadelphia also writes as follows: "I am in hearty accord with the purposes of the National Security League, and I am an earnest advocate of national preparedness."

Senator Albert B. Cummins of Iowa says emphatically that he is "in favor of such preparedness, both on land and sea, as is necessary."

In Ohio, Representative Alfred G. Allen stands for an adequate navy, a standing army of 100,000 men fully officered, and for a reserve. Representative E. M. Cliperfield of Illinois says he is in favor of adequate national defense, while Senator M. E. Clapp of Minnesota says he "believes there will be no difficulty about getting ample appropriations."

Military training in the high schools is suggested by Representative Sydney Anderson of Minnesota. Representative H. T. Hilgesen of North Dakota goes on record as being "in favor of any reasonable increase in our army and navy."

Senator Thomas Sterling of South Dakota also gives assurance that he is in favor of very material additions to our means of natural defense.

Military Commander Fixes Maximum Price—Guards Milk Supply.

BERLIN, Oct. 17, (via London.)—The military commander in the mark of Brandenburg has fixed the maximum price of butter at 2 marks 80 pfennigs (approximately 70 cents) a pound. The price had reached 3 marks 20 pfennigs (approximately 80 cents) and was still rising.

It is announced that an order is about to be issued forbidding the use of milk in Prussia for baking, manufacturing chocolate and candy, and other similar purposes, and forbidding the sale of cream.

STEFANSSON FOUND 60-FOOT ICE RIDGES

Explorer Challenges Statements of Nansen and Peary in Letter to Michigan Professor.

Special to The New York Times.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Oct. 17.—Stained with smoke and seal oil, a closely written six-page letter has reached Professor W. H. Hobbs, of the University of Michigan, from the Arctic explorer, Vilhjalmur Stefansson. It was sent from Stefansson's camp on the southeast coast of Banks Land. Stefansson takes issue in his letter both with Dr. Fritjhof Nansen, and Admiral Peary over the size of ice ridges and announces that fresh water ice has been discovered by him in the Beaufort Sea.

By many persons Stefansson had been given up for lost until the news reached the world a few weeks ago that he was safe and well, that he had discovered a new land in the unknown area to the northward of Alaska, and that he was staying in the North to accomplish the remaining purposes of his expedition. Stefansson's letter was written on Jan. 13 last, and was remailed in Ottawa on Oct. 14.

He nowhere refers in his letter to the hardships that he has endured, but discusses scientific matters. His sledge journey northward over the ice, subject always to having his retreat cut off through the opening of widening cracks or leads, he refers to as a "little trip during the absence of the sun." Stefansson writes:

"Dear Mr. Hobbs—On a little trip during the absence of the sun, I have with me your 'Earth Features' to read, something profitable when one circumstance or another keeps me in camp. My introduction to geology was in Shaler's Geology 4, but though the introduction could scarcely have been more auspicious, it never led to more than a bowing acquaintance. I learned a little about the earth, and got to know to my permanent satisfaction and benefit a charming old man.

"I cannot find the reference now, but I think you speak somewhere of Nansen's statement that pressure ridges of sea ice are never over thirty feet high—at any rate I remember he says so in his 'Farthest North.'

"I have seen many pressure ridges sixty feet high; I have a photograph of a man on top of a single piece that is over sixty feet high. I know several whaling captains who consider it a matter of common knowledge that pressure ridges may be as high as their 'crow's nests'—eighty-five to one hundred feet over the sea. Apparently Nansen never saw—and it seems Peary never saw—ice pressure that compares with that on the Alaska coast.

"Ice there is frequently so rough that a loose dog, unhampered by anything, is unable to follow a man who, by use of some sort of 'alpine' method, makes his way along."

Stefansson finds that the floe-ice of the Beaufort Sea, which is originally salt, becomes so fresh after two seasons' weathering that the tongue can detect no saltness in it. Bay ice in a single season is rendered fresh.

The letter contains many facts of the greatest scientific interest. He also sends photographs of the ice ridges with his dog sledge near. Of his observations regarding ice conditions in the Arctic regions he says: "These things are written merely as traveler's observations that may be of use to the Darwinian systematiser who cannot go to all fields to see."

JEWISH EDITOR ARRIVES.

Comes to Help In Move for Equality In Russia and Rumania.

Dr. Samuel Bettelheim, editor and proprietor of the Hungarian Jewish News of Budapest, arrived in New York yesterday with the intention of attending the American Jewish Conference, which was scheduled to be held in Washington on Oct. 24 but which was called off. It is understood that a conference, which it is said will be more thoroughly representative of the Hebrew race, may be arranged shortly. The object will be to insist that any peace treaty to be made shall include provisos that Russia and Rumania shall grant equality to the Jews.

"I have come to New York," Dr. Bettelheim said, "because it is the biggest and greatest Jewish centre in all history. It is here that a world-wide movement should start. I am going to make clear to the American people the situation of the Jews in the warring countries. The question of a Jewish centre in Palestine is important, but the question of the rights of the Jews in Russia and Rumania is more important.

"We are laying plans," the doctor continued, "to have the Jews of every nation, including those nations at war, unite to secure freedom from Russian and Rumanian tyranny when the treaty shall be signed at the close of the war."

have wound up their campaign, but not less than 552 speakers and workers in the suffrage ranks will give their undivided attention to the work of the campaign tomorrow. They will attempt something that never has been tried in a political campaign conducted by men.

Miss Mildred Taylor, who was in charge of the party which brought the "Eliot Van Roving Shop" caravan from New York to New Jersey to aid in the suffrage fight, will call to order at 6 o'clock tomorrow morning a meeting which is scheduled to continue for a solid twenty-four hours, or until within an hour of the opening of the polls.

The van will be stationed at Military Park, Newark, where more pedestrians pass than at any other point in the State of New Jersey. It is planned to divide the twenty-four hours into eight three-hour periods, each devoted to the discussion of some particular phase of the suffrage question.

Dr. Mary Walker, of Washington, who, under an act of Congress, has been permitted to wear male attire for many years, probably will take part in the open air campaigning tomorrow. She went to police headquarters in Jersey City today and applied to the Director of Public Safety for a permit to make speeches in the open air on the suffrage question.

MRS. JASPER LYNCH HOPEFUL.

Social Leader Says Equal Suffrage Will Prevail Some Time.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Oct. 17.—Prominent social leaders are taking active parts in the suffrage campaign, both for and against the amendment. Mrs. Jasper Lynch, Vice President of the State S. P. C. A., strongly favored equal suffrage in a statement issued tonight:

"I have not made a life study of the suffrage question," said Mrs. Lynch, "but I believe if it does not carry at this election, it will in time. Women have become the equals of men in the arts, sciences, and professions, and in the business world, and if men and women are to meet on the same plane of equality in these matters, there would hardly be any reasonable argument in favor of denying the same equality in the matter of determining what men and what legislation shall affect the conditions under which men and women daily meet and work."

Ex-Governor John Franklin Fort, Samuel Hellner, and others have carried on an active campaign in behalf of suffrage. A majority for the amendment in Lakewood is expected.

DEBS SPEAKS FOR SUFFRAGE.

Socialists Say One Word for Votes and Ten for Their Own Propaganda.

Eugene V. Debs began his "whirlwind campaign for suffrage" in this State yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. Mr. Debs devoted a few minutes of his long talk to suffrage, but took opportunity to emphasize that the Socialist Party had "always favored woman suffrage." The rest of his talk was straight Socialism. Mr. Debs will talk every night this week, covering the territory from 131st Street to the lower east side and parts of Brooklyn.

Meyer London, the Socialist Congressman, and Mrs. Kate Richards O'Hare, who was introduced as "the first woman who ever joined a machinists' union in Kansas," and who wore a wrist watch, also spoke on suffrage and Socialism, which they treated as synonymous.

The speakers were sarcastic about President Wilson's recent espousal of suffrage. Mr. Debs said President Wilson felt it necessary in making his announcement to "apologize" for the Democratic Party because it had not favored suffrage. Mrs. O'Hare amused the audience for about ten minutes, advancing on behalf of women that they "made this Nation and this race possible." The audience nearly filled the auditorium and interrupted the speakers with shouts and whistling.

The Gorham Business started with forks and spoons

In fact, in the nomenclature of the table, Gorham Tableware is almost as well known as Irish Linen and French Cuisine.

There is in every fork and spoon we make 84 years of cumulative experience, to ensure the quality and enrich the design.

And speaking of designs, perhaps the only fault with the Gorham selections is that the variety is apt to embarrass the choice!

There are twenty-seven different and distinct patterns and each interprets some historical epoch or influence with the fidelity of a genuine affection.

But however the patterns and the prices may vary, in nowise affects the quality of Gorham workmanship, which is best described as a habit of excellence which we cannot overcome!

How Much Will You Keep?

IT is not how much you get, but how much you keep that counts.

The test of efficient housekeeping is to have a surplus at the end of the month--a surplus to lay aside for the capital of the home.

But you will hardly have a surplus if you have a "charge-account." Even if you will not yield to its temptation to extravagance, it is extravagant to buy on credit. You must pay part of its cost, by paying more than you should.

If you want your capital and surplus to grow—give up your "charge-account" and open a Depositors' Account at Macy's.

You lose nothing by the change but gain the manifold economies made possible by paying CASH, plus 4% on your balance, plus independence and security.

Send for this Booklet:

Would you like to change? Our booklet, "Dollar Diplo-Macy," will tell you how and what you gain.

CONSTITUTION HOLDS MEN RESPONSIBLE

Henry L. Stimson and F. C. Tanner Discuss Proposals in a Debate.

JOHN J. O'CONNELL'S REPLY

Admits State's Need of a Budget System, but Finds Flaws at Free Synagogue's Forum.

The fundamental principles on which the proposed new Constitution was built are those of responsibility and publicity in the management of the affairs of the State, according to Henry L. Stimson, ex-Secretary of War, and Frederick C. Tanner, Chairman of the Republican State Committee. Both were delegates to the Constitutional Convention, and they spoke last night at the Sunday Evening Forum of the Free Synagogue, 36 West Sixty-eighth Street.

"The first tenet of the Constitution," Mr. Stimson said, "is that in public business you can't get anywhere unless you can hold some known public officer responsible when things go wrong, and the second tenet is that you can't hold anyone responsible when things go wrong unless you give him adequate power to make things go right."

The building of the Constitution on these principles, Mr. Stimson said, transcended in importance any particular clause in the Constitution. The big thing, he said, was for the people of the State to put the principles into practice.

The speaker then undertook to show that that part of the Constitution with which he had had most to do in the convention, the sections dealing with State finance, conformed to the principles laid down.

"At present," he said, "we have 152 executive boards, commissions, and bureaus who spend the State's money. The head of each of these agencies sends in an estimate of what money he will need to the Controller, who submits the 152 estimates to the Legislature. Naturally, each bureau head wants all he can get, so the Legislature generally finds the mass of estimates of no use to it, and in the last confused moments of its session jams through an appropriation bill drawn in committee behind closed doors. The result is an inexact, uneconomical, extravagant expenditure of the people's money.

"Under the provisions of the proposed Constitution, the 152 divisions of the executive branch of the Government are reduced to seventeen great departments, the heads of which are appointed by the Governor. Each of these department heads makes an estimate for his department and presents it to the Governor, who makes up a State budget from the seventeen estimates. This Governor's budget then goes to the Legislature, which may pass it or reduce it, but not, with a few exceptions, increase it. Thus, it is the Governor's budget. He has to ask for what money is spent, so that if any of the State's money is wasted he is responsible, and the people can make him feel his responsibility."

Mr. Stimson outlined the provision of the Constitution providing for serial bonds by which any administration borrowing money will be forced to begin the repayment of the money in the following year instead of pushing payment along to a succeeding administration.

Mr. Tanner spoke on the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government and dwelt upon the unnecessary expenses incident to the operation of 152 departments, each headed by a high-salaried chief, each occupying a suite of offices, each with a payroll of clerks and secretaries, and each overlapping another in function. He indorsed the establishment of only seventeen departments as a step to reduce expense and increase efficiency. He said it was impossible for the Governor to keep his oath to take care that the laws of the State were carried out when he had the complicated machinery of the present system.

"If you defeat this Constitution," Mr. Tanner said, "strike out that part of the oath."

Mr. Tanner defended the appointment of the heads of departments by the Governor as effecting the short ballot. He said that the people, for example, had little to say about the election of a Secretary of State, as the political bosses could run any man on the ticket they desired.

"But the people do have something to say about choosing their Governor, and, because public attention is focused on the nominee for this office, the people can force the bosses to nominate the man they want. Then they can hold this man responsible. Do you suppose, for example, that the machine wanted to nominate Governor Hughes for the second time? It did not, but the people forced the nomination."

John J. O'Connell, New York County Chairman of the Progressive Party, spoke against the adoption of the Constitution. He said that it brought about a concentration of power, but not a concentration of responsibility. He admitted the need of a budget system, but said the one proposed was dangerous. He attacked the idea of permitting the Governor to appoint State Senators and Assemblymen to executive offices while they remained legislators; he criticised the apportionment article, and he said that the making of the Public Service Commission a constitutional body also precluded obtaining home rule for the city.

Mr. Stimson replied to Mr. O'Connell. He reiterated his defense of the budget system; he asserted that no harm could come of the appointment of legislators to executive positions, as the appointments must be made in the open; he defended the apportionment on the ground that the unit of New York City should never control the diversified units of the State at large; and he said that in making the Public Service Commission a constitutional body the convention had merely made Governor Hughes's greatest reform permanent and had taken the commission out of politics. The jurisdiction of the commission, he said, was subject to change by the Legislature, which could give local New York bodies what powers it pleased.

NO SPIRIT OF PARTISANSHIP.

Senator Mills Says Constitution Is Work of Men with Ideals.

Senator Ogden L. Mills, urging approval of the proposed new Constitution, at the public forum in the Church of the Ascension last night, said that many of its opponents were men who fear to see the tax laws inforced, and other objectors were largely of the class who were disgruntled because their own pet theories or ideas were not substituted for wiser provisions.

"To my mind the new Constitution represents the greatest step forward in self-government that has been offered to the people since the creation of the present Constitution," said he. "It represents the best thought and the labor of a group of men who brought to the work the best ideals in government without a spirit of partisanship.

"One example alone of the many advantages it contains for the people is sufficient to entitle it to general public approval, the replacing of the present irresponsible form of government with direct and personal responsibility from the heads of departments to the Governor, by merging the work of 152 separate, scandal-making bureaus, departments, and commissions into a group of seventeen efficient and economical departments.

"It provides for absolute home-rule by leaving matters of local concern to be adjusted at home, allowing the legislature to perform its proper function of attending to the welfare of the State in general. During the last term of the Legislature its time was taken up on one occasion by the question as to whether a certain Sheriff should be permitted to buy a cow or purchase his milk."

CITIZENS' UNION VOTES "YES."

Issues a Pamphlet Explaining Constitution's Merits.

The Citizens' Union has prepared for distribution this week among voters throughout the State a printed list of the important changes made in the proposed new Constitution to be voted on Nov. 2. The Union says:

"In our judgment the adoption of this proposed Constitution will accomplish more for the State of New York than can be hoped for in the next generation if it should be defeated."

In a "special note" the Union comments on the criticism by Judge Cullen, saying:

"There has appeared some criticism of the failure of the convention to provide for the supremacy of the Civil Courts over military tribunals. There never was any such provision in the Constitution, and it has never been missed. If the provision is desired by the people there is no reason in the world why it can not hereafter be adopted; but the failure of the convention to adopt it affords no warrant for refusing to vote for a Constitution admirable in other respects."

FORESTS ARE WELL PROTECTED

Adirondacks Association Praises Conservation Article.

The conservation article in the new Constitution, which has received comparatively little discussion in this city since the adjournment of the Constitutional Convention, is heartily indorsed in a resolution that has been adopted by the trustees of the Association for the Protection of the Adirondacks, which has its headquarters in this city. John G. Agar is President of the association. The announcement sent out by the trustees yesterday says:

"The association believes that the proposed Conservation Commission of nine members, one from each judicial district of the State, serving without compensation and for long terms, with the powers given in the amendment, promises a disinterested administration whose recommendations will be received without suspicion of sinister motives and will be carried into practice without fear of consequences. The amendment will take from the Legislature much of its power to interfere with the management of the forests, fish, game, and other natural resources; and it is felt that a commission like the one contemplated, free from such interference, with continuous service, will have an opportunity to study deliberately the problems involved and to formulate plans for development which will be for the best interests of the State. The commission will have ample power to protect faithful employes from political interference.

BRYAN NOW SPRINGS A WAR REFERENDUM

No Fight Unless Nation Votes For It, Women Included, Under His Plan.

AIMS ATTACK AT JINGOES

Speaker, in Church Here, Emphasizes "Recent" Conversion of Mr. Wilson to Suffrage.

William Jennings Bryan attacked the movement for preparedness, but did not say anything which intimated that the Wilson Administration was identified with the movement, in his address last night at the Grace Methodist Church in West 104th Street, of which the Rev. Christian F. Reisner, a faithful friend of Mr. Bryan since 1896, is pastor.

The crowd was too big for the church and an overflow meeting was held in the basement. While Mr. Bryan was making a short preliminary talk in the basement, Dr. Reisner won applause by saying in a confidential tone:

"It is my firm belief that this country would now be in war except for some men who are not more than a thousand miles from here."

Dr. Reisner called to the pulpit Samuel Untermyer, who spoke briefly, describing Mr. Bryan as a "great statesman, loyal citizen and patriot of the nation." When Mr. Bryan himself appeared, the audience rose and gave what Dr. Reisner described as the "Grace Methodist Church" salute—a clipped form of the Chautauqua salute, the hand being waved, but with no handkerchief in it.

Mr. Bryan supplemented his plan for keeping the country out of war by peace treaties with one feature. He urged that if the year of deliberation and investigation required by the Bryan arbitration treaties failed to settle any international issue satisfactorily, and there was still talk of war, the question of war or peace should be voted upon by the entire nation.

"If there is any question on which we ought to have a referendum," he said, "it is this, and I hope that, if such a case ever occurs, the women as well as the men have the vote."

Wilson a "Recent" Convert.

There was great applause, and Mr. Bryan, noticing that suffragists seemed to be active in the audience, made his only reference to President Wilson. He said, stressing the words "recently" and "recent":

"You have had a recent convert to the cause of woman suffrage. I see that the President has recently announced that he will vote for woman suffrage at the New Jersey election.

"I have believed that women should have the vote, but if there was only one question on which they could vote I would say that that should be the question of peace or war."

Mr. Bryan condemned "propagandists," "preparedness societies," "jingoes," and "metropolitan editors."

"The propagandists talk of preparedness," he said, "do not say from what direction a war is threatened, but they know the people of this country would never stand for the excessive burden of taxation that would be required, unless they are shown that there is some country for the United States to fear. So the jingoes bear false witness against their neighbors and point to Japan on the west and tell us the danger is there, or else they point out some nation of Europe as a likely assailant. But, when asked to show any reason why such an attack is likely, they have to take refuge in silence. I challenge any man to produce a single scrap of evidence that this country is in danger of attack from any of these nations.

"So, then, they have to say to the United States: 'Beware the fate of Belgium.' Now, how any normal man can see any parallel between this country and Belgium, passes my comprehension. Belgium had a population of 7,000,000. We have a population of 100,000,000. Imaginary lines draw the boundaries about Belgium, while our frontiers rest on two great oceans. Witness the difficulty that England has had in transporting an army twenty miles across the English Channel, and see what a task it would be to invade the United States."

Whom Americans Rely On.

Mr. Bryan repeated that if we should be challenged by some European power our reply should be a negative, on the ground that we would not wallow in bloody mire to conform to that nation's ideas of honor. If that nation were persistent and there was no escape from a war, Mr. Bryan said, "this country would not rely on jingoes. They would be too busy making army contracts. We would rely on the great body of men who work when the country needs workers, and fight when the country needs fighters."

"If the jingoes in this country are able to scare us into preparing, although they cannot name a country which might possibly attack us," the speaker continued, "would not the jingoes in some other country be able to scare that country by pointing us out and saying that we were preparing against it?"

Mr. Bryan said that it looked as if the United States's trouble with Germany was over, and that, if the case were not settled, he was in favor of postponing the settlement until the end of this war. He argued that there would not be much danger of war then, but added:

"If we do have war then, it will be our own war, and we can stay in it as long as we will and get out of it as soon as we will. The present is everybody's war, and if we got into it we could not get out until it was over, and God forbid that we should ever be mixed up in the rivalries, entanglements, and ambitions of Europe."

SPEED COSTS HER LICENSE.

Miss Katherine Dahlgren Barred from Bay State Roads.

Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., Oct. 17.—After investigating many complaints against Miss Katherine Dahlgren of New York, driver of a 110 horse power racing automobile, the State Highway Commission has suspended her license.

She was three times in the Lee District Court on charges of speeding, operating her automobile in a dangerous manner, and driving the car with the muffler cut off. She was fined on two charges, the rest being filed.

Miss Dahlgren is a daughter of Mrs. Drexel Dahlgren. She is 20 years old, and has owned the racing automobile since Spring. Her dashes through the Brookshires at high speed were the sensations of the early season, and led to complaints from citizens in many communities.

FIVE HURT WHEN CAR UPSETS.

Chauffeur Host Faces Charge of Grand Larceny.

William Cochran, chauffeur for M. S. Scheinman, 1080 Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, and four of his friends were injured yesterday morning when Mr. Scheinman's automobile overturned as they were turning from Highland Boulevard into the Vermont Street viaduct in Brooklyn. Cochran is at the Kings County Hospital suffering from concussion of the brain and a fractured jaw. He is also under arrest on a charge of grand larceny preferred by Mr. Scheinman, who said the chauffeur had taken the car from the garage without permission.

According to the story told to the police, Cochran took out the car at 6:30 in the morning and went on a "joy ride" with the four friends, James Croke of 29 Marion Street, Edward Abrecht of 4 Firth Avenue, Maspeth, L. I.; Arthur Smith of Brooklyn, and John Engelman of 2373 Tenth Street, Brooklyn. Croke's hip was injured when the automobile turned over, but the other three escaped with bruises and a shaking up. The car was battered.

Keeps Dinner Engagement After Riverside Drive Accident.

Miss Violet Gould, 18 years old, daughter of Joseph J. Gould of 315 West Ninety-ninth Street, was thrown from an automobile owned and operated by Thomas Lenane of 18 West Eighty-second Street, last night.

Miss Gould, accompanied by her sister, Miss Flora Gould, was in Lenane's car going down Riverside Drive. Lenane swerved suddenly to avoid running down a pedestrian, and Miss Violet Gould, who occupied the seat over the running board, was thrown into the street. Dr. Steele of the Knickerbocker Hospital found that she had suffered lacerations of the arm. She was able to keep her dinner engagement at the Hotel Ansonia.

THREE HURT IN AUTO CRASH.

Frederick Ruppert Wrecks Two Cars and Is Fined $60.

Three men were injured in an automobile collision at St. Nicholas Avenue and 181st Street early yesterday morning. They were in a car going north which ran into an empty car belonging to Charles D. Schwetzer of 484 East 164th Street. Both cars were badly smashed.

Frederick Ruppert of 602 West 180th Street, was driving the car, which belonged to Picker Brothers of 313 West 125th Street. With him were George O'Brien, a clerk, of 742 St. Nicholas Avenue; Harry Roos, a clerk, of 286 West 178th Street, and Richard Dickson, a clerk, of 567 West 186th Street. Dickson's jaw was dislocated, and he was taken to Washington Heights Hospital. O'Brien and Roos were attended on the street by Doctor Jacobs.

Ruppert was uninjured. He was placed under arrest by Patrolman Tully of the West 175th Street Station on a charge of reckless driving and operating a car without a license. Magistrate Corrigan, in Harlem Court, fined him $50 on the first charge and $10 on the second.

WANT BIG JOBS COMPETITIVE

Civil Service Reform Association Praises Commission's Work.

The Civil Service Reform Association, at 79 Wall Street, concluding from investigations made by its representatives that recent improvements in the examining methods of the Municipal Civil Service Commission have resulted in showing the practicability of competition for higher city offices, has written to the commission commending its work and suggesting that further development of the new form of examinations will tend to benefit the city by attracting more superior men to the service of the municipality. The letter to the commission says in part:

"It has been well said that the only way to make the merit system truly effective is to extend it to the city's expert service. So long as it is confined to subordinate positions, experience has shown that it produces only a partial elimination of the evils of the spoils system. The present administration of the civil service law in New York City has gone far to extend the scope of the merit system.

"All factors lead to one conclusion, namely, that the experience of New York in the last eight or nine months is a practical demonstration of the practicability of competition for high administration office. It can properly be said that your record is a more forceful demonstration than has ever before been made in any other jurisdiction."

Beecher Memorial Service.

Memorial services were held last night at Plymouth Church for Henry Ward Beecher and, in the interest of Talladega College, at Talladega, Ala., which was founded in 1867 for negroes. It was in Plymouth Church that Henry Ward Beecher preached his famous sermons against slavery. The Rev. S. Parkes Cadman and Dr. Lucien B. Warner delivered addresses. George W. Crawford of New Haven, and the Rev. A. W. Miller, pastor of the Church of the Nazarene, both graduates of Talladega College, also spoke and appealed for funds for the institution. The Fisk Jubilee Singers of Fisk College in Tennessee, provided the musical program.

MOTION TO QUASH NEW HAVEN TRIAL

Accused Directors Assert That the Acts Alleged Do Not Constitute a Crime.

CASE MAY RUN FOR MONTHS

Government Counsel Likely to Take a Day and a Half in His Opening Address to the Jury.

Counsel for William Rockefeller and ten other directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad have filed a brief with Judge Hunt of the United States District Court in a motion to dismiss the indictments for violations of the criminal provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust low on the ground that the charges contained in the indictments do not constitute a crime. If Judge Hunt decides the points made in the brief are well taken, it is expected he will allow the motion to be argued.

The motion asserts that the combination of interests alleged in the indictment was not in itself an illegal conspiracy and that nothing is cited in the indictment to show that the combination resulted in an illegal conspiracy.

The following is the text of the motion:

The defendants severally move the court for an order quashing and dismissing the indictment herein and holding the same for naught, upon the ground that it appears upon the face of the indictment that the matters and things therein alleged and specified do not constitute a crime against the laws of the United States. And for special causes for such quashal and dismissal each of the defendants severally assign the following, that is to say:

1. That it does not appear from the indictment that the unification and combination of the common carriers named in the indictment, which is alleged to be the purpose of the conspiracy therein attempted to be alleged, would or could have resulted in an illegal conspiracy.

Plead Time Limit.

2. That it does not appear from the indictment that any of the defendants intended or conspired at any time within three years prior to the filing of the said indictment to use any of the means and methods set forth in the indictment.

3. That the indictment does not specify the time when the acts therein described and set forth were committed.

4. That it does not appear from the indictment that they at any time combined or conspired to monopolize any part of the commerce among the several States of the United States within the intent and meaning of the statute upon which the indictment is framed.

5. That it does not appear therefrom that the supposed combination of conspiracy therein alleged has, or could have, deprived the people of the United States, or the people of the States of Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Vermont, Maine, and New Hampshire, or the people of any of the States of the United States, of any benefits.

6. That it does not appear therefrom that any benefits to the people of the United States, or to the people of the States of Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Vermont, Maine, and New Hampshire, or to the people of any of the States of the United States, would, or could, have arisen from keeping separate the activities of the common carriers which the so-called conspirators are alleged to have conspired to bring under their influence, management, domination, and ownership.

Say Monopoly Is Not Shown.

7. That it does not appear therefrom that the supposed combination and conspiracy therein alleged, if successfully carried out, would, or could, have resulted in a monopoly within the intent and meaning of the statute.

8. That it does not appear therefrom that the supposed attempt to monopolize, therein alleged, was, or could have been, if accomplished in whole or in part, injurious to the public within the intent and meaning of the statute.

9. That it does not appear therefrom that there was any intention on the part of the defendants to prevent, obstruct, or hinder interstate commerce or competition in interstate commerce.

10. That it does not appear therefrom that there was any intention upon the part of any of the defendants to restrict competition in interstate trade or commerce unreasonably or unduly, or to unduly or unreasonably obstruct the course of trade or commerce, or in any way to prejudice the public interests.

The motion was signed for William Rockefeller by Richard V. Lindabury, for Charles F. Brooker by Sullivan and Cromwell, for Robert W. Taft by Hornblower, Miller, Potter & Earle, for James S. Heminway, and A. Heaton Robertson by John W. H. Crim, for Lewis Cass Ledyard by Nicoll, Anable, Lindsay & Fuller, for Charles M. Pratt by Carter, Ledyard & Milburn, for D. Newton Barney, Frederick F. Brewster and Henry K. McHarg by Thomas D. Thacher, and for Edward D. Robbins by Michael Kennedy.

It is expected it will require three or four months to take the testimony in the case. The jury was selected last week, and the sifting process took an unusually long time for one of the Federal courts. Practically three court days were consumed in filling the jury-box satisfactorily. The Government used all and the defense all but one of their nine peremptory challenges. Both sides, however, have expressed themselves as well satisfied with the jurors.

To Present Government Case.

R. L. Batts of Austin, Texas, will open the case for the Government. He expects that it will take him about a day and a half to explain to the jurors all the ramifications of the New Haven system, and the way in which it was developed from a comparatively short line until it had acquired control of much of the transportation of New England. Not only will he have to deal with the combination of the original railroads of that part of the country, but he will also have to describe the negotiations by which the New Haven got possession of the steamship lines plying between this city and Boston and Portland, and the devices by which it acquired control of trolley systems.

Of the twelve defendants who were supposed to be tried together, one, George Maccullough Miller, will be absent today. He is over eighty years of age and in very infirm health at his country home in Morristown, N. J. On account of his physical condition, the Government has not moved for his trial, so it will stand over for the present.

URGE REFORM IN NEWPORT.

Naval Officers Say Our Apprentice Seamen Are Imperilled.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Oct. 17.—High naval officials participated at a mass meeting at the Opera House this afternoon at which a great civic movement was launched. The meeting was called by a self-appointed committee of ten, and was the result of complaints regarding the illegal selling of liquor to apprentice seamen, made to Mayor Robert S. Burlingame by Rear Admiral Austin M. Knight, Commandant of the Narragansett Bay Naval Station and Roger Wallace, Commander of the Naval Training Station.

Mayor Burlingame, who attended today's meeting, heard complaints about existing conditions made by Admiral Knight, Captain Roger Welles, Lieutenant Commander F. T. Evans, ex-Representative W. P. Sheffield, and the Rev. Stanley C. Hughes, rector of Trinity Church.

Admiral Knight said he was greatly interested in the movement for the betterment of Newport.

"I am present," he said, "to speak of things in relation to the Navy. The Navy has been represented largely in Newport for so many years that the average Newporter has become quite used to its presence here, and to take it as a matter of course. I hope it will always stay here, but I am not sure that it will. There have been some attempts to take the Navy away from Newport, and these have not been so hopeless as one would imagine.

"Newport is not what it should be morally, and has become worse of late. Even if it is said by some that other places are no better, still Newport should be made better than others, for there are so many young men of the Navy here that they should be kept from temptation."

The Rev. Stanley C. Hughes, another speaker, after asserting that reforms were necessary as much for the people of Newport as for the benefit of men of the Navy, read an affidavit of a detective who, in investigating conditions last Summer, estimated that there were 147 places in Newport selling liquor illegally and 158 gambling places.

Captain Welles spoke on aims of the work of the Training Station, and then said: What has Newport done for the sailor? Newport has not stopped the illicit selling of liquor. Under tavern licenses at certain hotels, bars are open on Sundays, and the men can get bottles of whiskey, to drink up some alley. This is easy enough to prove. There are licensed saloons supposed to close at certain hours and on Sundays. Some do. But the other don't, and long after hours liquors are obtainable. Gambling is well known in Newport. The selling of liquor causes more trouble among the apprentice seamen than any other thing in Newport."

A resolution asking for reorganization of the city's Police Department was adopted at the close of the speaking.

TO BAR SCHOOL FROM DRIVE.

House Owner Seeks Injunction Under Covenant Made in 1897.

An effort to compel the observance of a covenant made in 1897 protecting a section of Riverside Drive from the encroachment of business is before the Supreme Court in an application for an injunction restraining the Hamilton School, an institution for girls, from continuing in possession of the premises at the southeast corner of Ninetieth Street and Riverside Drive. The plaintiffs are William H. Barnard and his wife, who live on the northeast corner of Eighty-ninth Street and Riverside Drive.

The defendants are Francis B. Swayne, trustee under the will of Mary Llewellyn Parsons, who owned the property complained of, and Mrs. Florence B. de G. Shaw, head of the school. The plaintiffs allege that the restrictive covenant was to run from 1897 for a period of thirty-five years, and that it provided that no buildings should be erected or used on the block bounded by Eighty-ninth and Ninetieth Streets and Riverside Drive and West End Avenue except private dwellings intended for only one family. This restriction was made by Mrs. Julia M. Clark, who later married Bishop Potter, and who owned all of the property within the restricted portion.

LASHES ATLANTA CHURCHES

Jews the Most Christian People There, Dean Atkinson Asserts.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 17.—In his farewell sermon at St. Philip's Episcopal Cathedral this morning Dean John R. Atkinson, who has resigned to return to New York after a stay here of a year, sharply criticised the churches of Atlanta. He urged the church members to bring bigger men to the pulpits, to outgrow village ideas, and to go out into the streets and reach men who do not come to the churches.

"The policy of bringing ministers from small towns to city churches is a mistake," said Dean Atkinson. "They bring their village ideas and try to reproduce them in a large city. It has failed. It will fail.

"We have 252 churches in Atlanta and consequently an absence of large and powerful churches. I cannot see that the Atlanta churches have any effect on Atlanta's daily life. The preachers talk a great deal on politics and civic affairs, but much of their energy seems misdirected. As for the city at large, let me say this: The most Christian people I have found in Atlanta are the Jews. They have more true charity."

SHIP 60,000 BOXES OF FRUIT.

Exporters Say Apples Bring 10 Cents Apiece in South America.

The Lamport & Holt steamer Vestris, which sailed yesterday morning for Buenos Aires, via Brazil ports, carried 2,000 tons of apples and pears from the Northwestern States, the largest shipment of fruit ever made to South America.

There were 45,000 boxes of apples and 15,000 boxes of pears, about 110 in each box. They sell for 10 cents each at retail in Rio Janeiro and Buenos Aires, the exporters say. The fruit was stowed in the refrigerating chambers, where the beef from the Argentine is put on the voyage to New York.

GARY PLAN VICIOUS, DR. W. M. HESS SAYS

Thinks Wirt System Would Rob New York Schools of Religious Freedom.

CREEDS SHOULDN'T MOLEST

Attacks Roman Catholics for Condemnation of American Public Education.

The Rev. Dr. William Milton Hess, pastor of the Trinity Congregational Church and former Recorder of Yale, told his congregation yesterday that the effect of the Gary plan, if adopted in the New York City school system, would be to endanger the religious freedom of the public schools.

"Even though the Gary plan may say that 'it has nothing to do with religious instruction itself,'" he said, "it has this much to do with it—that it makes religious instruction possible by an outsider during school hours. At Public School 45 the children are out one and one-half or two hours for lunch, religious instruction, &c. They should be out of school a long enough time for lunch only, and they should be in school the remainder of the time, as under our present plan.

"Religious instruction by an outsider should come after school hours, as is possible at the present time. Of course, it is hard to get children to go to a church after school hours, after a 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. session. They feel, and rightly so, that they want and should have play and recreation after school. The public school is called America's 'melting-pot.' It has been doing great work in this respect. Any divisive influence, like creed or theology, must be kept out. The priest, rector, minister, or rabbi has no right as such in the public school system, and the public school schedule should, moreover, make it impossible for any religious instruction outside to get hold of the children during the school day. The divisive influence of religion, as taught by outsiders, will surely militate against the success of the 'melting-pot.' Credal differences should not be developed during the grade school age, and they certainly will be if the Gary plan is adopted without modification.

"The taking of children of a tender age and filling their minds with superstitions and traditionalism is an abomination. This only makes them the slaves of the past. They should be taught to think for themselves in religious matters as they get older. It is a step backward to allow the minds of children in the public schools to be poisoned with theological theories that have worked such havoc in the history of the past.

"It is needless to say that I do not agree with those who denounce the public schools as 'Godless,' because they have no specific religious instruction in their curriculum. We refuse to believe that 'the public schools have produced nothing but a Godless generation of thieves and blackguards,' as one Roman Catholic authority has said. It may be just as well right at this point to quote a few more Roman Catholic authorities. They have surely made their statements in order to have them quoted. They are not ashamed of them, nor have they retracted any of them. Why then, should we hesitate to quote them?

"The Chicago Tablet, a Roman Catholic paper, said: 'The public schools of the country are sinks of moral pollution and nurseries of hell.'

"Cardinal Gibbons has described the public school system 'has an imperfect and vicious system of education which undermines the religion of youth.'

"Father Walker said: 'I would as soon administer sacrament to a dog as to (Roman) Catholics who send their children to the public schools.'

"Pope Pius IX. said: 'Education outside the (Roman) Catholic Church is a damnable heresy.'

"The Catholic World has said: 'Education must be controlled by (Roman) Catholic authorities, even to war and bloodshed.'

"The Catholic Telegraph said: 'It will be a glorious day in this country when, under the laws, the public school system will be shivered to pieces.'

"Father Phelan, of the Western Watchman, a Roman Catholic paper of St. Louis, Mo., said: 'I frankly confess that the (Roman) Catholics stand before the country as the enemies of the public schools.'"

Doctor Hess applied the term "hyphenated Americans" to opponents of the public school system, and continued:

"Beware the enemies of the public school system. The Gary plan gives them a chance to put in an entering wedge. Long live the public school system, we say. It is the very foundation of our free government. Woe to the day when America yields her 'little red school house'!

"The free church and the free school are the institutions that have made us such a great nation. It is not our Constitution but our institutions that have made America great. Mexico and other republics to the south of us have copied our Constitution but not our institutions. Poor, bleeding Mexico is now seeking to copy our institutions. The free church and the free school and the absolute divorce of Church and State are at the bottom of our liberties.

"But I grant that the public school system has a fundamental weakness. I say this as freely as any Roman Catholic critic. The weakness of the public school system is the lack of fundamental moral training. Every public school in the land should have as one of its teachers a teacher of ethics and give a training that is moral—and religious, truly religious—that is entirely and absolutely non-sectarian. A priest or a minister or a rabbi is not needed for this purpose."

JEWS TO PLAN CONGRESS.

Representatives of Organizations Will Confer on Nov. 21.

The Jewish Congress Organization Committee, meeting yesterday in the Broadway Central Hotel, decided to hold on Nov. 21 a preliminary conference of representatives from Jewish organizations to decide on methods of election and other technical details of convening the congress, which is to deal with the whole of the Jewish problem, with especial reference to the situation in Europe created by the war.

The executive Secretary, Bernard G. Richards, reported that twenty-three national and central organizations, having a membership of 914,849, had indorsed the congress idea. Other figures showed that individual organizations in ninety-five cities had adopted resolutions favoring the movement. The total number of individual societies and institutions and branches of larger bodies which have identified themselves with the congress movement is 900. In forty-four cities local committees have been organized.

Among the officers and honorary officers of the New York committee are Gedaliah Bublick, Dr. I. J. Bluestone, Louis D. Brandeis, Judge Leon Sanders, Joseph Batrondess, Jacob Carlinger, Dr. Stephen S. Wise, N. Taylor Phillips, Abraham S. Schomer, Dr. S. R. Shults, Justice Aaron J. Levy, Max Silverstein, Dr. M. Girsdansky, Albert Lucas, Dr. Julius Weiss, Louis Lipsky, and Rabbi M. Berlin.

BERLIN NOW WANTS VERSATILE 'COUNT'

Louden, Trailed in America as Spy Suspect, Said to be German Fugitive.

WAS 'COUNT DE PASSY' THEN

Will Be Arraigned Today in General Sessions on Charge of Bigamy.

Through the Marriage License Bureau here, where "Count" Max Lynar Louden, who will be arraigned before Judge Crain in General Sessions this morning on the charge of bigamy, got his license to marry Laila Florence Allendorf on Aug. 29, 1911, there has been traced a connection which, it is believed, establishes the identity of the alleged Count, already known as Count Rocher M. zu Lynar and Max Louden, accused of three marriages and suspected of being a German spy, with a man calling himself "Albert Marcel Count de Passy," "Jean Marcel Peyrgne," "Max Schiemangk," and "Max de Chimang," who is said to have a notable criminal record in Germany and to have posed as an officer in the French, German, and American armies. It is understood that when he last left Germany there was a $2,500 reward for him, and that the German authorities are interested in the course of the Louden case.

When Louden was arrested at 124 Convent Avenue early Thursday morning, he was living with a woman who, it was said, had married him in August, 1911, and whose maiden name had been Laila Florence Jansen. The name given in the marriage license was "Laila Florence Allendorf," and the "Count" at that time called himself "Count Albert Marcel de Passy." They were married at the City Hall by Alderman James Smith, and said that they were both residents of the Herald Square Hotel. The managers and clerks of the hotel, however, did not know them.

Only two weeks before this a person who called himself "M. Count de Passy-Chimang" escaped from a jail at Hallbronn, in Würtemberg, where he had been locked up on the charge of occupying a nearby castle without any authority. He represented himself at this time as a General in the French army. He was locked in a cell in an upper story of the Hallbronn jail and his feet chained to those of another prisoner, but some of his friends climbed up by a rope, sawed through the bars of a window, filed the fetters on his feet and got the "Count" away in his pajamas.

In 1909 "Count Jean Marcel Peyrgne de Passy," living at that time at the Hotel Wellington, announced through a New York lawyer that he was looking for an American wife with various amiable qualities and not less than $750,000. This was to restore the family property which had been dissipated by his father, the late Count. But he didn't get the wife.

This apparently was the first appearance of the "Count de Passy" on this side of the water. But in Berlin he had appeared in 1899 as a Major, or now and then a Colonel, in the American Army. The man who had left Germany in 1890 as "Max Schiemangk" under a cloud then returned to his native country, and told tales of his brilliant record with the American Army in the Philippines, where he had become a field officer, and had performed so brilliantly that he had been adopted by the American General, "Count de Passy." In Berlin the "Count" behaved much as his alleged reincarnation. "Count" Max Lynar Louden, is said to have behaved in this country. He became engaged to several women, was arrested on a charge of fraud, and is said to have served a term of three years in a German prison. He also represented himself, it is said, as having been commissioned to buy arms and ammunition for the United States Government, and was for a time under surveillance on the charge of espionage.

According to the German records "Max Schiemangk" was born in 1869 at Staupitz and studied at a military school, where he got the knowledge which enabled him to pose in any country he visited as an officer in the army of the country he had just left. He was dismissed from this school and then came to the United States. Shortly after that there appeared in Poughkeepsie one "Max de Chimang," who took a prominent part in German affairs, organized a Schuetzbund, and was made the subject of considerable criticism in connection with the handling of the funds of a ball given by the organization. This "de Chimang" did not represent himself as a General, but belonged to the militia and even served as a special policeman on boat race days. He married Miss Minnie Wendt in 1893, but later left her, and she had the marriage annulled and married Fred Arnold. In the line-up at the Tombs on Saturday Mrs. Arnold picked out "Count" Lynar Louden as "Max de Chimang."

When a German-American volunteer regiment was being organized in New York in 1898 there appeared a warlike person, "Max Schiemangk," who came to muster of the would-be volunteers in the uniform of a German Captain, waving a naked sword. Police Captain Price was present and wanted to arrest him, but he got away with a rebuke from General Butterfield.

GO TO SEE THE DODO.

Ancient Mariners' Acquaintance Restored at New York Museum.

One may stand face to face with an extinct dodo by going to the American Museum of Natural History. Mr. Walter Winans of Surrenden Park, England, has presented to the institution a restoration of the gigantic pigeon of which the old mariners centuries ago used to tell. The skull and legs of the restoration presented by Mr. Winans are cast from an actual specimen and the feathers, French gray and white, are of the same color as those in which the dodo was seen in his prime.

Although the dodo has been extinct for several centuries there is abundant evidence to show that it was not fabulous. The Dutch and Portuguese navigators have made pictures of the bird and its hue and markings are on record in a painting by Roelandt Savary.

The dodo was found about 1597 on the island of Mauritius and was afterward seen there by the Dutch at the end of the sixteenth century and into the seventeenth. The last authentic record shows that the bird was living in 1681. There is nothing to indicate that they existed anywhere else except on the island.

Interest in the creatures was revived in 1865 and again in 1889, when many bones of the bird were found in a marsh at Mauritius. J. Carson Brevoort of this city presented to the museum some of these bones, which he had received from Colonel Richard Pike, American Consul at Mauritius. These bones, together with others received from the University of Cambridge, England, form the almost complete articulated skeleton owned by the museum. The clumsy feet, the hooked bill, the feathers of the body, the short blunt wings, the rudimentary tail, and the globular body, are all shown in detail.

APPEAL TO GOV. WHITMAN.

Playground Secretary Wants a Franchise Tested.

H. P. Schneider, Secretary of the West Side Children's Playground and Recreation Conference, sent a telegram to Governor Whitman yesterday, asking him to request the Public Service Commission to defer their decision on the application of the Union Railway Company to run their cars over the Willis Avenue Bridge. Mr. Schneider, in a letter following the telegram, said the proposed franchise granted the use of the Willis Avenue Bridge without requiring transfers to and from all the lines of the Third Avenue Railroad, but only to the short spur through 125th Street.

Mr. Schneider and Sigmund Feust of the Southern Bronx Property Owners' Association, spoke against the franchise at a meeting of the Commission last Thursday. Mr. Schneider said this association is prepared to send a man to Albany to lay the whole matter before the Governor.

The Fourth American Industry

The Harriman National Bank is not anticipating early arrival of the automobile millennium when everybody shall have a machine, but if progress toward it continues at the current rate the automobile will at no distant date be as common as the telephone and regarded as equally indispensable.

According to the census, there are 20,000,000 families in the United States; possibly more accurate are the automobile statistics, giving 665,826 passenger cars as the output for the year ending June 30th, 1915, an increase of 36% over the year previous, with a sales value of $450,941,000, and making the number of automobiles operated in the United States over 2,000,000—one to every fifty persons, a far larger per capita than of many daily necessities. The automobile ranks fourth in American industry.

Well established companies have demonstrated the wisdom of the price reduction predicted by the Harriman National Bank, obtaining through volume increased and more stable earning power. For 1916 trade authorities look for a 20% to 35% increase, or, a little short of 1,000,000 cars, with a sales value of nearly $700,000,000.

The Harriman National Bank will be very glad to hear from automobile and accessory men as to local conditions, but while willing to serve them in a banking capacity it cannot alleviate the present famine in raw materials.

Gasologue No. 6

"You've got a horse, too, haven't you?"
"Yes."
"Do you feed him oats one day, and wire nails the next?"
"Of course not. My horse gets a balanced ration of corn, oats and hay—a steady diet day in and day out."
"He's lucky."
"What do you mean?"
"Your car doesn't get anything like as good treatment. A horse's stomach isn't half so sensitive as the carburetor of an automobile engine, yet you expect your car to chew up anything in the way of fuel that the garage man hands out—and convert it into mileage."
"But I thought all gasoline was alike."
"Not by a long shot. A good many people think so, I know. That's what makes carburetor adjustments, carbonized cylinders, and trouble generally."
"But how am I to tell when I'm getting good fuel? Look for a pure food label on the can?"
"No, look for the SOCONY sign on the garage or supply station. Ask for SOCONY Motor Gasoline and you're sure not only of good gasoline, but the same gasoline, whenever and wherever you buy it."
"Remember that SOCONY is the only name by which the Gasoline of the Standard Oil Company of New York is sold."

One Every 96 Minutes

(From The Evening World)

The New Haven Railroad has just issued a bulletin entitled "A Deadly Peril." It deserves wide reading.

Posted in and about stations and trainyards, this bulletin calls attention to the fact that last year in the United States 5,471 persons were killed while walking on railroad tracks. This was at a rate of fifteen a day, or one every ninety-six minutes.

Here is a peril for which the only remedy is prevention in the form of individual caution and common sense. No one can save a man from the danger of walking on a railroad track so effectively as the man himself. If he neglects prevention, nobody else can supply a cure.

Loss of life from this cause—last year's total is greater than the population of many a town—is mainly due to willingness to "take a chance." The temptation to get to the shop in quicker time in the morning, to gain a minute or two at the noon hour, or to save a walk of half a block by a short cut over the tracks is too strong for thousands every day.

If people can ever be made to see the disproportion between what they gained and what they risk in walking on railroad tracks, casualty lists for this class of accident will be among the shortest.

REDFIELD ATTACKS THE PACIFIC MAIL

Letter Criticising Company for Selling Its Ships Made Public by Secretary McAdoo.

SUSPECTS SORDID MOTIVE

Not Fear of New Seamen's Law, but $1,000,000 Profit Given as the Reason—Kruttschnitt Replies.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, who last week, in a speech at Indianapolis, bitterly attacked the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for going out of business, today made public a letter from William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce, asserting that the Pacific Mail Company gave up its trans-Pacific line, not because of the enactment of the new seamen's law, but because it was enabled to sell its vessels at a profit. Mr. Redfield takes the steamship line to task for not giving the new law a fair trial. The letter follows:

Secretary Redfield's Letter.

October 7, 1915.

Dear Mr. Secretary:

The sale of some of its ships by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has been made the basis of such statements both by that company and in the press generally that it may be well to place before you such facts as are at this time readily available.

It has been alleged that the seamen's law forced the company out of business and in particular that the so-called language clause would require the abandonment of Asiatic crews and the substitution for them of English-speaking crews, with a consequent prohibitive cost of wage and food, and that, since, therefore, the company could not operate profitably, it had in fact been obliged to sell its vessels and withdraw from business. Its attitude may be compressed into the statement made to me by Mr. R. P. Schwerin, Vice President and General Manager, who said: "I know when I am licked."

It should be said, however, that the Department of Commerce is charged with the duty of making the regulations required by the seamen's law and with enforcing the law through those regulations. These regulations had not been prepared at the time when the company's action was taken. The company did not ask the Department anything respecting the nature or tenor of the regulations and did not, so far as the Department knows, seek in any way to learn the spirit in which the law would be administered. It acted, so far as the Department knows, upon an assumed interpretation of the law, which had no official sanction.

It seems, I confess, an extraordinary thing that a company which at the time of its withdrawal was doing a business which was probably more prosperous than ever in its history, should have withdrawn from that business and made the sacrifice this would seem to imply, because of the alleged future effects of a law, concerning which law it asked no questions whatever of the department charged with interpreting and enforcing that law.

It seemed to me so astonishing that a great business should be thus sacrificed, (if this indeed were the case,) without the least inquiry upon the subject from the sole available certain source of information that I took occasion, before the matter was concluded, to inform Mr. R. P. Schwerin personally that while the department had not then reached a conclusion as to how the language clause would be constructed, it was its opinion, so far as the matter had then gone, that this clause would not bear the construction that the company had put upon it, and that in this respect, as in at least one other element of the statements published on behalf of the company, there was, to say the least, a strong probability that the alleged basis of their proposed action was not a basis which existed in fact.

Urged a Six Months' Trial.

I further pointed out to Mr. Schwerin at this same time, which was somewhat prior to July 15, that if the company desired to avoid the alleged sacrifices of its business and wished to secure consideration of a change in the law, its position before Congress and the country would be much stronger if it, in good faith, complied with the law for a period of not less than six months after learning how the department construed the law, and would then come before Congress with the actual results of such experience. I suggested that a congressional committee could hardly fail to give thoughtful heed to actual demonstrated facts presented by a company which had in good faith and with carefully ascertained knowledge striven to comply with the law in letter and spirit.

It was suggested, on the other hand, that for the company to throw up its hands in advance without so much as asking what the law meant from those who alone could tell it, and to withdraw without giving the matter a trial, would not commend itself to public opinion as an argument against the law, which the company refused to try. I was at that time informed that the company was negotiating for the sale of its ships, which sale, as you know, was later concluded as regards five of them.

I now ask your attention to Department Circular No. 65, dated Sept. 15, 1915, which construes the language clause as I told Mr. Schwerin more than two months earlier it would, in my judgment, be construed. The final clauses of this circular are the department's answer to certain fears expressed by Mr. Schwerin that the law would be so administered as to be a means of oppression, apart from its actual tenor.

In view of the construction of the language clause of the law, certain other suggestions made to Mr. Schwerin become pertinent. The dining room stewards, stateroom stewards, bath and deck stewards on the Pacific Mail ships were Chinese, comprising a large percentage of the total crew. A passenger, however, on those ships did not need to speak Chinese to order his dinner, to have his berth made up, to take his bath, or to transfer his steamer chair about the deck. Hundreds of passengers speaking no Chinese have for years had these operations carried on without difficulty. The reason, of course, was that this large percentage of the vessel's complement understood English sufficiently well for all these varied purposes.

It was suggested to Mr. Schwerin that if a former thought on the part of the company to alter the vessels from coal burners to oil burners were carried out, a very large reduction would take place in the fireroom and bunker force. This he admitted, saying, if I recall correctly, such reduction would be from about eighty or ninety persons, differing in different ships, to perhaps eighteen. I am not so much concerned with the exact figures, which I am not sure of recalling correctly, as with the fact that there was a very large reduction of the fireroom and bunker force possible by this means. Mr. Schwerin, however, urged that the reduced force would cost more than the larger one because it would be composed under the law of Americans, drawing larger pay. To this it was suggested that I knew nothing in the law which required Americans in this force.

English-Speaking Chinese.

With a very large proportion of the crew, therefore, already speaking a good deal of English, and with the fire room and bunker force largely reduced, there would remain but a comparatively small proportion, namely, the deck force, with which to deal. As to this I suggested that it might either be possible to instruct that force or that English-speaking Chinese sailors could be engaged, for example, in an English port like Hongkong. Mr. Schwerin then showed me a primer or small printed book intended for teaching English to Chinese crews. I am advised that they have at times, if not regularly, employed instructors for that purpose. I am further and recently advised that it is possible through well-known sources to procure English-speaking Chinese crews.

I am unable, therefore, to see, in view of this official interpretation of the act, how it can longer be urged that the language clause can have been the cause of the company's withdrawal.

The suggestion made to me that, while the department's construction might be fair, it would be unable to enforce it I need not discuss.

We may now consider whether there may have been any other motive on the part of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for withdrawing from business. It was heavily overcapitalized, its balance sheet for ten years past showing a deficit in profit and loss account never so small as $10,000,000, and on April 30, 1915, slightly in excess of $11,000,000. The income account shows that, after making off depreciation, there was a small but decreasing surplus in the two fiscal years prior to April 30, 1907, and thereafter a deficit for the five years ended April 30, 1912. This deficit, however, decreased in each of these five successive years, and in the fiscal year ended April 30, 1913, became a surplus of $20,482. This grew the following year to a surplus of $300,383, and for the fiscal year endec April 30, 1915, there was a surplus of $478,804. This is rather more than 2 per cent. upon the company's capital stock, and more than 4 per cent. upon the actual cash value of the company's investments.

In the year 1897 the company paid 2 per cent. dividends; in 1898, 2½ per cent.; in 1899, 3 per cent.; none since. It may be said that widely known that the business of the company since April 30, 1915, substantially up to date has been very prosperous. The department has been advised of thousands of tons of freight left over at the ports from which the company's vessels sailed beyond its immediate capacity to carry. It was from this prosperous business the company withdrew without asking any questions.

Turning now to The New York Journal of Commerce for August 30, 1915, there appears a statement based upon the petition asking permission for the receiver of The International Mercantile Marine Company to purchase five ships from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in which some interesting facts appear. That statement says the Manchuria and Mongolia, each eleven years old, were each built at a cost of $2,500,000. It appears from the income account of the Pacific Mail Company that depreciation had been charged off upon its property. If we assume that but 5 per cent. annually was charged off from the cost of each of these vessels their value would have been reduced in the eleven years by 55 per cent. If, however, following the practice of some of the best-known steamship companies, 6 per cent. per annum had been charged off, then in eleven years the value would have been reduced by 66 per cent. In the former case the present value of each ship would be $1,170,000. In the latter case it would be $866,667. The vessels sold for $1,500,000.

The Korea and the Siberia are said in a report of the company to have cost together $3,979,114.20. The Korea is thirteen years old, the Siberia is twelve and a half years old. Assuming both as twelve and a half years old, their present valuation, taken together on the basis of 5 per cent. annual depreciation charged, would be 37½ per cent. of the above joint cost, or say $1,492,172. If the 6 per cent. annual depreciation charge were used their present joint valuation would be 25 per cent. of their joint cost, or $994,778. They sold for $2,000,000.

The China is twenty-six years old, cost $800,000, and would upon the basis of 5 per cent. depreciation charged have been entirely marked off six years ago. She sold for $250,000.

Profit of Over $1,000,000.

Without drawing figures too finely in the absence of an examination of the company's books, here is an apparent profit in excess of a million dollars over what the normal valuation of the ships would have been if the custom had been practiced of reducing their value by 5 per cent. annually. If they followed the more conservative course in their accounting the profit would have been correspondingly enhanced.

It would appear to be possible that the company after doing business for 16 years without a dividend found that existing conditions gave them an opportunity of selling out a portion of their property at a price which would return them the full valuation of that property upon the company's books, plus at least $1,000,000 more, and that a very natural desire with such a record behind them to achieve this desirable result may in some measure at least have prompted the transaction. Certainly it is a singular thing that the company's stock, which on March 17 last, at the close of the best fiscal year the company has had for ten years, sold at 18, should on Aug. 3, 1915, long months after the seamen's law had been enacted, and after the company's negotiations for selling its vessels were well forward, have sold for 38. In other words, a company which by an adverse law is forced out of a valuable business finds that its stock is more than doubled in value as a result of that transaction.

On Oct. 4, 1915, the stock of the company sold as high as 38, despite the fact of its being forced out of a good and growing trade as it alleges. Under the circumstances the stockholders of the company whose property has thus substantially doubled in value since the seamen's law passed must regard that law with mingled feelings when told it is the source of their woes.

Finally, I hand you copy of The Journal of Commerce of San Francisco, dated Sept. 27, 1915, and another dated Sept. 29, 1915, from which it would appear that others are eager to pick up the mantle which the Pacific Mail has set aside. I am even inclined to think it may be found that vessels under the American flag will continue to transport the products of American manufacturers to the lands of the Orient.

With kindest regards, I am yours very truly,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Secretary.

Hon. William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury.

CALLED STUPID AND ABSURD.

Kruttschnitt on Secretary Redfield's Letter—P. A. S. Franklin's Views.

R. P. Schwerin, Vice President of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, who is mentioned in Secretary Redfield's letter on the sale of the Pacific Mail ships, is in California. Julius Kruttschnitt, President of the line, characterized the letter as an attempt to shift the burden of responsibility from the makers of the La Follette law to the victims. The letter, he thought, was both "stupid and absurd."

"This company," said Mr. Kruttschnitt, "has withdrawn from the Pacific service because it could not do business under conditions imposed by the new seamen's law. In his letter Secretary Redfield gives us a nice percentage of profit. He might have been more gerous, having no apparent authority for the figures he selected, he might have made it larger.

"There is the charge that we sold our steamships at a profit. What fools we would have been so sell at a loss! We made only a fairly satisfactory sale. We had hoped, considering the exigencies of the transatlantic traffic, that the ships would bring better prices. It must be remembered that the same conditions that made it possible to sell the vessels at a profit would have made the Pacific Mail unwilling to sell but for the intolerable provisions of the seamen's law.

"The Secretary takes us to task for not giving the new law a trial. If this company knew there would be a loss of from $800,000 to $700,000 a year operating under the new law, how, in justice to its stockholders, could it incur half that loss to give the law a trial?

"The inevitable consequences of enacting the Seamen's bill have been vainly pointed out by our officers to Congressional Committees at numerous hearings in the eleven years that have elapsed since the date of its first introduction in 1904 and finally as a last resort to the President himself in July, 1914. We repeatedly gave fair notice that we would withdraw if the law were passed.

"The most objectionable feature of the law is the language clause. It was clearly indicated that this law would discourage the growth of the American merchant marine, would impose such burdens on American ships as would make competition for trans-Pacific traffic impossible, would banish the American flag from the Pacific, and would bring about Japan's dream of commercial supremacy on that ocean. When Mr. Redfield points out that business was prosperous and the demand for ships shown by the freight awaiting transportation, a severe criticism is implied of a Congress which, after ample warning, created, and a President who approved the creation of conditions under which American trans-Pacific steamship lines are compelled by force of law to withdraw ships from service.

"Competition with the Japanese is now impossible. American ships must employ English-speaking crews at wages five time in excess of those paid Oriental seamen and with a relative increase in the cost of feeding and maintaining. Mr. Redfield says that English-speaking Chinese sailors could be engaged in Hong Kong. Could they? When Captain Dollar was in China months ago he investigated the possibility of obtaining such crews for the vessels of his own line. We asked him to make the ame inquiry on our behalf. He found he could not get enough English-speaking Orientals for his own vessels, let alone for ours.

"The whole thing comes down to this, no matter which way you view it: The Pacific Mail gave up its service because it could not operate under the new law. An irreparable injury has been done to American shipping."

Franklin's View of the Law.

P. A. S. Franklin, Vice President of the International Mercantile Marine Company, purchaser of the five steamships of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, said he did not care to discuss the letter written by Secretary Redfield. It was, he said, one that called for a discussion only by the officials interested. Mr. Franklin was willing, however, to repeat his views of the disadvantages of the Seamen's Act.

"The burdens of the Seamen's law," he said, "fall entirely upon the American flag, and simply increase the disadvantages under which steamers flying this flag are laboring in foreign trade and commerce in competition with steamers flying a foreign flag. It is most discouraging and difficult to operate any steamship line, or any other business, when you know that your competitor has a great advantage over you in the cost of operation. his is the position of the American flag in the foreign trade, and until this is removed the American flag put on a basis of equality with the foreign flag it is impossible to expect the American merchant marine to develop.

"It is impossible successfully to operate American steamers across the Pacific under the new law in competition with the Japanese, who have much lower costs of operation. The International Mercantile Marine Company is not in the transpacific traffic, and the Pacific Mail steamers will be brought around in this port, and entered in the transatlantic service. Here different conditions hold at the present time, and the company can, I believe, operate its newly acquired vessels to advantage under the American flag. If it is found that this cannot be done, or other conditions arise to make it expedient, they will be placed under the British flag."

CONDEMNS DANCING IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Father Curry Charges Immoral Persons Attend and Some Mocked Religion.

WANTS PARTIES STOPPED

T. W. Churchill Thinks Attack Based on Exaggerations—Tells of Close Supervision.

The charge that immoral practices are carried on at dances held in the evenings in the recreation rooms of the public schools was made last night by Father James B. Curry, rector of the Church of St. James of 28 Oliver Street, in a statement which he signed and sent to the press. Father Curry, who was the spiritual adviser of former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, and saw Becker put to death at Sing Sing last Summer, charges in his statement that the character of the dances in the public schools is very "tough," that they are attended by the "tough" element of both sexes, and that flagrant cases of immorality have been called to his attention.

At one of the dances, acording to Father Curry, a masquerade was given in which some of the persons present made a mockery of religion by assuming the costumen of rabbis and priests. At a recent dance, he says, a detective was obliged to drive two "young toughs" and two girls of bad reputation from the hall.

"About two years ago I complained against the evening dances held in the recreation centres of our public schools, for the reason that in one of our neighborhood schools there was held a masquerade in which two young men of the district distinguished themselves, the one in clerical garb, impersonating myself, the other, in like garb, impersonating either a minister or a rabbi," Father Curry states. "While it is true I have had no reason since to complain of these dances on the score of a mockery of religion, still sufficient information has reached me now and then to confirm my opinion that these affairs were not entirely correct.

"Within the last week I have been informed by some of the young men of this neighborhood, by a former director of a recreation centre, and by a detective that the character of these dances is what is called very 'tough' and that the dances are attended by some of the tough element of both sexes. The above detectives informed me today that on Friday night a couple of weeks ago he drove two young toughs and two girls from the dance at Public School 1. I have been informed on the same authority that young men of the neighborhood, some not of the best character, form themselves into what they call 'clubs' and that it is these young fellows who collect the dime admission fee charged, and, after having paid the musicians for their cheap music, these same young fellows 'divvy up' the net proceeds among themselves.

"As late as midnight I have seen young boys and girls misbehave on the public streets after these dances in my own neighborhood. I warned my people against these school dances, and it was because of this warning that the detective visited one of these dances, where he discovered and ejected the two toughs and the girls.

"Even at its best the public school night dance is too promiscuous an affair to be permitted in our community and ought to be eliminated from the activities of the Board of Education. Penny poppy shows may be amusing to the light-heads of our community, but surely decent citizens will demand that the health and the morals of our little ones must be conserved."

Thomas W. Churchill, President of the Board of Education, when told of Father Curry's attack, said that he remembered having received a complaint about the masquerade and that this had been investigated thoroughly, and as a consequence probably no masquerades would be held at the school dances. He said he thought the other charges that were made were based on greatly exaggerated information.

"As I remember the complaint that was sent to us concerning the masquerade," Mr. Churchill said, "was anonymous and complained that one of the dancers had disguised as a nun. We had a rigid investigation made, and the report of the whole affair is on file in the Board of Education office.

"As far as the other charges are concerned, the dances are all properly supervised. Wherever dances are held there are bound to be some complaints heard, but I can assure you that the dances held in the schools are kept decent. Purists, it is true, might contend that they are rather liberal, but I am sure that others would agree that they are well managed. At all events it is certain that the public school dances would have to be pretty bad to be half as bad as the performances that they have replaced, the cheap public dance-hall affairs of past years.

"Dances are held several times a week in some of the schools, and the thing that is surprising is not that Father Curry has complained of the manner in which they are conducted, but that there have been no more complaints. I can remember only one other complaint within the last two years, and that was on the ground that the young people made too much noise at one of the schools on their dance evenings.

"The dances are managed as well as it is possible to manage them, and the only step that could be taken to restrict them further would be to lock the doors of the schools and end the dances altogether."

Mr. Churchill said that Louis H. Pink, School Commissioner, of Brooklyn, was at the head of the committee in charge of the recreation centre work, and that the committee was assisted by the People's Institute in supervising the dances. Commissioner Pink was out of the city last night.

PRESIDENT A GOOD SINGER.

Miss Margaret Wilson Says He Has a Beautiful Tenor Voice.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, O., Oct. 17.—Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the President, disclosed to the world today her father's ability as a tenor singer. "He has a beautiful voice," she said. "It is really of fine quality, but he has not sung professionally, excepting in a male quartette at college."

Miss Wilson, who is to give a recital here on Tuesday, said she preferred the artistic career to that of the social one, and that her sole ambition in life was to sing.

"Society isn't a career," she said. "My earliest recollection is that music appealed to me intensely. When we were frightfully poor, my parents engaged a cultured German governess. We couldn't afford a piano, but she sat at an old organ and sang German lieder to us by the hour. I often think of it when I am singing. I wish I could create such absolute atmosphere for every song, as she did, as I looked and listened, amazed and delighted."

Mishaps Delay the Philadelphia.

The American liner Philadelphia, which arrived yesterday, was ten days coming from Liverpool, which is the longest voyage she has made since the beginning of her career in 1889. This was due to trouble with her boilers and to a hurricane about three days out, when she hove to for seven hours. The steamer will go to Erie Basin, Brooklyn, and undergo a thorough overhauling. The Philadelphia will not sail again from New York until Nov. 13. Her American crew will be paid off today.

POISON ENDANGERS MR. AUB

Lawyer Takes Overdose of Strychnine by Mistake.

Theodor Aub, 75 years old, a lawyer with offices at 31 Broad Street, took an overdose of strychnine last night at his home at 104 West Eighty-sixth Street, and was removed to Bellevue Hospital. The police said Mr. Aub took the poison by mistake, and his physician, Dr. Otto Maier, gave a similar version of the case.

According to Dr. Maier, Mr. Aub underwent an operation for appendicitis recently, and in his convalescence was accustomed to taking a small dose of strychnine as a stimulant. Yesterday afternoon Dr. Maier was seized with dizziness and hurriedly took some of the medicine. In a few moments he collapsed, but retained strength enough to call the doctor.

At first the aged lawyer seemed to respond to the treatment, but when he suffered a relapse, Dr. Maier called Patrolman Osman of the West Sixty-eight Street Station, who summoned Dr. Cluna of the Knickerbocker Hospital, and later the patient was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where it was said he was in a serious condition.

Mr. Aub was born in Baiseuth, Bavaria, in 1840. His father, Dr. Joseph Aub, was chief rabbi of Berlin, 1869-1892. Theodor Aub came to this country in 1866 and to New York two years later, where he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1871. Mr. Aub has written several works on legal subjects, and originated and devised the title warranty, mortgage insurance, block indexing, and locality searches.

ILLNESS COST $40,000,000.

County Health Boards Recommended to Save Money to State.

Inadequate provision for the care and prevention of sickness throughout the State is causing the people an annual loss estimated at $40,000,000, according to a report made public yesterday by the Committee on Hospitals of the New York State Charities Aid Association. The report is based on the results of an investigation of health conditions in Dutchess County for 1912 and four months of 1913. The county, with a population of 88,000, shows a loss by illness exceeding $400,000 to its inhabitants, or about $5 per capita, which it is said could have been largely reduced if the sick had received adequate care.

"Poverty was not the cause in 75 per cent. of the cases," says the committee. "It was chiefly the lack of proper facilities for providing needed services. We urge a State-wide movement to provide organized and adequate scientific care for the sick. The plan we suggest is the formation of county health associations to fill the gaps that now exist in the public health work in every community, to get the hospitals to cooperate more fully and to establish clinics where all may get the benefits of medical and surgical specialties not now available."

TEN ROWDIES ARE ARRESTED

All Go to Prison for 13 Months for Disturbing Sleep of Worker.

Following complaints made by residents of the west side that a gang of rowdies was creating disturbances in the streets during the early hours of the morning, ten young men were arraigned in the West Side Court yesterday and sentenced by Chief Magistrate McAdoo to a minimum term of thirteen months in the New York City Reformatory. The Magistrate, in sentencing the young men, said:

"I am going to enforce the law with a heavy hand. I shall show no mercy to any of your kind who come up before me. The people of the west side are working people, and your disturbing their slumbers at night works a hardship upon them."

Nine of the prisoners were arrested yesterday morning after a fight with the police in the Standard Hotel, at 439 West Forty-second Street, while creating a disturbance in the building.

CARRANZA'S GREAT BURDEN.

If CARRANZA is to be formally recognized by the United States Government today, or this week, and as the Government has been practically committed to that step, it may be well that there should be no further hesitation. A clear view of the administrative difficulties that will face his provisional Government and the financial and political problems which must be solved before the work of pacification is completed is most desirable. The situation was clearly explained, without prejudice, in a letter from the City of Mexico printed in THE SUNDAY TIMES, which was dated no later than Sept. 24. There has since been no important change in the situation except that every day increases the huge burden of the Mexican national debt. This now amounts to about $1,000,000,000 in gold, including the old funded debt of $250,000,000, indemnities to foreigners of $250,000,000, and outstanding currency amounting to $500,000,000 which must be retired. To repudiate the funded debt would be fatal to the new Government. It could not stand a month after such an act. To repudiate any of the currency, including that of the Villistas, much of which was issued while VILLA, as the head of the revolutionary armies, was winning the victories which established the Constitutionalists, would be disgraceful and would inevitably cause more trouble. In a decree dated Sept. 19, 1914, CARRANZA recognized the legality of this currency. As our correspondent says, it is difficult to see on what ethical or legal grounds the rights of its holders to full payment can have been forfeited simply because CARRANZA and VILLA have since quarreled.

Mexican finances were in a sound condition at the outbreak of MADERO'S rebellion in 1910. In the last five years of Mr. LIMANTOUR'S management of the Treasury the disbursements were from $10,000,000 to $30,000,000 less than the annual revenues. The country was never more prosperous. Yet its industrial history had just begun, and in its best years the trade balances were never quite sufficient to meet the nation's yearly liabilities abroad. Mexico, after four years of revolution, with business paralyzed, traffic suspended, mines flooded; with a denuded Treasury, and such a burden of financial responsibility to carry as DIAZ never dreamed of, must raise twice or three times the amount of revenue LIMANTOUR handled in the old era of prosperity. There is no doubt that the country could do this, and more, under wise direction.

Obviously, administrative ability, statesmanship of the highest order, is required to meet a situation so perilous, to conduct the affairs of the nation through a period of lean years, to encourage investors, to secure Government loans, and at the same time to institute a new and equitable system of taxation, to re-establish the civil and criminal courts on a sound basis that will insure justice to all, and to extend the common school system. What we know of CARRANZA does not justify any strong hope that he will be able to accomplish this gigantic task unaided, and his known political and military associates are not men of great promise. He has alienated all Mexicans who have won repute in public life. OBREGON, his foremost soldier, has made a sorry mess of civil administration. So far as can be seen at present, CARRANZA must begin the great task of pacification and reorganization alone.

He must keep up his army. Whether or not VILLA is to be further reckoned with, there will be continued trouble in the north. ZAPATA must be suppressed or reconciled. There are uprisings threatened in Chiapas, Campeachy, and Tabasco. The situation in Yucatan is not promising, and Oaxaca, that great State which has kept its skirts free from all the mire of revolution, has awakened to a new sense of its debt of gratitude to its most famous son, PORFIRIO DIAZ, since his death, and resents the habitual Carranzista abuse of his name. No statesman has ever been burdened with a more difficult task than that which will be placed on the shoulders of VENUSTIANO CARRANZA by the well-intentioned act of formal recognition. As the leader of a faction, with no national responsibility, he may impress amiable observers as a formidable figure. How will he appear as the acknowledged ruler of a nation which has been piling up obligations for nearly five years?

WHY SOME PROGRESSIVES OPPOSE THE NEW CONSTITUTION.

In spite of the remonstrances of Mr. WILLIAM H. HOTCHKISS, sometime Chairman of the Progressive State Executive Committee and one of the ablest and clearest-headed of New York Progressives, the Executive Committee of the organization in this county has voted unanimously to oppose the new Constitution. "The "tremendous power vested in the "Governor," says Mr. JAMES J. O'CONNELL, the County Chairman, "without a "check by way of the recall, would "make a South American republic "of the State. Whichever party got "into power first would remain until "a revolution." The very means intended to end irresponsible "Venezuelan" government would bring about autocracy tempered and terminable only by revolution.

It would be time lost to fight a shadow. Mr. O'CONNELL'S ingenuous remarks merely show the real and sole ground for the attacks of a squad of the radical Progressive remnant upon the new Constitution. They are grieved not by what's in it, but by what isn't in it. The only Constitution that will satisfy them is one made by themselves. The recall of public officers, the recall of judicial decisions, the initiative and referendum—without them a Constitution is "Tory" and "Bourbon," just as the Constitution of the United States was to the fervid Rooseveltians of 1912.

In a letter to The World Mr. BAINBRIDGE COLBY, once the Progressive candidate for Senator, stands on the same ground, though he veils and doesn't name any of the sacred palladiums of Progressive self-government. He doesn't see "how any "Progressive can be for the [new] "Constitution." For "representative "government is still on trial in this "country." There you are. Unnecessary to follow Mr. COLBY further. The majority of Americans are satisfied with representative government, hold that it has worked well for 126 years, is not "on trial," but thoroughly tested and approved. What Mr. COLBY wants, what the few Progressive irreconcilables want, is "direct government."

A NEW SHAKESPEARE THEORY.

Contemplation and discussion of the great public issues of the hour may be briefly suspended to give due consideration to a new theory about SHAKESPEARE, or, to speak more accurately, about Falstaff. This is nothing less than a denial of SHAKESPEARE'S authorship of "The Merry Wives of Windsor" because Falstaff, in that play, compounded so largely of the qualities of Italian comedy of intrigue, is but a poor imitation of the real Falstaff, the fellow roysterer with Prince Hal, the companion of Poins and Pistol, the honored guest of Justice Shallow. That the Falstaff of "The Merry Wives" is, indeed, a less vital personage than the cautious soldier and genial rascal of the two parts of "King Henry IV.," has long been admitted, and the commentators have been at pains to explain that the Fat Knight owes his appearance in boisterous comedy because Queen ELIZABETH desired to see him "in love," and commanded the dramatist so to portray him. This tale is "well found" but no such explanation of the comparative weakness of sequels is required.

It is remarkable, indeed, that the Falstaff of the first part of "Henry IV." should retain so much of his vitality and humor in the second part, but we must bear in mind that he does this chiefly in a literary sense. In spite of the scene with the Chief Justice and the confabs with Shallow and Silence, the Falstaff of the second part has never possessed great histrionic importance. In the era of Shakespearean acting the few great impersonators of Falstaff were popular chiefly in the First Part of the chronicle and in "The Merry Wives," which was always esteemed on the stage. PHELPS, one of the famous Falstaffs of the theatre, "doubled" the rôles of the King and Shallow in the second part of "Henry IV.," and gave the Fat Knight, in his last estate, over to a less renowned actor.

The new critic who has compelled a discussion of the probability of SHAKESPEARE'S authorship of "The Merry Wives" finds in that play no line of value excepting Falstaff's "I have a certain alacrity in sinking," but is not that enough, and is not the judgment captious? There are other merits in "The Merry Wives," though in these later years of trivial acting it has been such a bore on the stage. There are surely other lines and phrases of the true Shakespearean ring. There is a Justice Shallow, to be sure, who is even a feebler shadow of him who heard the chimes ring at midnight than the Falstaff is of the roystering soldier of Eastcheap and Gadshill, a Falstaff who is, indeed, not even honestly in love, though Queen ELIZABETH may have been satisfied with his imitation of passion. But could any other than SHAKESPEARE have given us delightful Sir Hugh Evans? Is there not an everlasting human touch in the Welsh parson beyond the reach of BEN JONSON or FLETCHER? And Mine Host! MIDDLETON, JONSON, and a few of the other Elizabethans may nearly reach such a conception, but the stamp of SHAKESPEARE, inimitable, unsurpassable, is upon him.

No, SHAKESPEARE wrote "The Merry Wives" and put the weaker but still admirable Falstaff in it, because there was a demand for more of Falstaff than the two history plays provided, and it was "good business" to supply the demand. The character did not quite hold up in the sequel, that is all. But the evidences of SHAKESPEARE'S authorship of the comedy are ample. Look at the series of Rollo books and the Elsie books! Is the principal character as fresh and interesting in the later ones as he or she is at first? Certainly not. It is one of the faults of misguided Shakespearean criticism that so much of it is founded on the idea that SHAKESPEARE was impeccable, without human weakness, incapable of the deficiencies which are freely acknowledged and condoned in all other authors.

IOWA'S FAVORITE SON.

In these Autumn days the Presidential bee buzzes cheerfully. Honey is being gathered for Senator ALBERT BAIRD CUMMINS, Iowa's Favorite Son. His own State is for him to the last Republican, with a few exceptions. Kansas, the political entomologists report, casts a friendly eye upon him. By the way, Senator WEEKS of Massachusetts was in Kansas Tuesday with his "boom." Wichita welcomed him "with a great ovation." Politicians crowded his train. "A very vigorous "effort is to be made to secure a part "of the delegation from Kansas to the "Republican National Convention for "Senator WEEKS." So the Wichita correspondent of The Topeka Capital. False, fleeting Kansas! Trust her not, Mr. CUMMINS; she's only fooling thee! Is she fooling Mr. WEEKS, too? He's "divided honors with CAPPER." Isn't Governor ARTHUR CAPPER to be a Favorite Son? But to return to the sponsor of the once famous "Iowa Idea." Hard work is being done for him in California. Is HIRAM JOHNSON off duty? In Nebraska Mr. CUMMINS is to have a chance, at least his friends hope so, under the Presidential preference law.

Mr. CUMMINS is an able, a progressive, and liberal Republican. He needs no primary victories, no delegates, to give him fame in the East. The fertility and subtle mind that, conjuring with certain innocent-faced live stock regulations, set on edge the temper of every railroad traveler with trunks "in this broad land," is as familiar to the East as to his West. "Not too progressive nor too reactionary, with a splendid record of public "service behind him, Mr."—we have mixed up the papers—it is not Mr. CUMMINS, but Mr. BURTON, one of the Ohio candidates, that Mr. JOHN R. MCLEAN'S Cincinnati Enquirer tells us "may be the very man for whom the Republican Party is looking." Meanwhile Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. BURTON, and dozens more of the not too progressive nor too reactionary class are looking for delegates.

GOVERNMENT SHIPPING AGAIN.

The arguments against the Administration Shipping bill a few months ago have become arguments in its favor. The explanation of the paradox is that the arguments have been proved sound. It was said that the entrance of the Government into competition with private shipping would discourage it, and that there would be a greater loss of private shipping than the Treasury could make good. That has been verified. The destructive influence of the Seamen's bill also is no longer matter of prophecy and theory. It is an established fact, despite valiant efforts of the administrators of the law to make it acceptable to those who must carry its burdens. Private shipping "going foreign" is almost exterminated. Therefore Government shipping is more necessary than when the Government Shipping bill was first introduced. Shortly Government shipping will be the only American shipping which can keep the seas. Thus the defects of the bill are its strength, for those who like that sort of reasoning. Those who would rather see the American flag floating over vessels earning a profit than over vessels supported by tax money may not like it. At present their only recourse is to oppose the arguments and the proposal which they dislike. It may be repugnant for them to oppose an Administration measure, but so long as Secretary MCADOO is allowed to stump the country for the measure there is no alternative except opposition or submission.

Secretary MCADOO'S latest presentation of his hobby fills a newspaper page, and contains nothing new except his attempt to attach his proposal to "preparedness." The subject of national defense is in other hands, and nobody except Mr. MCADOO has discovered any relation between it and Government shipping, in this country or any other. "Preparedness" cannot afford to be handicapped by schemes capable of perversion, at a certain loss both of money and defense capacity. There is nothing in our Government history, with its million dollars waste a day, in matters simpler than those constantly confronting "big business," to support any reasonable belief that it could manage the creation of half a million tons of shipping without staggering losses. Especially there is nothing in the history of the Secretary's administration, or that of his colleagues, to suggest that they are any exception to the general rule established by experience under all parties. This Administration has not corrected the methods of waste which it inherited. It has addressed sympathetic words to business, but its acts have shown that it does not understand business. This very proposal is a threat to business, made at a time when most unsuitable on business considerations. There is no suggestion that the proposed Government shipping can or should be proposed with any reference to current events. We could not possibly provide ourselves with Government owned and operated naval auxiliaries during the present war. If we were to attempt it we should do so at the time of greatest cost, when there is every prospect that after the war there will be inexhaustible supplies of shipping at bargain rates. The time is inopportune, although the Secretary thinks otherwise, because he can see nothing he does not wish to see.

The Secretary is entitled to argue as he pleases and to persuade whom he can. He is not entitled to bear false witness on hearsay testimony. He said, "I am told that the Seamen's "bill was not the mainspring for the "transfer of the Pacific Mail vessels" to a Japanese company. It was another law, he said, and the fact that the ships could be sold at a good price. If there was a profit in the sale, and private capital could not afford to supply freight capacity at a loss, "then "the Government should provide it and "take the loss for the general welfare." The argument is inconsistent with the pretense of the possibility of Government profit, and is apart from the "preparedness" argument. Besides, what the Secretary asserted on hearsay is contradicted on first-hand testimony. President KRUTTSCHNITT avers that during eleven years that the Seamen's bill was pending it was opposed with all the earnestness and publicity those whom it injured could command. As the crisis approached the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, which saw its Pacific trade vanishing, appealed in vain to the Secretary of Commerce. The head of the Pacific Mail wrote a formal letter to the President of the United States. "All these "remonstrances, warnings, and notices "were treated as a 'bluff,' and now "are regarded as never having been "made." Respecting the sale of the ships President KRUTTSCHNITT says: "The same reasons which increased the "value of the ships would have made "the Pacific Mail unwilling to part "with its vessels and abandon a busi-"ness which it had been engaged in "for years, if the intolerable restric-"tions of the La Follette bill had not "deprived it of any choice." Secretary REDFIELD, who today repeats Mr. MCADOO'S explanation of the sale, replied to the warning addressed to him that the company should try the law and see how much it might be ameliorated. But the company unappreciated such cold comfort in comparison with a favorable chance to sell, which nobody would guarantee to renew if the law proved to be what the company thought it, with better knowledge than either Secretary shows.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Better to Fight Than Hide.

By no means all of the Londoners are joining in the hysterical cry of some of them for reprisals in kind on the nation whose airships are periodically raiding the great city with results so much better calculated to arouse anger and hatred among the victims than to affect, at least directly, the outcome of the war. Wiser folk than they see that the deterrent effect of such revenges would probably be negligible with a foe equally resolute and ruthless, and they realize that instead of entering on a competition in the slaughter of helpless civilians in unfortified towns, thought and ingenuity should be devoted to finding means to keep the Zeppelins away altogether, if possible, and if that cannot be done, to reduce their efficiency after they arrive and to prevent them from getting home again.

One of the English aviation experts makes with respect to the second and third of these three problems the statement that the ordinary illumination of London at night should not be diminished, but should be increased by the addition to it of a large number of powerful searchlights. This proposal seems injudicious at first thought, but its merits appear the greater the longer it is considered.

It is only too obvious that the navigators of the Zeppelins are able to find the city in spite of all that has been done to veil it in darkness. They could also find it if a blaze of light marked its position, but everybody knows that they who look into such a light are blinded, while those who look from behind it can see clearly whatever it falls upon. Now the suggested system of searchlights not only would hide from observers looking down from above every detail of London's topography and make bomb-throwing even less defensible than it is at present by removing the last pretense of aiming at particular objects of a public and military character. It would also in effect change a night raid into a day raid, and that is something which the huge balloons, for many and good reasons, never venture to attempt.

Their only safety lies in invisibility, for they are almost as fragile as soap bubbles, and their size makes them easy marks when visible and in the long range of the guns used against them.

It Brings Law Into Disrespect.

No attempt is made by the counsel of the Sabbath Society to deny that in comparison with the performances given on the first day of the week in many of the New York theatres without any effective interference from the organization he represents, the little play which Mr. BISPHAM purposed to use as a vehicle for the offering of BEETHOVEN'S music would have been superior in all aesthetic ways, and less obnoxious even to those who desire to preserve the old rigid observance of the day. He could only say that as the Bispham enterprise was unquestionably theatrical, it could be stopped under the law, and was, while the purveyors of other stage amusements, much less meritorious from every point of view, had been sufficiently ingenious to avoid breaking the letter of a statute the spirit of which they cynically and persistently violated.

The trouble with this law, from one point of view, is what constitutes its merits from another—from that of the managers who want to conduct vaudeville shows every night in the week. Its prohibitions are numerous, but they are explicit, and everything not mentioned by name and definitely is permitted. That principle of legal interpretation and application is well established. It makes the Sabbath Society's position technically sound, and its one success as well as its many failures explicable. It will not, however, prevent a large part of the metropolitan population—a part including many more than those to whom Sunday is a day like another except for its larger leisure—from feeling that the suppression of Mr. BISPHAM'S play was something between an absurdity and an outrage.

The isolated enforcement of a law not supported by prevailing public sentiment—of a law the essential violations of which have been many, long continued and unpenalized—always constitutes a grievance and a wrong. Such isolated enforcements are not of the kind that justify the contention that the best way to get a bad law amended or repealed is firmly to apply its provisions. They only cause irritation and bring disrespect on the courts that are obliged to lend themselves to proceedings like this one.

Muzzles for Dogs Are Various.

Of the 3,846 dogs that were formally charged with biting people in this city last year, 480, or one in eight, were muzzled when they committed this serious indiscretion. In most of these cases, presumably, the muzzle worn was the one of which the potentially effective part is a strap encircling the dog's jaws and effective only when so tight as to be for an active representative of the species an abominable instrument of continuous torture.

The cheapness and simplicity of these muzzles are their only merits, though it is evident from the figures just given that many owners of dogs find in them another—the facility with which, while still technically meeting the requirements of the law, they can be so applied as not to trouble the wearer at all. When that is done they are quite useless as well as quite painless, and the dog can bite, and does, just as well or ill as ever, if he happens to be a dog with an inclination that way.

But there are muzzles which, without inflicting on dogs more than a temporary annoyance, will prevent them from using their teeth for purposes improper from other than the canine point of view. Most of these good muzzles are heavy, complicated and expensive contrivances, but a few are not, and one arrangement of leather and wire has been discovered, it seems, by the Dog Lovers' Protective Association, that costs no more than the murderous jaw-binder and nevertheless is both comfortable and effective. It is approved by the Board of Health and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and it or others with the same good qualities ought to be nominated in the muzzling ordinance.

That ordinance as it stands causes much suffering to almost no purpose, and it is little wonder that it is so often ignored.

WHERE PROHIBITION SAVES.

Taxes Are Shown to be in Inverse Ratio to Dryness.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a late issue of your paper there is a letter from Widden Guaham assailing the Anti-Saloon League and its purpose of ultimately securing State and nation-wide prohibition of the beverage liquor traffic, on the ground that it would mean nearly $20,000,000 loss of revenue and would make it necessary to raise a half of that large amount by new State taxes.

Mr. Guaham, in one paragraph, compliments the Anti-Saloon League as a "thoroughly organized movement supplied with an immense campaign fund, contributed by well-meaning but mistaken business men and capitalists," and says that "by reason of its connection with the churches and other moral forces it is able to exert a tremendous pressure on members of the Legislature."

If "W. G.," as he signs himself in a letter to another paper, wishes to look at the problem from an economic standpoint, I think we will be able to accommodate him to about any extent he may desire. Here are some figures from the United States Bureau of the Census report of municipal revenue expenses for 1913, just recently issued.

Taking the States that were prohibition States in 1913 and lumping them together in one class, grouping the States that had 50 per cent. or more of the population in dry territory in a second class of near-prohibition States, classifying as partly license States those which in 1913 had less than half, or a fourth or over, of their population living in dry territory, and classifying the balance of the States, those having less than 25 per cent. of the population in dry territory, as license States, we get the following interesting figures from this Government report:

There were eight States under entire prohibition in 1913. The average tax for all of the cities in these States was $10.12 per capita.

There were eighteen near-prohibition States. The average tax for all of the cities in all of these States was $11.06 per capita.

There were thirteen partly license States and the average tax for all of the cities of all of these States was $14.82 per capita.

There were nine license States and the average tax for all of the cities of all of these States was $16.98 per capita.

Mr. Guaham thinks "it is high time that the business interests of the State should take occasion to voice their opposition to the prohibition scheme," and that "one of the first things to be done is to show misguided business men who are contributing to the Anti-Saloon League funds the folly of working against their own best interests."

Business men are not fools, and they can get enough prohibition facts out of the daily papers to show them the utter economic fraud of the whole license system.

Profit and Loss of Prohibition.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a communication to THE TIMES Mr. Whidden Guaham says that the adoption of State-wide prohibition would mean the loss of nearly $20,000,000 in revenue, one-half of which goes to the State, and that this would have to be met by additional taxes. Possibly this is so, but the economic gain in this event will many times offset the amount to be paid by a tax. Practically the only business interests which will suffer from a law such as your correspondent fears are those which have lived off the men who can ill afford to support them. It seems as if a patriotic man ought to consider something besides the dollar mark when a question of reform is taken up.

Why Do We Proclaim Our Plans for Defense from the Housetops?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We boast of our Yankee ingenuity, our marvelous inventive ability, and our inborn smartness, and we all have a fond hope that, in spite of our unpreparedness for war, our resourcefulness would instantly show itself in case of an invasion by a foreign power, and that we would surely spring some great surprise, which would confound the enemy and throw him into confusion. But if our inventions along these lines are to be at once given to the world, and if every clever idea and epoch-making device "which will revolutionize warfare" is shouted from the housetops as soon as it is thought of, so that the nations of the earth can benefit by it quite as much as ourselves, how is this boasted originality going to help us?

A few days ago we were told of a brilliant scheme by which innumerable miniature submarines can be built in such quantities that they can destroy any hostile fleet of battleships. That certainly seems an excellent scheme, provided this mosquito fleet could be secretly formed and unexpectedly launched against the enemy's unsuspecting armada. But since this idea is joyously given to the world, together with diagrams and pictures, and full descriptions of these boats, of what use is it to us since now a fleet of similar ones can be transported here and launched against us by the enterprising enemy?

We could hardly expect perhaps to keep to ourselves Holland's submarine boat idea, or the Wrights' aeroplane, though it is somewhat humiliating to realize that the European countries have taken these American ideas and far outstripped us in the development of them. But since we are brought face to face with the full realization of the necessity of bringing our national inventive genius to bear on the grave problems of safeguarding our nation from hideous war, why should patriots like Mr. Edison explain how they are developing a process by which a submarine can extract its air from sea water—can breathe below the surface, so to speak—and Mr. Ford tell about the improved engine he is to make for these submarines, and another unfold a plan for steering air-craft by wireless? Every scientist who is working along these lines no sooner hits upon some happy idea than he must triumphantly and exultantly shout it abroad! Must we have the new Naval Advisory Board thus working out its plans in public? Shall every American invention thus be at the service of any possible foreign invader, and every American plan for defense be published?

How long would Germany have lasted in the present war if the rest of Europe knew of her mighty preparedness for conquest? It is for the very reason that she cherished her mighty secret to her bosom that she found her neighbors totally unprepared and steeped in a vast ignorance of her long matured designs. She has thus been able to put up against seemingly overwhelming odds the greatest fight in history.

Let our war councils then realize that our peculiar genius should be conserved for our own use, and let our inventors realize that a true patriotism demands that they shall hold the welfare of their country in higher esteem than the publicity they will win by advertising their ideas. A veil of secrecy should cover all serious inventive work now to be done for the safeguarding of our country and the building up of our defenses.

Teachers Explained.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Allow me to point out that, far from being "those who can't," teachers are in reality "those who can." I mean that they are invariably the best students in the colleges, and, having achieved success in scholastic work, they frequently follow it. The vast majority of those who take up other lines of work have been poor students and, having failed in their first work, they naturally take to something else. It is a far more difficult matter to enter the teaching profession than most others. Especially is this true in the high schools of New York City, where a man is subjected to several rigid examinations—written, oral, practical, and physical—before being licensed. The percentage of those who pass is, perhaps, an indication of their ability.

In the particular set of examinations which I took, 90 out of 556 applicants were licensed. The reason, perhaps, that teachers are despised is because the product of our labor is intangible. And yet the results achieved are more lasting and more important for the race than those of most, if not all, other professions.

What Men Decline.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The majority of girls and women in business, that is, stenographers, private secretaries, and office assistants, are not college graduates. The majority of them (the successful ones, at least) are simply normal, healthy, keen, and intelligent women. In nine cases out of ten, these self-respecting, self-supporting business women are hoping some time to become wives and mothers, and when the right man comes along it is not hard for him to persuade the stenographer or private secretary to devote her life to him and his interests, instead of to the corporation or business firm. In many cases the business woman (still young) has laid by enough money to fit out a new home. Then why is it, since they are not handicapped by the higher education, that thousands and thousands of these capable and companionable girls and women never receive any attention, to say nothing of proposals of marriage, from the men? It is strictly "up to the men."

The Case of a Widow.

The Brooklyn Bureau of Charities, 69 Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, appeals for help for the B. family, which is in urgent and genuine need. Since her husband was killed in an accident three years ago, Mrs. B. has been trying to support her seven children by washing, but as she is afflicted with heart trouble she has been obliged to give up all work except an occasional wash. The family has absolutely no resources. After long litigation the small damages awarded the woman for her husband's death were barely sufficient to pay the cost of the trial and Mr. B.'s funeral expenses.

The Bureau of Charities has taken hold of the case and reports that the family is an excellent one and should be kept together. The 14-year-old boy has just secured his working papers and is earning $3 a week. This, added to the $1.75 Mrs. B. earns by washing, only gives this family of eight an income of $4.75 a week. The bureau is trying to raise a fund of $100, which will pay for food and rent for the next five months. Large and small contributions are solicited, and should be mailed to the bureau marked "For 0239 T."

The bureau acknowledges with thanks the following contributions received from contributors who could not be reached by mail: Appeal 0236 and 0237 T., C. D., $5; 0235 H., in memory of M. A. W. THE KIND OF ARMENIANS A TURK KNOWS.

They Betray Their Rulers, Take Refuge in Christian Missions, and Have to be Dealt With as Dangerous Rebels.

BY ZIA MUFTY-ZADE BEY.

New York, Oct. 15, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The campaign led by a few interested persons trying to stir up American public opinion in regard to the so-called Armenian massacres has lately taken such proportions that I consider myself obliged to put forward a few considerations. I do this much to my regret, as, first of all, I am reluctant to expose to the eyes of foreigners the imperfections of some of our people, and, secondly, I am of the opinion that in public life, as well as in private life, everybody ought to mind only his own business.

Be that as it may, let me put one question to those using freely the term "Armenia," mentioned even in the official communiqués of the Red Cross Society and other institutions. Where is Armenia? If they intend by this term all the provinces and cities sheltering a number of Armenians, Armenia must then include not only all the territory comprised between India and Greece but also New York City, where a large number of Armenians are residing. But the trouble is that in none of these territories has the Armenian population a reasonable majority. Just as in New York there are represented many other nationalities, so in the above territories are also millions of Persians, Russians, Turks, Kurds, Arabs, Syrians, Bulgarians, &c.

If they mean by Armenia the territory contiguous to the Russian border, where the Armenian settlement is thicker, then this term ought also to include all the neighboring Russian provinces of the Caucasus, where said population is thickest. Of course, this is not to be thought of, as in such case a resurrection of Armenia would deprive of a few provinces the Russian "Little Father," whose purity, broad-mindedness, love of freedom and equal rights have allied Russia to the western powers, champions of small nationalities!

The truth of the thing is that there is no constituted Armenia, and the Armenians in Turkey are just Ottoman citizens, as they are Russian citizens in Russia or American citizens in the United States, and therefore are expected to abide by the laws governing these countries.

Let us now consider the national characteristics of the Armenians. It is fair to say that no matter where they are settled, be it in Turkey, in Asia, in Europe, or in America, they constitute an unrestful element whose dealings in business have largely contributed to give a reputation of unsoundness to all the Orientals. Thus, far from being the quiet and peaceful race they are depicted to be in order to aggravate the treatment they are receiving at the hands of the Turks, the majority of them are recognized to form an undesirable element by whomever comes in contact with them in any part of the world.

Before passing a definite judgment on the acts of the Ottoman Government in this sad occurrence, judgment which, to use Mr. Lansing's own words, "would greatly endanger the friendly feelings between the people of the two countries," I want the American public to remember the photographs published broadcast in some American and many European papers. One of the last issues of The Outlook is reproducing them anew. These pictures show "Armenian volunteers intrenched and firing on the Ottoman troops." I want the American public to consider what they would think if they saw "Armenian volunteers intrenched and firing on American troops," if part of the American Armenians chose this line of conduct in a time when America was at war with a foreign power.

The accounts, given out in the British Parliament and quoted as originating from Tiflis, a Russian City, as well as the accounts given by the Commission of Inquiries presided over by Lord Bryce, are, to say the least, grossly exaggerated. The unsoundness of accounts given by our enemies who are vitally interested in showing us under a bad light is so evident that there is no need to dwell any longer on it. The accuracy of the inquiries reported by Lord Bryce's Commission may well be put in doubt when one stops to think that said commission inquired on acts supposedly committed at a distance of several thousand miles inside the border of a country at war, and therefore in a place materially impossible to reach.

The only accounts that may give a base for consideration are those given by American missionaries who have lately come back to this country.

In this connection, to cite only the declarations of one of the most recent eyewitnesses, let me quote the words of Dr. Yarow, member of the American Board for Foreign Missions, as given out and published in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Oct. 6. Dr. Yarow says: "For twenty-seven days 1,500 determined Armenians held Van against 5,000 Turks and Kurds."

Now, mark my words: Van is an Ottoman city, and therefore, the act of the determined Armenians was nothing else than an act of open rebellion and had to be dealt with accordingly by organized and legal force. Queerly enough, Dr. Yarow makes it a crime that the Turks were led by a German officer and used a howitzer to quell the rebellion, as if any legally instituted Government was expected to act in a different way to smash the revolt of a certain number of its "determined" citizens. Queerly enough, Dr. Yarow makes it also a crime that the Turks deliberately fired at the mission buildings which flew five American flags and a Red Cross flag "as protection" (sic), though according to his own confession he admits the illegal use of said flags by confessing the active support he and his colleagues of the mission gave to the rebellious Armenians when he says: "And during the siege WE not only had to fight the Turks but almost every known contagious disease as well," thus manifestly showing that their first and main object was to "fight the Turks," and so manifestly admitting the misuse of the American flag. Is it surprising that under those conditions the Turks deliberately fired at the mission buildings? I would venture to say that if the American missionaries in Van or any other part of Turkey, instead of "fighting the Turks," had rather contented themselves with preaching and professing brotherly love and general Christian principles, for which work they were presumably sent to Turkey by the American Board, the properties of the missions in the Ottoman Empire would have been immune and secure from any attacks.

If there has been any purposely committed crime on women and children we are the first ones to deplore it deeply and sincerely, but with my knowledge of the country and people I consider myself in a position absolutely to deny the existence of a concerted general movement implying massacres and atrocities. If women and children have been killed in the fray, I again deplore it, but I want to point out that similar accidents do happen daily even on the western battlefields, where supposedly civilized nations are at war. It must, therefore, be considered as an unfortunate but inevitable evil of warfare.

As for the expulsion "en masse" and the driving away of the Armenians from those parts of the Ottoman Empire which are or may be threatened by a foreign invasion, I see the justification of this act of the Ottoman Government in the aid the Armenians gave to the Russians. It is well to notice that only in Van and its neighborhood, where the internal revolt of the Armenians took effect, did the Russians succeed in invading Turkish territory. It stands, therefore, to reason that a legally constituted Government, having been deceived by the treason of a certain element of the population, will take necessarily severe measures to prevent the repetition of a similar treason, and the consequences it would have in any other part of the country, by concentrating, in a place easy to control, all and every member of such a turbulent element.

Of course an expulsion on such a large scale is bound to create miseries, sicknesses, and even illegal and immoral actions. This is again evidenced by the results noted on the Belgian refugees in England, Holland, and other countries. It is most deplorable that similar miseries had to fall on the shoulders of a race included in the Ottoman family as well, but the Armenians have only themselves to blame.

ZIA MUFTY-ZADE BEY.

WHERE IS BELGIAN GOLD?

Refugee Capitalists Not Spending Their Money for Pleasure.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The article by George B. McClellan in THE TIMES Magazine Section leaves with the reader the somewhat false impression that all the rich Belgians fled the country at the time of the invasion and refuse to come back; hence great suffering among the poor. The impression also is that these same Belgian capitalists are spending their time and money at French watering places and buying pearls and antique furniture.

As I have friends among this class of Belgians, I think it only justice that your readers should know that not all of the "capitalists" fled at the time of the German invasion, and that not all of those who fled are at "French and Swiss watering places." Some of these exiles have cast in their lot with their King and Queen and are suffering hardships with them in what remains of free Belgium. They are helping the destitute and wounded and caring for children who have been orphaned by the German invasion. They all risk their lives, even the women. Mme. H. writes that while riding in an ambulance with another "capitalist" and a surgeon she narrowly escaped death from a bomb thrown at their car by a German aviator. He missed the red cross painted on top of the ambulance, but he killed five grown noncombatants and two children.

Perhaps Mr. McClellan's friend, "who occupies a high position in the German Imperial Government," did not inform him of the war indemnities (the first one amounting to $50,000,000) extorted at various times by the Germans from the Belgians who were in their clutches. No wonder the Germans wish the capitalists to return; no wonder the capitalists prefer to stay away and devote what is left of their fallen fortunes to their King and Queen. They deny that they are a conquered people. They are one with the "proletariat" in their devotion to their King, who saved Europe from Prussian rule.

Mr. McClellan thinks that our commission in Belgium should undertake to reconcile that country to its fate. Our commission should make the Belgians understand that they are conquered and that the Germans are kind! Is not this asking too much of even that most capable body

'THE SABLE LORCHA' A THRILLING FILM

SAME MAN PORTRAYS TWINS

Cinema Trick Brings Actor Twice on the Screen at the Same Moment.

The Griffith film contributed to the new Triangle program is quite the best part of the entertainment provided this week at the Knickerbocker and one of the best photoplays yet presented at that new Broadway movie house. "The Sable Lorcha," dramatized from a colorful story of adventure by Horace Hazeltine, has in it more of mystery, ingenuity and surprise than you would find in a thousand ordinary scenarios. A story of revenge that comes out of the mysterious East, it has the flavor of "The Moonstone," and "The Mystery of Cloomber." A man is tortured nearly to death for a crime done in China years before by a twin brother. Thomas Jefferson plays the two brothers and the closing scene admits one of those tricks peculiar to the movies when the actor appears twice on the screen at the same moment. Tully Marshall is the vengeful Celestial and all the work is of a high order.

The other serious film, "The Disciple," was prepared under the direction of Thomas H. Ince. It is an extravagant, melodramatic photoplay of a sky-pilot in the Bret Harte country. William S. Hart plays the leading rôle picturesquely, and this film has its exceedingly good moments, but it is grotesquely disfigured at one point by a flash of Calvary, with the scriptural words of forgiveness neatly printed on the sky above the crest of the hill.

The two Sennett comics, which complete the program, are of the familiar knock-him-down-the-stairs, hit-him-in-the-head-with-a-brick variety. One called "Her Painted Hero," is an example of a curious movie phenomena for the star who runs away with most of the capital letters in the announcements has the least to do and is the least important member of the cast. But he has a reputation won on the comparatively legitimate stage, so his is the glory. Thus are the movies untrue to their own.

CASTLES IN THE MOVIES NOW.

Film Preserves for Posterity Their Famous Kiss.

A great deal has been written about the Vernon Castles. For several years some of the newspapers and magazines have scarcely run off an edition without a column or two about the doings of the couple who made dancing profitable. Then Mrs. Castle's mother, Mrs. Foote, wrote a biography of her daughter which showed that she was born and reared much as other children. But it will be the movies, and not Mrs. Castle's mother, which posterity will have to bless for the best record of Irene and Vernon. This record was unreeled for the first time at the Globe Theatre last night, under the title "The Whirl of Life."

The pictures disclose some interesting facts about the Castles, and since the scenario was written by Mr. Castle and acted by them both, the episodes may be considered fairly authentic. The circumstances of their meeting, the entrance of the monkey motive into Irene's life, the origin of the fox trot, the Castle kiss, the secret of Mrs. Castle's dancing—these are some of the interesting disclosures made as only the screen can make them.

The most satisfactory feature of "The Whirl of Life" to any one who has enjoyed Mr. Castle as a comedian or dancer, is that it is evident from the flickering film legends that he is still a comedian, and appreciates the humor of his latest venture.

TO BRING GERMAN ACTORS.

Loew and Rachmann Form International Vaudeville Alliance.

S. Rachmann, a vaudeville agent of Berlin who came to New York recently and established offices in the Fitzgerald Building, has arranged with Marcus Loew to book some of the best known German variety artists over the Loew circuit. Mr. Rachmann controls a dozen theatres in Germany, and has eleven touring companies. He will book acts over his own and the Loew circuits, thus giving performers long engagements. In the majority of cities in which there are Loew theatres small time will be eliminated, and the theatres will compete with the other first class vaudeville houses.

Mr. Rachmann says there are great opportunities in Germany and Austria-Hungary for American vaudeville players because the war has caused a dearth of high-class acts. Consequently he will send American entertainers to his theatres abroad. Later in the season he contemplates producing operettas by Franz Lehar, Le Fall, Oscar Strauss, Jean Gilbert, and Otto Reutter, whose works he has presented at home.

TWO OPERA SINGERS ARRIVE.

Miss Zarska, New Soprano, and Mme. Ober on the Ryndam.

Miss Erma Zarska, the new Bohemian soprano, arrived here yesterday on the Holland-America liner Ryndam to make her début in America at the Metropolitan Opera House this season. She has been singing in the Royal Opera House at Prague and at Berlin and Vienna. Miss Zarska can sing in French, Italian, and German, and will appear in Aida, Tosca, and Lohengrin. She is 24 years old.

Mme. Margarite Ober, the German contralto, of the Metropolitan company, also arrived on the Ryndam. She said that after a concert in Berlin, at which she sang for the widows and orphans of the war, the Crown Prince asked her if she got enough to eat.

"I showed him my card," Mme. Ober continued, "and replied that I had lots of bread left yet."

The singer added that she had learned two new operas in the Summer, "Samson and Delilah" and "Martha."

Reicher Begins Rehearsals Today.

The company that will appear in the first production to be made by Emanuel Reicher at the Garden Theatre will be assembled today for rehearsal. The first offering will be Bjornson's "When the New Young Vine Blooms," and the version used will be that of Arvid Paulson, a young Norwegian, who is now in New York. Mr. Reicher will head the cast in the rôle of Mr. Arvik, and in other important parts will be Hedwig Reicher, Bertha Mann, Rupert Harvey, Augustin Duncan, Ferdinand Bernard, Rosalie Lascelles, Helen May, and Muriel Hope. The first performance will be given on Nov. 16. The Garden Theatre is being completely renovated for the occupancy of the "Modern Stage" and the "American People's Theatre."

Dog Show in Stage Performance.

A dog show will be held at the Hippodrome next week. One of the scenes in "Hip, Hip, Hooray" represents Fifth Avenue with the daily parade in full swing. At the first matinées of next week any young women possessing dogs of which they are proud, will be allowed to parade in this scene with their pets. Kennel club experts will be on hand to judge the dogs, and for the best one shown a cup will be given.

Cyril Maude's Daughter Arrives.

Miss Margery Maude, daughter of Cyril Maude, the English actor-manager who is appearing in "Grumpy," arrived yesterday from London on the Philadelphia, and was met at the pier by her father. She said she had come to join George Arliss's company to play the leading rôle in "Paganini," a new comedy by Edward Knobloch.

PRAISES POPE'S ROLE IN WAR

Cardinal Farley Says Peace Will Come Through Vatican.

A letter from Cardinal Farley, in which he announced that the annual collection of Peter's Pence would be taken next Sunday, was read in all of the churches of his diocese yesterday. The Cardinal asked for generous contributions because the war in Europe had impoverished other countries. Commenting on the war the Cardinal wrote:

"The following expression from a distinguished non-Catholic source is impressively interesting: 'International Socialism has failed in this war. It has been incapable to exercise any action, and even it has been unable to keep up any intercourse among labor corporations of nations at war with one another. The Papacy is the only international institution which has been able to keep its distinct universal character.'

"The world which has been excluding for years the Pope from its councils during its days of prosperity, now from the valley of death and destruction instinctively turn to Benedict XV., the representative on earth of the Prince of Peace and the successor of pontiff upon pontiff who for ages spoke to warring people and were obeyed."

Today the voice of the Pope was raised and lifted above the din of war, the Cardinal wrote, and by his appeal he had brought back to their families 150,000 exchanged prisoners and also brought about betterment of conditions in detention camps. The Catholic people, he concluded, were not without hope that when peace returned to Europe it would be largely due to the prayers and the persevering efforts of the Pope.

LOST GEMS ON ELEVATED.

Absent-Minded Lawyer Asks Police to Help Find Them.

Henry J. Webster, a lawyer of 29 Broadway, living at 529 West 158th Street, lost jewels worth about $1,500 yesterday on a Ninth Avenue elevated train. He asked the police to assist him in finding them.

According to the story he told the police, he took an express train with the jewelry in an envelope. Becoming engrossed in a newspaper, he forgot the jewelry and did not discover its loss until he got home. Among the articles lost were two scarf pins, one set with a black opal, the other with a pearl. There was a ring with three diamonds, a diamond lavalliere, a cameo lavalliere, an amethyst brooch, a diamond dinner ring, and a gold wrist watch with the initials "B. W." The jewelry belonged to Mrs. Webster, who had asked him to bring it home from the safe in his office.

MORE CEMETERIES TO RELIEVE CALVARY

1,000,000 BODIES BURIED

Father Stewart Placed in Charge and All Three Burial Places to be Improved at Once.

The management of the cemeteries of the Roman Catholic Church of the Archdiocese of New York has been turned over to the Rev. William J. Stewart, rector of St. Elizabeth's Church, at 187th Street and Broadway, by the Trustees of St. Patrick's Cathedral, who control Calvary Cemetery. Extensive improvements are to be made. The cemetery grounds will be beautified and put in order. New properties will be developed.

The Trustees have acquired two new tracts of land for cemeteries, one of 300 acres at Pine Lawn, L. I., in Suffolk County, and another of 150 acres at Kensico, adjoining the big Kensico Cemetery in Westchester County. Plans for the development of these grounds have been prepared by William Barclay Parsons, and have been accepted by the Board of Trustees. Cardinal Farley is the President of the Trustees. Father Stewart will consult with the Trustees and make monthly reports. His orders are to put the cemeteries on the highest plane of efficiency.

The new properties were purchased because the law does not permit the acquirement of more property in the city limits for burial purposes, and it was felt that Calvary Cemetery could not indefinitely meet the requirements of the churches. It was feared that unless action was taken, desirable places near the city might be developed soon to the point where the property would be restricted or the price become prohibitive. Father Stewart said yesterday that there were more than 1,000,000 bodies in Calvary Cemetery.

The first step to be taken at Calvary Cemetery will be to see that roads and culverts are put in order, the grounds thoroughly overhauled under the eye of an expert and the neglected graves and monuments cared for. There would be no radical change at this time at least, Father Stewart said, but his object would be to beautify the grounds. A church and burial vaults for priests of the arch-diocese has just been completed at an expense of $100,000 on the Calvary property and Father John Lonergan has been made Chaplain.

Father Stewart is known as a developer of parishes. In 1905 he had charge of the parish which included St. Charles's Church, Gardiner, and St. Joseph's Church, New Paltz, both in Ulster county. He cleared the parish of debt and left a substantial surplus, when in 1909 he was transferred to St. Mark's Church at 138th Street near Lenox Avenue. He built up that parish, remaining there until September, 1912, when Cardinal Farley turned the church over to the Fathers of the Holy Ghost, who have charge of the work among the negroes. Some 75,000 negroes, according to Father Stewart's estimate, had migrated to that part of the city.

On Oct. 1, 1912 Father Stewart was sent to St. Elizabeth's Church. He erected a new parish house and obtained for the church twenty-three stained glass memorial windows which have been commented upon frequently because of their beauty.

Father Stewart is taking up his additional duties in connection with the development of the cemeteries with the same vigor that he employed in his parishes. He said he would devote every moment of his spare time to carrying out his orders to make the cemeteries models. The members of the Board of Trustees with the exception of Cardinal Farley are business men, not connected with the priesthood who have been unable to give to the work of the development and care of the cemeteries the time which was needed.

WANTS TO EDUCATE A GIRL.

Miss Metcalf Seeks Capable Child Who Lacks Opportunity.

Miss I. M. Metcalf will visit THE TIMES office today to scan the replies received to the following advertisement, which appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES yestreday morning:

To teachers and philanthropic workers:

Free home and liberal education will be given little girl 8 or 9 years old with capacity to become a woman of high type if given opportunities for development, but now lacking such opportunities. F 40 Times Annex.

Miss Metcalf told a TIMES reporter last night that she did not care to say much about her advertisement. It was merely private philanthropy, she declared, and she did not wish any publicity.

"I have been around to the various public institutions," she said, "but have failed there to find a child to take. Most of them are bound to go to their relatives or parents at certain time, and I wish to have complete control over any girl that comes to me until she is grown."

Miss Metcalf said she did not mean to adopt the child unless it were absolutely necessary, but admitted that the contemplated practical adoption. She insists on being allowed to make her choice among girls who may be suggested after a personal investigation. Miss Metcalf said she had been a teacher at one time, but was now employed in municipal service.

Cardinal Blesses New School.

Cardinal Farley blessed and opened the new St. Barnabas Parochial School at 241st Street and Martha Avenue yesterday afternoon. More than 2,000 persons were present. The new building is of brick, containing seven classrooms, indoor playground, and a gymnasium. At present it has accommodations for 300 children.

Mrs. John T. Whalen, a sister of the bride, is to be her matron of honor, and another sister, Miss Edna R. Phillips, will be the only bridesmaid. John T. Whalen is to be the best man, and Thomas J. MR. GODOWSKY'S RECITAL.

Large Audience Hears the Pianist in Aeolian Hall.

Leopold Godowsky, having been quite unnecessarily lost some weeks ago, and then, fortunately, duly found again, was not incapacitated by this harrowing experience for the giving of a piano recital yesterday afternoon in Aeolian Hall. The audience was large in numbers, and ready to applaud at any opportunity, utilizing, in fact, some opportunities where the pianist would plainly rather have had silence, as in the intervals between the movements of sonatas. It was a zealous enthusiasm, and at the end of the program there was a rush to the front and a demand for more, though more had been given already.

Mr. Godowsky is no stranger to New York. He did not play here last season, though he was in the city. Two seasons before that he had reappeared here after a good many years of absence, during which his reputation as an exponent of certain of the most transcendent manifestations of modern piano technique was greatly enhanced. He played here again in the following season.

There must necessarily be a deep interest in the performance of one who has so consummately mastered certain things, though his mastery does not extend to all, nor even to the most vital and fundamental things, in musical art. It cannot be said that Mr. Godowsky is invariably a great interpreter of the greatest music, or that he often touches deeply the heart or fires the imagination. As interpreter he reached his highest level yesterday in Chopin's B flat minor sonata, and in the same composer's Impromptu, Op. 36, and Scherzo, Op. 39. He was far from his highest level in Beethoven's "Appassionata" sonata, Op. 57, with which he began; a performance with little fire or enthusiasm, without the "passion" that the master wrote into the music; a performance not without certain disturbing mannerisms. Mr. Godowsky's playing gained largely in warmth and imagination as soon as he reached his Chopin numbers. There have been more eloquent interpretations of the sonata, but his was possessed of many truly fine qualities, and notably of a breadth and authority that do not always characterize Mr. Godowsky's playing. In this, as in all else that he did yesterday, there were especially to be noted the elegance, the perfect finish, the consummate ease of his technique, which compasses everything without an apparent effort. He made an impressive showing of the first book of Brahms's Paganini variations.

But the most characteristic and individual features of this recital were the performance of pieces by Liszt, "Au Bord d'une Source" and the concert study in F minor; Mr. Godowsky's own arrangement for the left hand alone of Chopin's Etude, Op. 10, No. 6, and finally, his "Symphonic Metamorphoses" of Johann Strauss's waltz, "Künstlerleben." These and the first book of Brahms's variations on a theme of Paganini's are matters concerned largely with the elaborate development of piano technique with which Mr. Godowsky's name is specially connected, and which he played in an altogether remarkable way. In these, indeed, his mechanism becomes something more than mechanism, and extorts admiration for a kind of beauty of its own.

There may be pertinent query as to the musical value of some of these undertakings; as to the desirability or propriety of playing with one hand Chopin's etude which he wrote for two, and which, there can hardly be room for doubt, Mr. Godowsky himself could play even better with two than he did with one; or as to the real gain secured by metamorphosing symphonically Strauss's entrancing waltz. Some will confess that they like it better as Strauss wrote it. Mr. Godowsky's arrangement, much overladen with counterpoint of the most elaborate and ornamental kind, very ingenious, and very skillful, whose texture is often a combination of several waltz themes. So heavy is the burden that the music is frequently made to stagger heavy-footed, and loses something of the contagious gayety and spirit. It is an astonishing tour de force, and Mr. Godowsky's playing of it is equally one. In these pieces, as in all the rest, the listener could not fail to be delighted with the clarity with which he projected his interpretation, the grace and finish of many passages, and, within sharply defined dynamic limits, the delicate coloring of his tone.

After the variations by Brahms, Mr. Godowsky played the Capriccio in B minor, Op. 76, No. 2, and after the pieces by Chopin, the same composer's waltz in C sharp minor and Etude in G sharp minor.

RETURN OF JULIA ARTHUR.

To Play in 'The Eternal Magdalene' After a Long Retirement.

The Forty-eighth Street Theatre has been selected as the playhouse in which Robert H. McLaughlin's play, "The Eternal Magdalene," will be presented by Selwyn & Co., and Monday night, Nov. 1, has been set as the date.

Particular interest attaches to the production because it will bring Julia Arthur, who in private life is Mrs. Benjamin P. Cheney, Jr., of Boston, back to the stage after an absence of twelve years or more. In the supporting company will be Emmett Corrigan, Lucile Watson, Louise Randolph, Harry Harwood, Arnold Lucy, Lowell Sherman, Alphonse Ethier, Claire Burke, Robert Hudson, Albert Brown, William J. Phinney, and Howard I. Smith.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

The company that will appear in the production of Beulah Poynter's play, "The Unborn," to be made Nov. 5 by The Medical Review of Reviews, has been chosen. It consists of Robert Dempster, Alice Gale, Howard Hall, Geoffrey Stein, Ruth Fielding, and Dorothy Millette. All of the players volunteered their services.

Thomas W. Ryley has arranged with Charles Frohman and Klaw & Erlanger to send out a second company in "Outcast," the drama in which Elsie Ferguson was seen in the Lyceum Theatre last season. Jeanne Eagels, who appeared with Julian Eltinge in "The Crinoline Girl," and with Arnold Daly in moving pictures, has been chosen for Miss Ferguson's role. The tour will begin next Monday in Trenton and extend through the South and Middle West.

Kathryn Osterman, who acted the leading role for "The Bludgeon," the feature picture at the Plaza Theatre, will appear in person there tomorrow night.

Leon Bakst, the Russian artist, is preparing new costumes and stage decorations for the ballet, "L'Oiseau de Feu," for which Igor Strawinsky has written the music. This is one of the seventeen ballets Serge de Diaghileff's Ballet Russe will perform in their engagement this Winter at the Metropolitan.

With the engagement of Dodson Mitchell, th ecast that will appear in Frank Mandel's farce, "Sherman Was Right," at the Fulton Theatre, is now complete. The opening performance has been deferred till a week from tomorrow night to allow time for the installation of a massive scenic effect that will be used in the second act.

Josephine Stevens, a daughter of the late Ben Stevens, who for many years was associated with Klaw & Erlanger, has been engaged for one of the roles in "The Irish Dragoon," the romantic comedy in which Andrew Mack will return to the legitimate stage.

The Times Producing Company has decided to organize a second company to present "The Girl Who Smiles," in the larger cities. Ben Teal, general stage director of the firm, will begin organizing the company tomorrow. The original company will continue at the Longacre indefinitely.

"A String of Pearls," a musical sketch by Cecil Kern, will be produced next week at Proctor's Fifth Avenue with Miss Kern, John R. Phillips and Elsa Lynn in the cast, and Gustave Henrichs as musical director.

A special showing of the picture, "How Molly Made Good," written by Burns Mantle, for which a dozen stars of the legitimate stage posed, will be made tomorrow morning in the Broadway Theatre.

Cyrus Townsend Brady has signed a contract with the Vitagraph Company to write exclusively for it.

"UNCLE JOE" LAUDS WILSON.

Former Speaker Indorses President's Handling of War Situation.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 17.—"Uncle Joe" Cannon said tonight that he "took his hat off to President Wilson" for the manner the Nation's Executive had handled the European war situation.

"Do you want to say anything about President Wilson's wedding," 'Uncle Joe'?" one of his party asked.

Mr. Cannon shook his head from side to side. "And," he said, "if I talked about Wilson's attitude in Mexico I'd say too much."

"But when it comes to the European war situation, why I take my hat off to the President, and I indorse everything he's done and everything he's said."

TIGERS HAVE SHOWN THE BEST FOOTBALL

Big Gridiron Battles Start This Week—Few Upsets in Early Season Games.

With Saturday's gridiron battles the football season passed its formative stage and speculation now centers on the value of the work accomplished as related to the big struggles which are drawing near. Taken as a whole, the season thus far has produced comparatively few of the so-called "surprises." Of those which have come to be known as the Big Three, Yale, Harvard, and Princeton, only one has suffered defeat, and if the circle is extended to include Pennsylvania and Cornell, there has been but a single other victory registered by what formerly were termed the minor elevens. Yale was beaten by Virginia, and Pennsylvania fell before the attack of Penn State.

Basing the judgment on the playing thus far, Princeton appears to have shown a more rational development than any of the colleges mentioned. Well grounded in football fundamentals, the Tigers are gaining their speed by gradual increase, and it speaks well for Rush that he has judged Princeton's opponents so accurately that he has always been able to have his eleven a trifle more formidable, either in power or generalship, or both. Undeniably Princeton has been called upon to face more powerful teams than any of the others, and one, Rutgers, hurled itself at the Tigers in top form, while Princeton was still laboring in the throes of early season preparation. Princeton's strength did not win that battle, it was better generalship that brought victory to the Tigers. The heavy eleven of Syracuse was next turned aside, because Princeton had developed a wonderful defense and something of an attack. Saturday the Tigers showed the best work they have thus far done in offensive, when they defeated Lafayette. That the score was big indicates that there was much latent power, for it has been the policy this season not to attempt big scores.

There is a powerful back field and the punting is well taken care of by Driggs. As for the quarterback position itself, Captain Glick is a clever general, and he has an able substitute in Ames. Glick has played comparatively little thus far, the coaches taking him out so that he may be saved for the big games.

The real test for Princeton before the Yale and Harvard game is the battle with Dartmouth, always a hard-fought contest. As yet the Tigers have shown but flashes of anything other than straight football, but the brief periods when the open game has been used have shown that Princeton may expect much of its possibilities, and even now, undoubtedly, has reserve strength in this line of play that will not be uncovered until the Dartmouth game, and not then unless it is demanded as a necessity to defeat the Hanover team.

Up to last week Harvard had been in a chaotic condition and the game with Virginia was greatly feared. With that game won, the Crimson may look more comfortably toward the first big game of the schedule when Harvard plays Cornell. Injuries have handicapped the eleven somewhat, and it has not taken on definite shape as early as might be expected, the game with the Southerners, however, proved that Harvard has the basis of an offense and it will be hammered into form this week in preparation for the Ithacans. The Crimson gained many yards against the Virginia eleven, but could not quite carry the attack successfully against the stiffening defense of the Virginians when they were under their own goal posts.

Though the only points made by Harvard were field goals, it was gratifying to the Crimson supporters to know that the first basis of comparison with Yale had turned out to favor the Cambridge eleven. Manan outpunted Thurman and proved his drop kicking ability again by scoring all of the points from the field. But more than this was the fact that the Crimson defense was shaping itself into a dependable bulwark. Virginia could not gain; in fact, made only one first down during the game.

Just how much the Crimson will have to prepare for Cornell is problematical, for the Ithacans are more of an uncertain quantity than any of the other big colleges. They have won three games, all of them by big scores, but no one of the opponents furnished the real test which Cornell desired. The closest score was in the first game of the season with Oberlin, and in that the Ithacans had one touchdown counted against them, the score of the game being 24 to 9. If there is anything in big scores such as 46 to 6 against Williams and 41 to 0 against Bucknell, it would appear that Cornell must have a strong offense, but the lack of a hard struggle will undoubtedly count against the team in the battle with the Harvards. In Saturday's game with Bucknell the Cornell backs tore through the opposing line with ease.

Yale has been a disappointment to her followers. Beaten by Virginia, and just managing to defeat Lehigh by one point, is not the usual story to be recorded of Yale's early season football. However, Saturday Yale showed to the best advantage of the season in the game against Springfield Y. M. C. A. College. There was more drive in the team than heretofore, more of the fighting spirit, and this must certainly be an encouragement after the rather sluggish play that had gone before. The Blue has some good material and it may be now that it will be welded into a form so that there will be a powerful eleven before another week or two elapses. There was good ground gaining Saturday against the fast Springfield team and Yale might have had a larger score had there not been so much eagerness on the part of the men. Yards of hard-earned territory were lost because the Blue would persist in offside play and other violations of the rules. Still there were the elements of an attack and something not over strong which may be turned into a defense of adequate proportions.

Something appears to be wrong at Pennsylvania when the Quakers can do no better than earn a tie with the weak Navy team, which has not won a game for this season. A good material for this season, a powerful eleven, "the best in years" as one Pennsylvania man described it. And yet Penn has already been defeated by Penn State, a strong eleven, but not one that should humble the Quakers under the conditions which prevail with regard to material. The Quakers are playing a wide open game, and once perfected in all the fine points there may be a creditable eleven.

The Army showed itself woefully weak in the game with Colgate. The team appears to be slow and is nowhere near playing the game of which the men should be capable. The development of the Army is, however, inclined to be slow, as there is only one game that really counts, that with the Navy, and a little later the Cadets may catch their stride.

The Navy, too, has presented a weak front so far this season, though there was encouragement in the showing against Pennsylvania, even though the tally made by the Middies was the result rather of a fluke. The team has yet to win its first game and has been beaten by teams representing Georgetown and Pittsburgh. The Navy eleven, however, develops quickly and the showing against the Quakers is taken as the first sign of improvement.

HARVARD WAS FORTUNATE.

Only One Player Injured in the Game with Virginia.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 17.—Harvard was very fortunate in the matter of injuries in Saturday's game with Virginia, only one of the regulars being hurt. Soucy, the best end rush on the field, hurt his knee badly, and while he will be able to be about in a few days, it is not thought that he will be able to play until the Harvard eleven goes to Princeton on Nov. 6.

The Harvard rush line showed a little improvement, Taylor having made sure of his place at centre and Gilman showing signs of returning to his 1913 form at tackle. Parsen, last year's tackle, will be cut again this week, and if the coaches can bolster up Cowan at left guard, the team will be a lot better against Cornell Saturday than in any of the games played so far. Harvard, however, will have to rely on its light backs against Cornell, as Horwen, McKinlock and Enwright all are still on the hospital list.

Navy Team Lacks Aggressiveness.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Oct. 17.—The Naval Academy coaches will begin tomorrow to work hard to strengthen the Navy eleven. The ends are in very bad shape, and no offense of any value has been developed. Of the three touchdowns scored this season two were through forward passes of opponents which Martin intercepted, scoring after a long run. It is realized that this is not a dependable method of scoring. No Navy back has shown any great ability to carry the ball, and the forward passes have not been effective. Head Coach Ingram, however, places much emphasis upon the play and will continue to work hard on it. Neither Harrison nor Jackson, two ends that have been satisfactory so far this season, and Kenworthy and Blodgett are being tried. Very substantial improvement in the work from tackle to tackle was indicated Saturday. H. S. Jones, Smith, and Gilman doing particularly well.

The Executive Committee of the Navy Athletic Association has decided that it can allow each member of the association but three tickets to the Army-Navy football game at New York Polo Grounds on Nov. 27. Four were alloted each member when the game was played in New York two years ago, and three when it was played last year on Franklin Field, Philadelphia. It is explained that the largely increased membership of the association has made impossible the issuance of a larger number. Applications for tickets must be received by Oct. 31 to be considered.

Hard Practice for N. Y. U.

Coach Reilley has arranged the hardest program of practice for the New York University football team this week that it has thus far experienced. After the successful outcome of the conflict with the Union eleven on Saturday, the violet coaches are looking forward to the preparation of the Heights eleven for the remaining games on its schedule, which include Trinity, Wesleyan, Bucknell, and Rutgers. Although the New York eleven appeared more promising when playing the defensive game than was expected in its clash with Union, the coaches are not depending too much on this fact, but expect to work the team with the hopes of developing a strong defensive aggregation before it enters upon the final lap. With this in view, arrangements have been made for practice scrimmages with several other elevens during the course of the week's practice. The violet is planning to play the Columbia warriors in a practice contest on South Field tomorrow, providing the necessary arrangements can be made so that the violet squad can be excused from regular afternoon classes by the university authorities. A scrimmage with the Fordham eleven for Wednesday on Ohio Field has also been definitely arranged, while the New York team hopes to have its final scrimmage with the Hamilton Institute eleven before it plays Haverford next Saturday.

Yale's Showing Satisfactory.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 17.—Yale's showing against the Springfield Y. M. C. A. College eleven yesterday was, in general, so satisfactory that no immediate changes are planned for the Eli eleven. Although several of the first string players will be handled lightly this week because an unusually severe game is expected next Saturday with Washington and Jefferson; it is probable that they Yale will take the gridiron against the Pennsylvania team almost exactly as it met Springfield. Carl White, the regular centre, has been benched by a slight injury to his foot, but may displace Way this week. Jay Yorys, freshman centre last year, has rejoined the squad, and will prove a live factor in the final competition. Howard Baldridge and Claude Black, who were injured in the Lehigh game last week, today threw away their crutches and will begin practicing with the eleven by the middle of the week. The coaches believe that both will get into part of Saturday's game.

FOUR-BALL GOLF MATCH.

Hunt and Parsons Win from Anderson and Walker on Two Links.

A four-ball match was played on two greens yesterday, in which Edward F. Hunt and H. O. Parsons, two former champions of the Dyker Meadow Golf Club, were pitted against John G. Anderson, of Boston, runner-up in the national amateur championship at Garden City, who is now a resident of this city and a member of the Siwanoy Country Club, of Mount Vernon, and Douglas Walker, of the Dyker Meadow Golf Club. The first eighteen holes were played over the Dyker Meadow course and the second eighteen over the course of the Crescent Athletic Club.

At the Dyker Meadow course Anderson played the best individual game, doing the course in 77, one stroke over bogey, his opponent winning only one hole during the round. Anderson went out in 39, winning the second and fourth holes, while Hunt and Parsons won the first, third, fifth and sixth and were 2 up at the turn. Anderson also played the best golf on the homeward journey, coming in in 38, winning the twelfth and thirteenth holes, while Walker, his partner, won the eleventh hole. But on the other hand, Hunt won the tenth and Parsons the fourteenth and fifteenth holes, which still left them in the lead by 2 up at the end of the first eighteen holes.

Going out at the Cresent course, Hunt won the first, third and ninth holes and Anderson the seventh, which gave Hunt and Parsons a lead of 4 up at the turn, but Anderson won the first three holes on the homeward journey, which made the match extremely interesting until it was clinched at the sixteenth hole, which Hunt and Parsons won by 4 to 5, and followed it up by halving the last two holes and winning the match by 2 up.

SULLIVAN MEMORIAL GAMES DRAW 12,000

Record Crowd Pays Tribute to Late Athletic "Chief" on Jersey City Playground.

Hudson County paid its tributs to the memory of James E. Sullivan at the Reservoir Playground, Jersey City, N. J., yesterday, and one of the largest crowds that has attended a track and field meet in New Jersey made the occasion a memorable one. About 12,000 persons, hundreds of them personal friends of the late "chief" of athletics, thronged every available inch of space in the big playground.

City and State officials, members of the judiciary, men prominent in all walks of life, and almost every Amateur Athletic Union official of note was included in the vast throng which silently honored the memory of the man who more than any other person put athletics in this country on a plane never attained by any other nation. Mrs. James E. Sullivan, wife of the dead athletic leader, was one of the spectators who viewed one of the best athletic meets of the season.

No admission was charged to the sports, because of the fact that they were staged on a public field, but a considerable sum was raised for the Sullivan Memorial Fund by means of private contributions, the selling of tickets for the improvised stands, and by collections, superintended by Sheriff Eugene Kinkead, from those in the big gathering.

Mayor Fagan of Jersey City, Collector of the Port Wittpenn, Judge O'Brien, and P. T. Powers were among those who took a prominent part in the conducting of the meet. Secretary Tom Cassidy also did his share. Every athlete of any prominence in the Metropolitan District, and even Homer Baker, with his leg bound tightly in bandages, turned out to show their appreciation of James E. Sullivan, who devoted so many of his best years to their interests. Baker was able to run only 100 yards in the mile handicap.

It was on the same site which the Reservoir Playground now occupies, but which was in a swamp days ago, nothing more than waste land, that Jim Sullivan received his first taste of athletics. That was more than two score years ago.

Hannes Kolehmainen, back in form once more, ran away with the five-mile road race, which finished on the track, and which was one of the principal events on the well-filled program. All the star distance performers made up the field which finished back of the Finnlander. Gaston Strobino, making his first appearance in the colors of the New York A. C., ran in first place through the first half of the race, but he was no match for Kolehmainen in the latter stages, and he finished at least 200 yards back of the victor. Joseph Gianakopulos, the sturdy Greek athlete of the Millrose A. A., was third. The New York A. C. team, composed of Strobino, Ackerman, Honohan, Bailey, and Mitchel, won the team trophy with 27 points. Second place went to the Mohawk A. C. with 30 points, and third to Holy Family Lyceum with 59 points.

Joe Higgins, of Holy Cross College, New England champion at a half mile, had no trouble winning the 880-yard invitation special from W. Adams of the Newark Y. M. C. A. and Walter Powe of the Smart Set A. C. in 2 minutes 2 1-5 seconds. Higgins triumphed by twenty yards.

Willie Gordon won by less than five yards from Abel Kiviat in the mile run, in which both were the back markers.

Pat McDonald, Pat Ryan, and Jack Cahill, the latter representing the Millrose A. A., had an interesting all around weight competition, with the honors going to the Times Square Traffic policemen with two firsts and a third place. Summary:

100-Yard dash, handicap—Won by A. Desch, Newark T. A. H. Society, (7½ yards;) J. Haffer, St. Peter's Preparatory School, (7½ yards,) second; Peter J. White, Salem Crescent A. C., (scratch,) third. Time—0:10 1-5.

Campbell Will Press Charges.

The continuance of the investigation into the amateur status of Abel Kiviat of the Irish-American A. C., and Harry J. Smith of the Bronx Church House, will be held by the Registration Committee at 67 Madison Avenue on Thursday night, instead of Saturday, as planned. Roscoe C. Campbell, the Troy handicapper, who is the chief witness against the local athletes, has assured Chairman George Mathews of the Registration Board, that he will surely be present at the hearing, and it is upon his testimony that the committee expects to fing Kiviat and Smith guilty of professionalism. It is possible that Father Challinan, of the Roman Catholic Church of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel, Troy, may come down to testify. Kiviat in 1912 was one of the contestants in a meet conducted by Father Challinan's church, and the games were preferred to two or three times during the opening hearing of the Kiviat-Smith case last Thursday night.

According to President Rubien of the Metropolitan Association, who has taken a prominent hand in this affair, the case should be cleaned up at the meeting this Thursday night. Some important new evidence has been found. Mr. Rubien said yesterday, which will strengthen the case of the Registration Committee.

Another Memorial Fund Meet.

Another athletic meet in aid of the James E. Sullivan memorial fund will be held on Election Day at the Federal League Park, Harrison, N. J. John J. O'Hara, a member of the Registration Committee, will head the committee in charge of the meet. Other members of the committee are C. T. Powers, who has donated the grounds for the games; Le Ray Fales, A. A. U. Commissioner for Newark; George Wester, National Turn Verein; J. T. Owens, Newark T. A. B. Society; B. F. Gregory, Diocesan Union; Fred Metz, Prudential Life A. A.; W. E. Peet, Newark Y. M. C. A.; E. J. O'Brien, Chairman of the Newark Anniversary Athletic Committee, and Captain E. Freeman of the First Regiment A. A.

MEDALS FOR WALKERS.

Schoolboys to be Encouraged to Take Up the Exercise.

The weekly jaunt of the American Walkers' Association was held this morning. Starting together from 130th Street ferry, the short distance squad went to Hackensack and return, 15 miles, while the long distance squad continued on to Paterson and return, 30 miles. "Century Bars" were received by P. Gardner, J. Daniels, and F. Gage. The association walkers were accompanied by the walking club of the New York Evening High school and also by walkers from the Harlem, Stuyvesant, Morris and Brooklyn evening high schools, and from the Harlem Evening Trade School.

It is not necessary for these scholars to be members of the association, any scholar eligible to compete for his school in P. S. A. L. competition is eligible for these medals.

The medals are being offered for the purpose of inducing young men who work during the day and study at night to get out in the open air and take the best of natural exercises walking and also to get acquainted with the many beautiful suburbs surrounding our city. Those who walked today were:

N. Probst, F. Trinker, P. Gardner, J. Daniels, F. Heath, F. Lackemacker, G. H. Swartz, D. Goldberger, F. Gage, G. W. Cisney, C. Gross, S. Freedman, S. Brodsky, J. Haitigan, F. Seufert, J. Big Squad in Walking Trip.

Forty-five members of the Walker's Club of America finished the twenty-mile walk to Englewood and return yesterday. The Harlem Evening High School Walking Club, which in the future will accompany the Walker's Club on their weekly journeys, participated in yesterday's walk. The big squad left Washington Bridge yesterday morning and by way of the Hudson County Boulevard, Bull's Ferry Road, through Fairview, down to Dan Kelly's Hill, through Ridgefield, Montgomery, Palisade Park, Leonia and Nordhoff, they reached Englewood. The return trip took them through Fort Lee and Edgewater. On next Sunday the walkers will start from Dyckman Street subway station at 9 o'clock and walk to Closter, N. J., and return.

Those who took part in yesterday's walk were Heffernan, Rode, Lieberman, Hocking, Knopke, Dennen, Ettinger, Freund, O'Connor, De Saris, Borni, Kohl, Bernstein, Schickel, Kangwitz, J. Levy, H. READY FOR BIG BOUT.

Coffey and Moran Let Up in Their Training for Garden Contest.

The general opinion among boxing enthusiasts that there will be a knockout scored when Jim Coffey boxes Frank Moran tomorrow night at Madison Square Garden has attracted the largest crowd of ticket buyers since Corbett and McCoy fought in the same ring fifteen years ago. Extra accommodations have been placed in the arena, bringing the total capacity up to 15,000.

Many fans flocked to the training camps of both boxers yesterday, the Fire Department closing the doors of the New Polo Club, where Coffey is working, after 1,200 admirers of the Dublin Giant jammed their way into the clubrooms. Yesterday boxing was cut down at both camps, Coffey taking on Joe Jeannette for four rounds, and Moran doing likewise at Hawkins's roadhouse, Bartley Madden acting as sparring partner. Today only light work will be indulged in by both men, saving their hands from rough work.

Willie Lewis, trainer of Moran, states that the Pittsburgher is in better trim for this bout than he was for Johnson in Paris.

"There is no chance of Coffey stopping this fellow," said Lewis yesterday. "He took everything Johnson had for twenty rounds, and was winning at the finish, and I am sure Coffey's wallops cannot be compared with the well-timed punches of that colored fellow. Moran is too rugged for Coffey. His hitting and experience alone make him a sure winner."

Benny Leonard and Johnny Drummie will box in the semi-final of ten rounds, and Young Ketchell and Hom Mace will go six rounds in the curtain raiser.

This Week's Boxing Bouts.

The first matinee boxing show this season, in which semi-professional try out bouts will be a feature, will be staged this afternoon, at the Broadway Sporting Club. The double windup of ten rounds should also furnish the fans with enough excitement to satisfy the most exacting. Chick Simer of Scranton, the Battling Miner and Al Schumacker of New York, a pair of boys who have an enviable record herabouts, and Allie Nack, the ex-amateur Metropolitan champion, and Josh Matthews the Ridgewood bear-cat, will figure in the ten round sessions.

Carey Phalen, the Harlem featherweight, will box Joe Grady in the final ten round bout at the Olympic Club. Grady is hailed the fighting Irishman in Harlem and his style of boxing has made him a great favorite at the Olympic Club. In the second ten round bout, Willie Astor of the West Side will face Johnny Daly the rugged little Irish bantamweight. Daly has boxed Johnny Coulon, Frankie Burns and Kid Williams. In the opening ten-round bout Buddy Nadler will meet Tommy McMahon of Brooklyn.

Johnny Harvey, the sensational Harlem lightweight left yesterday for Boston where he will box Charlie White, Chicago's hard hitting lightweight, tomorrow night in a twelve-round bout. Harvey received a wire Saturday from the Boston promoter and accepted the terms offered by the club. Harvey also will box Frankie Mask in New Haven on Nov. 1 and Ritchie Mitchell in Columbus, Ohio, on Nov. 8.

Harry Fitzpatrick, the Brooklyn lightweight, who has been fastly coming to the front, has been matched to box Leach Cross, the fighting dentist. Jimmy Dunn, the flyweight boxer of the Visitation Lyceum, and Young Jimmie Murray, brother of the Italian bantamweight, will box in one of the six-round sessions to precede the main event, which promises to be a thriller. The bouts will be staged at the Broadway Sporting Club of Brooklyn next Saturday night.

Newsboys' Dinner to Moran.

The newsboys of Times Square gave a dinner to Moran yesterday at Pal Hawkins's Westchester Road House. Nearly 200 of the boys went up in sight-seeing automobiles, and Moran gave them a chance to see him in action when he boxed three rounds, punched the bag for a half hour, and went through other various phases of training. His work won the newsboys completely and they wagered $1,800 to $300 that he would stay the limit in the bout with Coffey. And they have $1,800 additional which they are willing to wager at the prevailing odds.

GOVERNMENTSHOULD BREED ARMY HORSES

C. K. G. Billings Says Matter of Providing Mounts Is of Great Importance.

There are few horsemen better qualified to speak on the horse and anything pertaining to him than C. K. G. Billings, who owns more championship trotters and pacers than any other man, and who has become interested in racing of thoroughbreds recently, having purchased, in partnership with Frederick Johnson, a dozen head of English yearlings, which reached this country on Wednesday and are now quartered at Belmont Park.

Mr. Billings's early love was the harness horse, and he has a very remarkable breeding stud at Curles Neck Farm, fourteen miles from Richmond, Va., where the champion trotting stallion of the world, The Harvester, with a record of 2:01, holds court over a priceless collection of trotting dams, many with records of better than 2:10, and having as its brightest particular star, Lou Dillon, 1:58½, the fastest mare in the world. The produce of this stud is marketed in the Fall; they are weaned in an absolutely untrained condition. It is Mr. Billings's plan to have the opportunity for obtaining a world beater open to everybody, and when the youngsters go into the ring they are sold on their breeding and individuality, coupled with whatever quality of action they may possess naturally.

In discussing this plan recently the distinguished horseman said: "I started the farm chiefly as a diversion, and if I succeed in breeding good horses I shall be tremendously gratified. It has been my endeavor to start right. The Harvester has all that a sire should have—size, speed, conformation, disposition, and breeding—and the mares that have been mated with him are my idea of what trotting dams should be. In having their produce pass to the people at large, I aim to benefit the community. If anything sensational develops I can buy the same as anybody else after they are trained."

While Mr. Billings takes much pleasure with the champion Uhlan, 1:58, which he both rides and drives, and has up to the present used trotters exclusively under saddle, he confesses to a growing fondness for horses of pure blood. This is most encouraging to his associates in The Jockey Club, who know that he will bring to their deliberations a wealth of knowledge in connection with the horse family at large.

Like many other Americans of great affairs Mr. Billings is an ardent disciple of the gospel of preparedness and thinks that no matter engaging the attention of the people of the United States at the present time surpasses it in importance. No part of the policy in his estimation outweighs that which has to do with the horsing of cavalry and the equipping of the gun and transport service. Speaking in this connection a few days ago he said: "It is imperative that the work of breeding horses for the army should be in the most competent hands possible. The Government's own experiments, which have been limited because of insufficient appropriation, should be broadened—money should not be a consideration at this time—and the work should be carried on under the control and direction of the army, which should be competent to pass on the needs of the service much better than a commission of outsides oftentimes not in sympathy with the movement.

"The thoroughbred sire of proper type is the horse par excellence for this work in the estimation of continental authorities whose success has made their accomplishment a standard for other countries. Mated with the right kind of mares, and personally I prefer the trotter, they should give satisfaction in a majority of cases. Where trainers keep of high strung, excitable type discretion in the selection of mares should be used. I am of the opinion, however, that many of our thoroughbreds are made nervous and excitable through faulty education. The policy pursued by many trainers is to my mind wrong. Where trainers keep horses hidden away. There must be no noise lest the animal become irritable.

"Russia does these things well," continued Mr. Billings. "In that country the favorite hitch is the Troika—three horses abreast—usually two mares and a stallion, the entire horse in the middle of the team. There is no noise, no fuss either during the breeding season or at other times. Stallions and mares are worked in the double teams everywhere. Geldings are few, and the knife is never used on a good horse. When we took Uhlan to Moscow and St. Petersburg the authorities were amazed to find him a gelding, and one high dignitary asked in thunderous tones who was responsible for the unsexing of the king of trotters.

"Do you think the people of the United States at large appreciate the importance of the horse and what he means to the community?" Mr. Billings was asked.

"I do not," was the response, after a moment's deliberation, "but I believe we are on the eve of a gradual awakening. The horse shows and amateur racing are giving a world of help. Thoroughbred and half-thoroughbred hunters and saddle horses are becoming more and more in demand in large centres of population where the leisure class must be catered to, thus furnishing a market for the products of horse breeding communities. The people at large are thus acquiring at closer range the benefits of racing as exemplified in the thoroughbred and his products. The amateur race meets, such as Piping Rock, are ranging to the sport element who would probably have been less keen under different circumstances."

MANY WESTERN ENTRIES.

Record Number of Horses Expected at National Horse Show.

Early entries for the National Horse Show, which opens on Saturday, Nov. 6, indicate that Western exhibitors are to be more prominent than ever at this year's show. Though the books did not close until yesterday, and many distant exhibitors are yet to be heard from, it is now known that there will be more horses at Madison Square Garden than were in the last show, if not more than in any previous show. As foreign entries are a blank this year the great number of horses is a welcome surprise.

The Western exhibitors thus far heard from include Miss Louie Long, the daughter of R. A. Long of Kansas City; John L. Bushnell, son of ex-Governor Bushnell of Ohio, and Valentine Crane of Wildwood Farm, St. Charles, Ill. These are three of the largest exhibitors of high stepping harness horses in the Middle West, and it will be the first time all three amateur owners have shown their horses in New York. Miss Long had a string of horses at the last National Horse Show, but Mr. Bushnell and Mr. Crane were not represented. The latter exhibited his horses at Rochester a few weeks ago and while there received word that stables costing $150,000 on his stock farm had been destroyed by fire. His horses were accordingly shipped to Ridgewood, N. J., to await the Garden show.

TWO RACES FOR MURPHY.

Veteran Drives Oakland Boy and Clover Patch to Victory.

Plenty of good light harness racing was seen yesterday in the fourteen brushes staged in the second matinee of the Fall season of the Road Drivers' Association of New York, on the Harlem Speedway. James A. Murphy, the veteran owner and driver, piloted two of his star performers to victory, winning the 1:03 trotting event with his big gelding, Oakland Boy, and scoring over Joe Mapes with Clover Patch, in the 1:03 pacing race.

In the 1:03 trot, Oakland Boy took the measure of Nathan Straus's bay mare, Fair Maiden, in two successive heats, winning the first in 1:03½ and the second in 1:02½. Clover Patch, the best pacer on the Speedway, had difficulty winning two out of three heats in the 1:03 pace, losing in the opening trial to Joe Mapes, and winning the third heat by the barest of margins. Joe Mapes paced in his best form in the first heat, which was won in 1:02½, but looked speed in the second, and finished only a length behind Clover Patch the victor. In the third heat the Murphy and Stamberger entrants paced the entire half mile practically as a team, and it took careful deliberation by the judges before they awarded their decision to Clover Patch.

The surprise of the matinee was L. W. Boynton's bay gelding, Country Tramp, which captured the 1:05 pace in two straight heats, in 1:02¼ and 1:04½. The form exhibited by Country Tramp warrants his advance to the Class A pacing division.

J. C. Lawrence's Bay Winans took the 1:07 pace in two heats, while Wood Olcott, owned by H. C. Cramer, took three heats to triumph in the 1:07 trotting event. The 1:09 pace went to J. Dinamo's bay gelding Van Dat, in two straight heats. W. O'Neil's pacer, Hurthea, was far the best in the 1:05 division, annexing two straight trials. Happy Bell, with M. F. Kearns driving, scored in two out of three heats in the 1:11 pace. Other winners were R. Allen's Clay Wiggins, in 1:18 trot, and E. Feindt's Olsen, in the 1:15 trot.

Amateur Horse Racing to Close.

Amateur horse racing in the East will close with a two-day meeting at the Rose Tree Fox Hunting Club track, near Philadelphia. The dates scheduled are Wednesday and Saturday of next week. The club has rallied to its support a number of amateur horsemen prominent in Philadelphia and the South, who have been taking an active interest in bringing their meetings of the past to a prominence in keeping with the more pretentious ones of the country. Later on, in Virginia, two days will be provided at which liberal offerings are to be made. At Warrenton, one of the steeplechases, the Gold Cup, has added money value of $1,000, and those donating this purse have agreed to condition it for five years. The array of opportunities for those interested in racing for the sake of racing, shows the progress that has been made and is constantly growing in this particular line. Each meeting at each place has brought and will bring new recruits to the list of owners, who enter into the sport with new ideas, to hope to own a good horse and see him beat a neighbor's.

OHRT IN WINNING FORM.

Western Cyclist Captures Two Races at the Newark Track.

The spectacular riding of Ernest Ohrt of the Olympic Club of San Francisco furnished the feature of the bicycle meet at Newark yesterday. Ohrt, who holds the world's amateur championship, won both amateur races on the card, and outclassed the best riders in this country. Riding from scratch in the half-mile handicap, Ohrt circled the field, strung out for more than 100 yards in front of him, and won with ease to spare. Fred Taylor, the Eastern star, was barely able to remain in the wake of the winner, and finished second. Badly placed and apparently beaten a third of a mile from the finish in the three-mile scratch race, Ohrt cut loose a sprint, and won, with the other fifteen starters far in the rear. Taylor again finished second.

Frank Kramer was badly beaten by Reggie McNamara of Australia in a five-mile tandem-paced race, the latter winning by more than a lap. Kramer put up such a stubborn fight for three miles that the winner was forced to smash world's records to hold the lead. The time for the five miles was 8:56 2-5, an average of 1:46 to the mile.

Alf Goullet, the Australian sprinter, who won three professional races a week ago, attempted to repeat that performance but failed. He won one race, Pete Brassard, in which Jackie Clark was his opponent. Alf Grenda of Australia won the mile open professional, but was disqualified for switching Francesco Verri of Italy as they rounded the final turn. The latter was placed first. Goullet finished third, and by the disqualification drew down second money. Kramer failed to qualify for the final through the teaming of the riders in his

TO NOTIFY CARRANZA BY IDENTICAL NOTES

Washington Agent Will Speed with Them to the First Chief at the Border.

LAST CONFERENCE TODAY

American Federation of Catholic Societies Sends President a Strong Protest Against Recognition.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—Formal recognition of the Carranza Party as the de facto Government in Mexico will be announced immediately after the conclusion of the fifth and final session of the Pan-American conference to be held in the office of Secretary Lansing at the State Department tomorrow afternoon. The purpose of the conference is to determine the manner of extending such recognition.

All of the Latin American Governments represented in the conference by their Washington diplomatic representatives, have now approved the decision of the fourth meeting that the Carranza Party was the only party in Mexico possessing the material and moral essentials necessary for the recognition of a de facto Government in Mexico. Several other Latin American nations have indicated their approval of the plan. The method of recognition is all that remains to be determined.

Identical notes from the United States and several of the other countries will be handed to Eliseo Arredondo, the Carranza special agent in Washington, who will hasten to deliver them in person to General Carranza, who is now en route to the border. After that an Ambassador to Mexico will be designated by the President, and it is expected that General Carranza will at once name an Ambassador to the United States. President Wilson will also issue a proclamation laying an embargo on the shipment of arms from this country to Mexico, applicable only to shipments to persons or forces in opposition to the newly recognized Carranza Government.

General Alvaro Obregon has just made a long official report regarding operations in the fourteen Mexican States under his command as General of the Division of the Northwest, according to a cablegram received in Washington today from Jesus Acuña, Minister of Foreign Relations in the Carranza Cabinet. These States comprise the northern and western portions of Mexico, and the report states that the only organized opposition to the Carranzista Government in these States is confined to portions of the States of Sonora and Chihuahua. An expedition has been dispatched to the State of Sonora, and the Carranza forces there in smashing the Villista Army formerly commanded by General José Maytorena.

General Obregon says that many former Villista officers and soldiers are surrendering. Near Mazatlan, a large number of Mayo Indians have laid down their arms, saying they are tired of fighting and are anxious to go back to their farms. The Villista gunboat Bonita has also been captured at Mazatlan. One of General Obregon's first acts after obtaining control of the rich Laguna District was to lend $1,000,000 to the farmers of that region to aid them in moving their already matured cotton crops.

The cablegram received by the Carranza Agency today recites that "the steady advance in the value of the Constitutionalist paper peso is noted in business circles and accepted as one of the most important and significant results of the speedy approach of recognition of the Constitutionalist Government."

CHICAGO, Oct. 17.—In a statement issued here today Anthony Matre of Chicago, National Secretary of the American Federation of Catholic Societies, said the Federation had sent to President Wilson a vigorous protest against recognition of any leader or faction in Mexico that has been guilty of spoliation of church property and institutions.

"The Catholics of the United States demand that who ever is recognized by the Government should give absolute guarantee that the rights and privileges of all members of every faith shall be respected," said National Secretary Matre.

According to Mr. Matre the message to President Wilson took exception to any of the Mexican leaders "on whose shoulders rest the responsibility for sufferings that the church in Mexico has borne, and the guilt of the murder of the priests, confiscation of property desecration of churches, violation of Sisters, use of altars for unspeakable purposes, and continued interference with liberty of worship."

VILLA TO PRESS CAMPAIGN.

Prepares for a Rapid March Into the State of Sonora.

EL PASO, Oct. 17.—General Villa plans to lead his forces upon a campaign into the State of Sonora, according to advices received by State Department officials here. Previous reports had been received that General Villa intended soon to return to Juarez from Casas Grandes, where he is now quartered.

George C. Carothers, United States Government representative with General Francisco Villa, today requested the American Red Cross to investigate the condition and if possible give food and clothing to 2,000 women and children camp followers of the Villa army, sent back Saturday from the mobilization camp at Casas Grandes, Chihuahua.

It is said that the camp followers were sent to Juarez to render more mobile the movements of the Villa infantry force.

OBREGON PRAISES CARRANZA.

Tells Saltillo First Chief Deserves All the Credit for Their Victory.

Special to The New York Times.

SALTILLO, Mex., Oct. 17.—General Obregon, in a speech yesterday, on the arrival of General Carranza, said all the credit for the winning of the revolution against the Huerta faction, was due to the First Chief, and that all the leaders and soldiers would continue to follow him in spite of the fact that reactionists were trying to promote discord.

He added that he would support Carranza until every vestige of revolt was stamped out and the cause won for the rights of the people.

Carranza Expels Prominent Banker.

VERA CRUZ, Oct. 17.—José M. Pardo, the most prominent Spanish banker in southern Mexico, has been expelled from the country as an undesirable foreigner. He is now on his way to Havana. Senor Pardo has been operating recently in the money and sugar markets, and his activities were declared to be obstructive.

WANTS CHEAPER POSTAGE.

Senator Weeks Urges One-Cent Rate to Encourage Business.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—In a statement given out here today, Senator John W. Weeks of Massachusetts, who will be a candidate for the Presidential nomination in the next Republican National Convention, advocated one cent postage for local delivery letters as a means of encouraging business, which, he said, now would be in a condition of great depression if it were not for the activity created by the needs of the nations at war. Senator Weeks was chairman of the House Committee on Post Office and Post Roads and is a member of the corresponding committee of the Senate.

"Considering what it costs the Government to handle local delivery letters, the rate of postage is much too high," Senator Weeks said. "Should the rate be reduced from two cents to one cent I believe it would be of great benefit to business, the increased volume of mail as a result of the reduced rate would probably cause no material falling off in the revenues.

"Unless legislation made necessary by the European situation takes up all the time of the forthcoming Congress, I believe the drop letter postage proposition should and will be taken up in earnest.

"Aside from the business in this country at the present time created by the demands of the nations at war and some specialties like the manufacture of automobiles, the United States is in a prosperous condition. Without the war business this country would undoubtedly be in a condition of great commercial depression.

"We should adopt a legislative course encouraging business without detriment to the individual. Cheaper postage on local delivery letters would aid, small and large business alike. This alone amply justifies the Government in taking the step. And in all other ways the Government should be helpful in business affairs, not coercive and repressive."

TO ARGUE BIRD LAW TODAY.

Supreme Court Will Decide Who Is to Protect Migratory Fliers.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—Argument will be heard before the United States Supreme Court tomorrow on the question of the constitutionality of the Federal migratory bird law.

The progress of the case is being watched with interest by representatives of organizations of sportsmen and of bird preservation societies. T. Gilbert Pearson, Secretary for the National Association of Audubon Societies, said today:

"State laws intended for the protection of the migratory game bird have proved, woefully inadequate. In my opinion it is only through the enforcement of the Federal law that we can hope to prevent the practical extinction of many of our most valuable game birds.

"If the Supreme Court declares the law constitutional it will be an enormous step forward in the protection of migratory game birds and migratory insect-eating birds. It will mean that Congress will be called upon for large appropriations to enforce the law. Heretofore the most Congress has appropriated for the enforcement of this law in one year has been $50,000. New York State alone spends in the neighborhood of $200,000 a year for the protection of its game, and at least one-fourth of this is for the protection of migratory game."

PLAN CAMPAIGN FOR TRADE.

Germany Will Contest in South American Field with Us.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—An outline of the plans now being considered in Germany for an aggressive trade campaign to be waged in South America at the close of the war was made public today by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. The details of the organization of a "Trade League for South America," headed by Dr. Bernhard Dernburg, already have been made known in cable dispatches.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has for the last year conducted a vigorous extension campaign in South America, a dozen special commercial agents have visited the Southern continent, and since the beginning of the European war aggressive steps have been taken to obtain for manufacturers and merchants of the United States the markets left vacant by the belligerent countries. Bankers have established branches in various South American cities and already the trade of the United States with South and Central American countries shows a steady increase.

MAY GO HOME TO VOTE.

Wilson Gives Federal Employes from New Jersey Time Off for Election.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—President Wilson tomorrow will issue instructions that Government employes here who are citizens of New Jersey may return home Tuesday to vote at the special election on woman's suffrage.

The President himself will leave for Princeton early Tuesday morning to vote in favor of the suffrage amendment to the State Constitution.

THIEVES' AUTO CAPTURED.

But Occupants Dodge Policeman's Bullets and Escape.

Patrolman Sullivan, stationed at the Delaware, Lackawana & Western bridge, Jersey City, hailed a touring car containing two men early yesterday morning, and when they failed to stop he chased them on a motor cycle, overtaking them at Beach Street. The two men jumped out of the car and ran onto the railroad tracks when Sullivan fired two shots at them. They kept on, however.

In the car the policeman found two large rugs, three bales of silk, a bale of leather, and a box of lace curtains consigned to different concerns in Manhattan and Brooklyn. The police think they were stolen from a freight car. The number of the automobile was sent to Trenton.

AIDED ALLIES' LOAN AS PATRIOTIC DUTY

Fourteen Noted Americans Issue Statement Indorsing the Anglo-French Bonds.

BACKED FAITH WITH CASH

Explain Need of $500,000,000 Credit to Save Our Farmers and Workingmen from Disaster.

A strong indorsement of the $500,000,000 Anglo-French loan, in the form of a statement that has been signed by fourteen of the most prominent men in the Eastern half of the country was given out Saturday from the offices of Evarts, Choate & Sherman, at 60 Wall Street. The signers, all of whom state that they have subscribed for the bonds with full faith in the security of the investment and in the belief that all participants are helping the nation, are:

Daniel Catlin, St. Louis; Joseph H. Choate, New York; Charles W. Eliot, Cambridge, Mass.; Howard Elliott, Boston; Fairfax Harrison, Washington, D. C.; Henry L. Higginson, Boston; James J. Hill, St. Paul, Minn.; H. B. Ledyard, Detroit; Robert T. Lincoln, Washington, D. C.; Franklin D. Locke, Buffalo, N. Y.; Seth Low, New York; E. P. Ripley, Chicago, Theodore N. Vail, Lyndonville, Vt., and Henry Walters, Baltimore.

Trade Situation Explained.

The statement reads:

"This country has not been accustomed to extend credits upon a large scale to foreign countries, and many people do not understand what such credits mean to the maintenance and extension of our agricultural and commercial interests. Each one of us who signs this statement has been asked so many times to express his opinion on the subject that we have decided, in this way, to place before the American people our understanding of the plain facts in connection with the loan of $500,000,000 to Great Britain and France.

"During normal times Great Britain and France purchase from us, every year, about $750,000,000 in farm products and other commodities, and we buy heavily from them. Ordinarily the payments by one country to the other are accomplished without shipment of coin, the indebtedness of one country going to offset that of the other, and the difference, usually constituting a small balance, is covered by gold shipments or otherwise.

"Now, owing to the war, our purchases from Great Britain and France [our two chief customers] have fallen off, and their purchases from us have increased enormously. Thus the total trade balance in our favor for the year ended last June was over $1,000,000,000, of which $947,000,000, or over 90 per cent., was represented by the trade balance against these two countries. It is clearly impossible for these countries to continue to meet these heavy balances through the ordinary channels of international exchange. Such heavy shipments of gold as would be required, for instance, are not only out of the question, but are unwise to undertake. Moreover, this country already holds a stock of gold larger than its immediate uses require.

What Loan Means to Americans.

"America must, therefore, find a solution of the problem of financing, for a time, this favorable trade movement, or else run the risk of losing a large part of its export business, for the United States appears to be by no means the only country in the world where Great Britain and France can buy, on favorable terms, the grain and other commodities they require. If these two great nations are obliged materially to decrease their purchases from us the result may be lower prices for our farm products and less work for our factories.

"In other words, if we want these countries to continue as our best customers and thus to bring increasing substance to our communities, we must allow them to settle by some system of deferred payments for the commodities they buy from us.

"This loan, therefore, which, in total amount, is only two-thirds of these nations' normal purchases from us each year, is simply a system of deferred payments. In other words, we are lending to Great Britain and France $500,000,000, so that they may purchase from us things that we want to sell to them.

"To the United States this loan means:

"1. That not one dollar of the money loaned will leave our shores.

"2. That every dollar will go, directly or indirectly, to some American farmer, workingman, merchant, or manufacturer, in cash payment for foodstuffs, clothing, raw material, labor, and manufactured products that the English and French people need.

Security of the Loan.

"3. That there will be established in this country a commercial credit just as important to us as to England and France, because it will be used to increase our trade and permit the outflow of our surplus products.

"4. That this country finally recognizes that, in order to further American trade, it must become a creditor nation, giving credit to any solvent and friendly nation that may be entitled to it.

"The security for this loan is the income and property of the two richest nations of Europe. The combined wealth of England and France is estimated at $135,000,000,000—275 times the amount of this loan. The population of the two countries is almost one hundred millions. The proposed loan is practically the only external obligation of the two nations; such a loan being, as we view it, a first claim upon the revenues and wealth of the nations issuing it.

"The total internal debt of the two nations is considerably under twenty billion dollars, and is less than one year's income of the people of these two nations. This loan will increase their indebtedness only 2½ per cent.

"Having thus no question as to the fundamental safety and prompt payment of the loan, we have each subscribed to it believing, moreover, that every American citizen who participates in the loan will be contributing substantially to the commercial prosperity of the whole nation."

FRATERNAL ORDERS GAIN.

Report Increase of Assets to State Department.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Oct. 17.—Fraternal orders, which are under the supervision of the Superintendent of Insurance, report that they had a prosperous year in 1914. The totals made public by Superintendent Phillips follow: Assets $146,350,016, increase $13,388,415; liabilities $21,757,214, increase $4,293,063; income $87,693,859, decrease $5,241,985; disbursements $74,873,656, decrease $1,908,839; insurance in force $6,388,925,635, increase $188,880,756.

The large excess of assets over liabilities is explained in the fact that the fraternal orders carry no statutory policy reserve in their annual returns.

The returns of the co-operative fire insurance companies show small increase in assets, liabilities, income and disbursements over the previous year. The insurance in force at the end of 1914 was $629,679,828, an increase of about $7,500,000.

The assessment life and accident associations also show small general increases in their business over 1913 and were carrying at the end of the year $94,204,048 of insurance in force, an increase of about $2,000,000.

NEW YORKER FOUND DEAD.

Harrington a Victim of Strangulation in an Atlanta Hotel.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga. Oct. 17.—R. W. Harrington, who registered from New York, was found dead this morning in a room at the Ansley Hotel. He had been dead many hours. Detectives assigned to the case declare he came to his death by strangulation, but whether he died in a choking spell or was murdered they hazarded no guess. The door was found locked.

Harrington had said he would be joined in Atlanta soon by a friend, and had made a hotel reservation for him. Detectives are awaiting the friend's arrival.

Robert W. Harrington, 42, was a cotton salesman for Stavert, Zigomala & Co. of 66 Leonard Street, and lived at 28 Manhattan Avenue. He had been connected for fifteen years with the H. B. Claflin Company. He was married, but had no children.

Mrs. Harrington said last night that she had received a telegram from an Atlanta hotel, which told briefly of her husband's death. Her husband, she said, left this city on Sept. 6, with an old friend, James Teadwell, a linen salesman, to make a tour of the South. On Saturday she received a letter from Mr. Harrington, dated Chattanooga. He told her he would spend Sunday in Atlanta, and hoped to get back to New York on Oct. 27. He was then in the best of health, she said, and happy over the fact that he would soon be home.

TOOLS FROM THE ARCTIC.

Implements Used by "Blonde" Eskimos in Philadelphia Museum.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17.—Through the liberality of John Wanamaker, who supplied the funds, the University Museum, Philadelphia, has been enabled to purchase the large collection of Eskimo ethnological specimens gathered by Captain Joseph Bernard, who spent five years in the arctic, cruising in his little trading vessel the Teddy Bear, reaching Nome a year ago. In the opinion of mining experts this collection is the most extraordinary in the Western Hemisphere.

There are nearly four hundred specimens, representing every phase of culture of the 2,000 Eskimos of Coronation Gulf and Victoria Land, who until recently have had no communication with white men and apparently little with other Eskimos. The distinguishing characteristic of these Eskimos is that they use copper implements made from ingots of native copper which they found at the mouth of the Copper River which flows into the Coronation Gulf.

It is these Eskimos whom Stefansson is reported to have discovered and among whom he says he found a blonde type. Captain Bernard says he preceded Stefansson and was there when the latter arrived. He remained two years after Stefansson's departure owing to the fact that the ice was so thick that he could not get out in 1913.

I. W. W. WIRE TO WILSON.

Say They Will Get Rights in Jersey by Law or "Otherwise."

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., Oct. 17.—Just across the city line, in the Haledon Woods, I. W. W. agitators addressed a crowd of nearly 1,000 men and women, silk workers of the City of Paterson, this afternoon, telling them that it was time to strike while the mills were filled with orders, and declaring that the workers, by using their strong arms, might "get somewheres." Telegrams were sent to President Wilson and Governor Fielder advising them that the I. W. W. would be satisfied by law, or they would obtain their rights in "another manner."

The speakers were Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, Adolph Lessig, and Joseph Ettor.

A solemn mass was celebrated in the morning by Mgr. Isaac P. Whelan, pastor of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Newark, a former pastor of the Bayonne church. The sermon was delivered by Mgr. James Mooney, President of Seton Hall College. In the evening vespers were celebrated by the Rev. Charles J. Doyle, of Bayonne, and Mgr. Charles Mackel, of St. Patrick's Church, Elizabethport, delivered the sermon. The celebration will continue today, tomorrow and Wednesday.

St. Mary's Church, of which the Rev. Andrew M. Egan is pastor, numbers 6,500 members and is one of the largest in the diocese. The lower part of the parish was converted into St. Andrew's parish two years ago and took 2,500 members from the mother church.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION IN AMERICA AND EUROPE

The stock market has not regained the buoyancy which it lost more than ten days ago. It will be recalled that the speculation in the industrial list had been speeded up to such a point at that time that prominent financial interests took counsel among themselves as to whither such a movement was tending, with the result that speculators were soon made aware that they could not carry stocks which had had such phenomenal rises except as they were able to put up ample security to protect banks against a serious reaction. That check was followed by a spirited upturn in the railroad issues, which previous to that had hardly participated in any of the advantages of a bull market. The reaction in the industrial issues was severe while it lasted, but it did not last long, and the subsequent recovery was probably too fast for the market's welfare. At any rate, the market entered the past week with its momentum considerably reduced, and while many issues made up their losses and even forged on to new high records, the list, as a whole, did little more than mark time in the six trading days. It was a matter for satisfaction to the more conservative element in Wall Street that the volume of dealings was greatly contracted in the week.

Market predictions are generally worth little because they cannot take account of some of the most vital points which influence prices, but it does not appear that the present bull movement has run its course. It may well be that the highest prices seen in some of the issues will not be reached again, and it may be that from now on trading will be under better control, but the fundamental conditions on which the advance was based have not changed materially. It would be a sign of health if the markets should turn aside from some of the war-order specialities which have figured so largely in the public's participation and show more interest in standard railroad issues, which ought to be in a much better position now than they were six months back. A one-sided market, where investors and speculators are practically all interested in the industrials to the exclusion of the railroads, or in the railroads to the exclusion of the industrials, is a dangerous market, owing to the likelihood of a sudden readjustment of relative values. Offhand, it cannot be said that the industrials are now selling too high, or the railroads too low, but the advance in many of the former has undoubtedly anticipated all the improvement that can come for months ahead, while certain of the railroads have been victims of a neglect that seems in a fair way to be remedied. The past week saw a certain amount of readjustment in prices of the mysterious war stocks, and this served as a warning against the continuation of unintelligent speculation. Too many traders have strained their resources to carry high priced war issues without first assuring themselves that the prices are justified by the business outlook.

The stock market always runs ahead of favorable developments that it is able to foresee, and it was not surprising to find that the completion of the Anglo-French loan negotiations exerted no helpful effect upon prices. Shrewd investors knew that the dispatch of the commission to this country for the purpose of borrowing money was assurance that a large credit would be arranged. An interesting possibility was opened following the completion of the big loan when many of the same bankers who had worked out the details of the bond offering with the visiting financiers took up with Sir Edward Holden the matter of arranging additional commercial credits which would be more directly for the benefit of ordinary trade as distinguished from that due to the war. This supplementary credit is likewise almost assured by the fact that bankers on both sides of the water recognize the need for it. It is not likely to take the form of another security offering, and it will probably not be arranged by Government authorities. American bankers favor the establishment of banking credits here as a means for taking between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000 in bills out of the sterling exchange market.

It was so recently that we were hearing complaints from railroads serving practically all parts of the country that business was too depressed to warrant further investment of capital in transportation facilities that it was something of a shock to hear last week that some of the carriers are becoming embarrassed for lack of rolling stock. Such news from the New Haven offices was particularly surprising, in view of the fact that industry in New England had been seriously hurt in the early months of the war. The fact is, of course, that it has been very difficult for even the better railroads to raise money in the sums that they would like to have had for the purpose of laying more track and buying additional equipment. Rather their worries have arisen from the necessity for cutting down operations in so far as possible to meet losses in their gross revenues. A real period of prosperity would find itself months ahead of the railroads. Already a movement of the record crop in the Northwest is beginning to embarrass carriers which have not bought their normal quota of cars, and the demand for equipment from the agricultural sections comes at the same time that the steel and manufacturing sections in the East are running into a welcome period of big business. The situation of the railroads is not as comfortable as it might be, for with more than one-sixth of the country's total mileage in receivership the public has grown wary of railroad securities. Yet new financing must be done to equip the railroads for industrial and agricultural prosperity, and a period of increasing, instead of decreasing, net earnings would do much to restore railroad bonds to popular favor.

Money remains remarkably easy, despite the reports of greater business activity and the heavy drain on New York in connection with the initial payment on the $500,000,000 loan. Commercial paper remains in large supply, with the rates of discount easy at the figures established some time ago. Money is still a drug, not even the great period of activity in the market having succeeded in calling into use the large reserves built up in the period of contraction. Business reports from all parts of the country continue to be encouraging, and even without the great help of orders emanating directly from war needs the volume of trade would make a fairly satisfactory showing today. Certainly, in view of the unfavorable possibilities that confronted this country just a year ago, when the emergency methods were being taken to preserve the credit of New York City abroad, there is cause for congratulation over the extent of the recovery brought about in such a short time and against the handicap of demoralization in Europe.

Railroad reports for the year ended June 30, which are still coming to hand, are more satisfactory in the promise that they hold out for the future than for the showing made in a period of depression. The Great Northern, which had been piling up larger and larger earnings each year with the development of the Northwest, had a setback in 1914-1915, which cost the road a decrease of close to $10,000,000 in its gross earnings, a shrinkage of 12.6 per cent. Such a loss in revenues made it necessary to economize at every possible point, a policy which the company adopted with such success that nearly $11,000,000 was taken from operating expenses. A decrease of 23 per cent. in operating costs is encouraging as showing what a railroad can do when forced to trim its expenditures, but it is not a feat that can be repeated except as years of liberal outlays intervene during which rents in the property can be mended.

GOOD TONE IN LONDON.

Money Market Continues Easy—Discussing Future Plans.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The payment of an installment of 10 per cent. on the war loan on Tuesday, estimated at £30,000,000, made slight difference to the monetary situation, and the market continues easy. Supplies of loanable funds have been increased through large Government disbursements for war purposes, and the repayment of Treasury bills, including £15,000,000 yesterday. The Exchequer balance of Saturday, a week ago, was only £2,500,000, which directed increased attention to the question of further Government borrowing, but no information is yet available as to the method likely to be followed. No change has occurred in the opinion that a long-term loan has been postponed until early next year, when the whole field of Government finance must be surveyed afresh.

Meanwhile, E. S. Montagu, Financial Secretary of the Treasury, suggests that the country must contribute, by taxation or investment, 50 per cent. of its income. Exchequer bond issues running from two to five years are favored in conservative quarters, with dependence also on Treasury bill sales. It is suggested that instead of raising the rate on Treasury bills, which would work to increase the cost of Exchequer bonds, bankers' money should be made available at 4 per cent. instead of the 4½ per cent. rate that has been artificially maintained. This possibility did a small supply of mercantile bills made discounts weak, the effective rate being 4⅝ per cent.

The finance bill was issued on Tuesday, giving the Government's proposals in greater detail than before. Chief interest centres in the profits tax of 50 per cent. on earnings of corporations in excess of the level prevailing before the war began. The proposal has been accepted by the public with the exception of minor details. The Anglo-French loan bill passed the House of Commons on Tuesday under some criticism and the presentation of misleading comparisons, which were sharply criticised by leading organs of the press. Reports from New York of further arrangements being contemplated for the assistance of exchange rates is believed to indicate additional credits.

The visit of the Canadian Minister of Finance to New York to confer with the Anglo-French Commission on sterling exchange transactions with Canada, aroused much interest. The great advantage of preparing plans well ahead of possible requirements is well recognized here.

Stocks were active early in the week, with a good tone, closing with trading dull, partly because of uneasiness over the Balkan situation, although the Foreign Secretary's statement Thursday added little to existing information. The recognition of Carranza caused a sharp advance in some Mexican issues.

PARIS MARKET STEADY.

Demand for Mexican Issues Follows Recognition of Carranza.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 17.—The week's feature in the security markets was a strong demand for Mexican issues, following the recognition of Carranza, and the continued rise of Spanish railroad shares. Russian industrial issues displayed a fair degree of improvement, and shares of the Bank of France were firm. Copper stocks were subjected to realizing sales toward the end of the week, but the Bourse closed steady, uninfluenced by internal political developments. Rentes left off at 66.50.

The fortnightly carryover was arranged in satisfactory fashion, the average rate being 4 per cent. No further developments in war finance occurred, and exchange rates were firm during the week, sterling being quoted at 27.51 on London, with the New York cable rate 5.88. The indirect taxes for September showed an increase of 100,000,000 francs as compared with that month a year ago.

$1,500,000 Gold from England.

The American liner Philadelphia, which arrived yesterday from Liverpool, brought nearly $1,500,000 in gold consigned to various New York banks. Among her passengers was A. C. Kirk, an Assistant Secretary of the United States Embassy at Berlin, who left for Washington in the afternoon. He said that when he left Berlin Ambassador Gerard was going into the country for a short vacation.

RAILROAD BURDENS IN THE SOUTHWEST

66 Per Cent. of Total Mileage in Receivership Lies in That Region.

RELIEF MAY BE DEMANDED

Commerce Commission and the State Legislatures Expected to Take Action.

The successive announcements in the last six months of receiverships for three big railroad systems which operate extensively in the Southwest has commanded the attention of many railroad men and bankers in this section of the country. It is expected that some frank suggestions will be made to the Interstate Commerce Commission by prominent bankers, and, through the commission, to the Legislatures of the Southwestern States.

Statistics in the current Railway Age Gazette show that 66 per cent., or nearly 28,000, of the 42,000 miles of railroad in receivers' hands in this country is in the Southwest belt. One-sixth of the entire railroad mileage of the country is in receivership, and 66 per cent. of this mileage lies in Texas, Mississippi, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, and a few neighboring States.

The receiverships for the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, the Missouri Pacific, and the Missouri, Kansas & Texas have strengthened the opinion of those who contend that it is impossible for any road to meet the conditions of the Southwest and make a successful showing.

Prior to Jan. 1, according to the statistics presented by The Gazette, sixty-nine roads, with a total mileage of 21,048, were in receivership. These included such large roads as the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton, the International & Great Northern, the Pere Marquette, the St. Louis & San Francisco, and the Wabash, each operating more than 1,000 miles. Twelve additional roads went into receivership after Jan. 1, and the combined mileage of these roads is 20,940, practically the same as that of the sixty-nine roads that collapsed before Jan. 1.

After the beginning of the year, therefore, when the general business depression began to be more generally felt, the time was exceptionally unfortunate for receiverships. The Gazette says:

"It will be noted that the only roads of any consequence that are in receivers' hands are not at least in part in the Southwest are the Western Pacific, operating 946 miles; the Colorado Midland, operating 338 miles; the Georgia & Florida, operating 350 miles, and the Algoma Central & Hudson Bay, operating 332 miles.

"The roads in the hands of receivers in the Southwest have been the victims of pernicious State regulation, and they all have too large a proportion of their capital securities in the form of bonds or fixed interest-bearing notes. The Southwestern States have indulged in railway regulation to a greater extent than any other three States in the Union. It is unlawful to double-head a freight train in Texas, so as to obtain the economies of heavier train loading. This is one instance of State regulation, but it is mentioned as a sample of the length to which the Southwestern States have gone in attempting to cripple the earning power of their railroads.

"If the Southwest had been experiencing a long period of business depression, if there had been crop failures, if a city like Dallas had had a boom and it had gone flat and this had been characteristic of other cities throughout this region; if prices for agricultural products had been abnormally low, we might assign any one of these as a prime cause of the disproportionate railroad mileage in the hands of receivers in the Southwest; but no one of these conditions has existed. The farmers have been growing rich; real estate values in the cities have increased phenomenally; building has been going on in the Southwest even when the East was in a state of stagnation; prices for agricultural products have been high and steady, with the exception, of course, of cotton; the railroad business is the only business, barring lumber, that has gone from bad to worse in the Southwest.

"Is it any wonder, therefore, that bankers are reluctant to put new capital into the railroads of this section of the country?"

SURFACE CARS' POOR YEAR.

Subway Construction and Business Depression Blamed.

General business depression and the interference with traffic resulting from subway construction are blamed for the showing made in the year ended June 30 by the New York Railways Company, which operates 154 miles of surface track in thi scity, inclusive of the 21 miles of horse car track. The gross operating revenues were $18,399,767, a decrease of $461,070, or 3.06 per cent., and the net income available for interest on the adjustment mortgage bonds was $961,444, a decrease of $151,465, compared with 1914. After paying $961,880 on the adjustment mortgage bonds there remained a surplus for the year of $64.16.

In September, 1914, the new rule affecting the exchange of transfers between the downtown lines of the New York Railways and the Staten Island ferries was put into effect. The city gets 2 cents and the New York Railways get 3 cents on each joint fare. Statistics showing how this joint traffic moves are presented in the report and indicate that the municipal ferry throws more business to the street car company than the latter gives to the ferry line.

"During the periods between Sept. 15, 1914, to June 30, 1915," says the report of President Shonts, "there were 1,317,125 transfers lifted on our lines, while the Municipal Ferry lifted 1,185,449 transfers, the average number of passengers per month transferring from the Staten Island Ferry to our lines being 138,646, while the number of passengers transferred from this company's lines to the Municipal Ferry averaged 124,784 per month. The total of such passengers carried during the period of nine and one-half months was 2,502,584, an average of 263,430 a month.

"The amount of gross revenue collected by the City of New York under this transfer arrangement during the period indicated was $50,051, and by this company $75,077. The receipts during the past few months indicate a growth in this traffic."

Mr. Shonts says in his report that the franchise tax assessment suits brought by the company against the city in 1912, 1913, and 1914, should be compromised out of court. The company won in similar cases brought in 1910 and 1911. There is a chance of getting a refund of taxes already paid if the suits now pending are successful, the report says.

PASSENGER RATES TOO LOW.

Traffic Men Will Discuss Increases at French Lick, Ind.

In an effort to give the United States a uniform ticket system, passenger traffic managers and general passenger agents of railroads and steamship lines from all parts of the Union will meet in French Lick Springs, Ind., on Oct. 26 and 27 under the direction of the American Association of Passenger Traffic Officers. The meeting will also shape an appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to increase certain rates, basing their plea upon statistics compiled by the commission. Decisions of the United States Supreme Court laying down the principle that each class of traffic must earn its share of expenses will also be an argument for an increase of certain passenger rates.

Among those from New York who will attend the French Lick conference are G. A. Cullen, passenger traffic manager, Delaware, Lackawanna & Western; C. L. Hunter, Vice Chairman, Trunk Line Passenger Committee; W. C. Hope, general passenger agent, Central Railroad of New Jersey; C. S. Lee, passenger traffic manager, and George H. WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

Many people are already asking "When will the bull market culminate?" Our organization has been making a careful study of underlying influences in recent weeks with a view to throwing light on this problem. This week's BAROMETER OF BUSINESS CONDITIONS gives a direct forecast of what is probably in store for us during 1916 and after the close of the war.

Everybody interested in either industrial or railroad stocks should read this forecast. A few copies only are available.

JAPANESE GETTING OUR ORIENT TRADE

Consular Reports Show China Buys More Cotton Goods from Island Kingdom.

BOYCOTT PROVES A FIASCO

America Hampered by Higher Cost of Labor and Lack of Shipping Facilities.

Many observers of the Far Eastern markets, particularly in China, have reached the conclusion that it will be only a short time before American exports of cotton cloths, as well as of other American products, will be eliminated by Japanese competition. Consular reports and reports from special investigators of the Department of Commerce show the rapid progress being made by Japan in eliminating American competition in China.

While the boycott instituted several months ago by the Chinese against Japanese goods as a protest against Japan's demands on the Peking Government reached considerable magnitude, those familiar with the situation anticipate no permanent setback to Japan's commercial ambitions in China. Japanese manufacturers, relying on the backing of the Imperial Government, have continued to add to their plants with the object of flooding China, and eventually India, with cotton fabrics and other products manufactured at such low cost as to kill competition from Western countries.

Light is thrown on the progress of the cotton cloth industry of Japan in a report last week by an American Consul, which shows that 1B per cent. increase in production and 22 per cent. in the exports of cotton yarn marked the activities of the Japanese cotton mills in 1914, despite the war. Exports of piece goods remained practically stationary, but radical changes occurred in the shipments to China and Kwangtung—to China 27,042,-188 yen worth, against 19,874,582 yen in 1913; to Kwangtung, 3,408,548 yen, against 9,260,554 yen. At the close of 1914 the Japanese cotton industry boasted 389,910 more spinning spindles, 19,094 more twisting spindles, and 1,660 more looms than it had a year and a half previous.

American Trade Falls Off.

Meanwhile statistics of the Department of Commerce covering seven months, ending with July, show that in this time American exports of all kinds to China totaled $12,840,996, compared with $16,084,835 in the like period of 1914, and $16,048,460 for the seven months of 1913. Thus the loss in the seven months of 1915, compared with the preceding period, reached $3,193,839. Coming to the item of cotton cloths in the seven months the exports to China had a value of $707,709, representing 13,-200,353 yards, as against $2,489,115, representing 35,187,417 yards in the like period of 1914.

Experts in the cotton cloth trade, while making allowances for the curtailment in shipping facilities, read in these figures the extinction of export business to China, except perhaps in certain specialties and heavy goods, such as duck. According to these men Japan is taking over the business formerly done in China by American exporters. The Chinese themselves also are rapidly increasing their manufacturing facilities.

Commercial Agent Ralph M. Odell, writing from Shanghai under date of Aug. 3 to the Department of Commerce, which sent the agent to canvass the cotton cloth situation in Japan and China, has this to say:

"American manufacturers must turn their attention to other classes of cotton goods, particularly gray and white shirtings, prints, poplins, Italians, Venetians, and velvets—lines in which the Chinese and Japanese mills do not compete, but which are supplied in large quantities by England—if they expect to extend the sale of their goods in this large and important market."

Chinese Customs Report.

Further testimony regarding Japanese textile activities in China are found in the quarterly report of the Chinese Customs Department covering imports of cotton yarns and cloths from January to March of this year, Japanese imports all showing an increase over the figures for the corresponding period of last year—20 per cent. in cotton yarn, 24 per cent. in gray shirtings, 26 per cent. in sheetings, 68 per cent. in figured cloths, ("aya munen,") and 20 per cent. in T-cloths. Indian cotton yarn showed a falling off for the period of 13 per cent., and a decrease is also recorded for European and American cotton cloth, while Chinese cotton yarn showed a steady increase.

Apart from the Japanese competition to which American exporters of cotton goods are subjected, there are the high freight charges to be reckoned with and the shortage in the available steamer tonnage, both directly traceable to the war.

Here, again, the Japanese are making feverish haste to take advantage of the situation by putting in commission new vessels, while the Imperial Government is providing heavy subsidies for such lines.

New York factors in the cotton goods export trade to China are also handicapped by the closing of the Panama Canal for several months. They also stated that the withdrawal of the fleet of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company from the Pacific Ocean was another blow at export trade.

HER HUSBAND BLIND, WIFE TAKES POISON

Benino Tashjian, Oriental Rug Importer, Reduced to Poverty by Loss of Sight.

DAUGHTER FLEES IN TERROR

Runs to Neighbor for Protection When She Sees Mother Prepare to Kill Herself.

Mrs. Marie Tashjian, who lives with her husband and daughter Rena in a little apartment on the third floor of 3,153 Broadway, near 127th Street, was taken to Knickerbocker Hospital yesterday morning suffering from bichloride of mercury poisoning. The surgeons hope to save her live, and the woman, now repentant, is doing her best to aid in the fight against death. The police made an investigation during the day, and bit by bit the facts which explained her act were brought out.

Five years ago Benino Tashjian was an importer of Oriental rugs with a prosperous business. His eyes became affected, and soon he was blind. He fought hard to keep up his business, but gradually lost it. Even then, for a time, there was enough money left to support his family, but yesterday his only means of income, it was said, was the selling of newspapers. He was hopeful of again becoming rich, but his wife had no such illusion. The daughter is lame.

Mrs. Tashjian became nervous and lost much of her good health. The breaking point came yesterday. At 6 o'clock Rena limped to the apartment of Mrs. Gertrude Walsh on the same floor and in a frightened voice asked her for aid.

"Mamma has got poison and she's trying to make me take it, and I'm afraid she'll kill papa," the child said, according to Mrs. Walsh, who added that she could hear the mother screaming.

While Rena was in the Walsh apartment Mrs. Tashjian quieted down and realized that she had taken a deadly poison. Throwing a bathrobe about her, she ran into the street, up Broadway to Manhattan Street, and then across Old Broadway, where she found Patrolman Murray of the West 125th Street Station. She told him what she had done, and he summoned an ambulance.

The daughter went to the police station in the afternoon. She firmly denied that her mother had attempted to make her take the poison or had threatened her father.

When a reporter called at the apartment in the afternoon Mr. Tashjian was sitting on a couch with his forehead in his hands. He told the bare facts in a low, colorless voice, and said "yes" when asked if his wife had been melancholy and nervous of late.

TO HUMANIZE THE LAW.

Judge Swann Tells What District Attorney Should Do.

Judge Edward Swann, Democratic candidate for District Attorney, spoke at the monthly meeting of the Young Folks' League of the Hebrew Infant Asylum at the Hotel Astor, yesterday. His candidacy was referred to by Sol Wolerstein, the President of the league, who introduced him, but Judge Swann himself avoided any direct references to politics. In his comments on the duties of the District Attorney's office he said he was not referring to any particular District Attorney. He said:

"The tendency of the age is toward humanizing the criminal law. A great deal has been done in this direction during the last eight years, when I have particularly observed the workings of the law. The old theory was to brand the evil doer as a criminal and leave him that way. Would it not be better to convert what is a liability of the State into an asset? Would it not be better to study the criminal and try to set him back on the right path?

"Since the present method makes the criminal worse, why not have the duties of the District Attorney extended? It means extra work and he will not be paid any more. But why not look into the criminal's associations, his environment? He should go further than that. He should submit to the judges before sentence all available data. He should make recommendations as to the place to send the convicted man—State's prison or the penitentiary.

"Ten years ago if any one had suggested these things he would have been laughed at, but they are going to be done within a short time. I would not like to tell you how soon they are going to be done. I may say, though, that before this great globe revolves again about the sun these things will be put into practice."

Judge Swann's headquarters at Broadway and Forty-third Street, is in charge of Alfred J. Talley. Thomas M. Mulry, President of the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, is chairman of the committee. Among the Vice Chairmen are Morgan J. O'Brien, Warren W. Foster, Henry A. Gildersleeve, Nathan Straus, Samuel Untermyer, John G. Milburn, Jr., William F. Schneider, George Gordon Battle, Samuel J. Bloomingdale, John M. Bowers, Abram I. Elkus, John B. Stanchfield, Robert E. Dowling, Bryan L. Kennelly, John Temple Graves, William Church Osborn, and William Sohmer.

FIRST VOTERS' RECEPTION.

Citizenship the Theme in Program for 20,000 on Oct. 29.

Invitations will be sent out this week to 20,000 men who will cast their first vote on Nov. 2 to attend a "First Voters" reception at the Lewisohn Stadium of the City College on Friday evening, Oct. 29. This "Citizenship Reception of the City of New York in Honor of First Voters" has been planned by Immigration Commissioner Frederic C. Howe, Chairman of the committee asked for by President of the Board of Alderman McAneny to prepare a welcome for the new voters.

"Because this is to be the Citizenship Day Reception," said Commissioner Howe last night, "it must not be considered as a celebration for immigrants only. It is for first voters as such, although, of course, many of them will have come to this country as immigrants. The purpose is to emphasize citizenship, the meaning and obligations of democracy and the dignity of the ballot. Citizenship is taken too much as a matter of course. Through the courtesy of the Board of Elections, the name of all those who will cast their first ballot next month has been obtained and invitations will be sent to them as well as to 1,000 guests; women will be welcome to attend."

The program for Oct. 29 will include speeches, music, motion pictures, tableaux and fireworks. President Wilson will send a letter to be read. Mayor Mitchel and Secretary of Labor Wilson will be the speakers of the evening.

MULLAN TO QUIT TAX JOB.

Mayor's Former Law Partner Assessed Billions.

Tax Commissioner George V. Mullan, former law partner of Mayor Mitchel, is going to quit his city job this week. It was Mr. Mullan who, with Commissioner Shipley, directed the recent assessment which put $3,000,000,000 additional on the personal tax books, most of which has been sworn off, or promises to be. His salary is $7,000 a year.

Mr. Mullan said last night that the perils of his personal assessment undertaking had no bearing on his proposed resignation.

5 FIRE DEATHS EVOKE OFFICIAL WARNING

20,000 Buildings Like That at 2,127 Third Avenue, Says Commissioner Murphy.

LEGAL REQUIREMENTS MET

Tenants Urged to Study Means of Egress — Lighted Candle as Cause of the Fatality.

After an investigation of a fire in the tenement house at 2,127 Third Avenue, near 116th Street, in which five persons were burned to death early yesterday morning, John J. Murphy, Tenement House Commissioner, last night, expressed the opinion that all of the tenants would have been saved, had they used the fire escapes instead of the stairways

Mr. Murphy was unable to place the blame for the fire, and the most plausible explanation offered by the police was that a tenant had left a lighted candle in a coal bin in the cellar, where the fire started. There was a report that a bulkhead door leading to the roof had been locked and that this was responsible for the loss of life, but Mr. Murphy denied that. The door, he said, was latched from the inside and could have been opened easily by any one seeking escape.

There are 20,000 buildings of the same class, some better, some worse, in the city, Mr. Murphy said, and he warned the tenants to give a little forethought to means of escape if they wished to avoid a similar tragedy in the event of fire. These buildings, he explained, met the requirements of the present law, and nothing could be done further to safeguard the tenants unless the Legislature gave his department new laws and more power. He dictated a statement of his findings.

The tenement at 2,127 Third Avenue is a five-story structure of a kind that provided little resistance to the flames, which swept up the cellar stairs and cut off escape from the upper floors by means of the stairways, a few minutes after it was discovered. There were ten families in the building, and as they rushed into the hallways, panic-stricken and screaming, they were choked and driven back by the smoke and flames. Five died, and two were burned so seriously that they were taken to the Harlem Hospital.

GROCHAL, IRVING, 4 years old.
GROCHAL, Mrs. NETTIE, 34.
WENZ, ANNA, 15.
WENZ, Mrs. JULIA, 35.
WENZ, MAY, 13.

The Injured.

O'BRIEN, Mrs. CARRIE C., 26 years old; burned about arms and legs.
O'BRIEN, CHARLES, 30; burned on arms, legs, and face.

The condition of Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien was considered serious, as it was believed they had inhaled smoke and flames. Mrs. Christopher Joas was burned painfully, but her condition was not grave.

Mrs. Grochal lived on the third floor. She was driven to the top floor by the flames, and she was found dead there with the body of her little son clasped in her arms. The bodies of Mrs. Wenz and her two daughters were found on a bed in their flat on the fourth floor. It is believed that they tried to escape by the stairway and were driven back. All of the tenants who fled to the fire escapes in the rear were saved. Others who attempted to crawl from the front windows after finding the stairway cut off by flames were assisted to the fire escape of an adjoining café by firemen under Captain Christie, of Hook and Ladder 43, and Detectives Ryan, Mahoney, Conroy, Cassetti, and Kahn, of the Third Branch Detective Bureau in East 116th Street.

There were daring rescues as firemen and detectives crawled along a stone ledge at the front of the building to the aid of the frightened tenants. Others hurried to the roof and the rear fire escapes to give aid.

Charles Grochal, husband of Mrs. Nettie Grochal escaped by jumping to the fire escape of the café, and others who fled to safety in that manner were Mrs. Gussie Lubresky, and her daughter, Anna, who were found on a window ledge on the second floor. Charles Wenz, whose wife and daughter were burned to death, was in the street when the fire started and was not permitted to enter the building.

In commenting on the fire, Commissioner Murphy said:

"This emphasized the importance of tenants taking thought in advance as to what should be done in case of fire. It was an old building, and lacked the requirements for the protection of life in new tenements, but from such examination as I could make today, it conformed to all the requirements which the law demands for buildings of this class. It was occupied by two families on a floor, the apartments running through from street to yard. It had party walls, balcony fire escapes connecting each apartment with the windows of buildings on either side. The women and children who lost their lives were doubtless panic stricken and did not think of any means of escape but the stairs."

After denying that the bulkhead door leading to the roof was locked, Mr. Murphy said:

"The tenants of tenement houses will not consent to have a bulkhead door open from the outside because of the fear of burglaries and other crimes.

"It is worthy of note that the building had no dumb waiter shaft or air-shaft which so often leads to the sudden spread of fire. The truth of the matter is that had the occupants used the fire escapes provided there need have been no loss of life. Of course, short of reconstruction along the lines of new law tenements, buildings like the burned building cannot be made absolutely safe. They have wooden stairs, the first tier of beams is of wood, and there are stairs within the building leading to the cellar. The stair leading to the cellar was the cause of the spread of fire in this case. There are probably 20,000 buildings of this class, some better, some worse in the city. All the law permits us to do to make them safe has been done. If further steps are to be taken they must be authorized by the Legislature."

The damage to the building was estimated at $20,000. While there were rumors that the fire was incendiary Fire Marshals Brophy and De Maligmon could find no evidence to substantiate them.

DEFENSE SYSTEM TO COST A BILLION

Government Hopes to Make Our Shores Impregnable in the Next Six Years.

BIGGER FORTS FOR NEW YORK

Great Reserve Store of Arms and Ammunition Provided For In Administration Program.

PRESIDENT PLANS APPEAL

Coming to Manhattan Club to Speak and Submit His Ideas to the Nation.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—A national defense program that probably means an expenditure on the army and navy of upward of a billion dollars in the next six years will be laid before the people by President Wilson on Nov. 4, when he goes to New York to make his first public address since the scope of the policy upon which his Administration has embarked became known. He will speak before the Manhattan Club of New York on national defense and the reasons which have impelled him to approve plans to almost double the navy and quadruple the trained fighting forces ashore within a few years.

With the estimates of the War and Navy Departments submitted for the coming year, the breadth of the Administration's policy as to preparedness is being realized. It shapes up in totals as follows:

Navy—For new ships and increased personnel in five years, $500,000,000.
Army—For reserve material (arms and ammunition) within four years, $105,000,000.
For new coast defenses and modernization of old forts within four years, $81,000,000.
For the new continental army and the proposed increase in the regular army, $26,000,000. This amount probably will be continuing, and, if anything, increasing appropriations through the first six-year period, which would make the total expenditure at that time $156,000,000.
The grand total expenditure thus actually planned would be $842,000,000.

An Impregnable Defense.

According to plans laid out by experts of the Navy and War Departments, these expenditures would produce by 1925 a first line of dreadnoughts and battle cruisers numbering 43; a fleet of coast defense submarines that would fringe the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts with an almost solid line of interior defense against attack; a fleet of nearly 175 destroyers, and squadrons of huge sea-going fleet submarines to operate with the battle squadrons at great distance from shore.

For the army there would be at the end of six years a trained force of 1,200,000 men, including a regular army of 140,000, and the proposed continental army and reserves, a ring of fully manned coast defenses, equipped with the largest and most powerful guns yet built, and a vast reserve of field guns, machine guns, howitzers, and big-gun ammunition.

In addition, the enormously increased capacity of private munition plants would give assurances of ample supplies of small arms and field gun ammunition.

Neither the War nor Navy Department estimate for the coming year has been made public as yet in detail. It was learned today, however, that of the $72,000,000 increase over last year's bill to be asked by the War Department, $46,000,000 would go toward reserve material and coast defense works, the remaining $26,000,000 to be used in building up the new armies, regular and Continental. Part of this $46,000,000 would be used for building and arming the new forts to guard the entrance to Chesapeake Bay.

More Forts for New York.

It is proposed to spend more of the money in building new forts to guard New York, San Francisco, and other great harbors from attack. Gigantic 16-inch rifles will be mounted in all these defenses of the first class, where enemy craft with modern guns would be dangerous from great distance.

Another expenditure contemplated is for fitting the present 12 and 14 inch rifles with carriages that will give them greater range. Much already has been accomplished in that way, and the work will be carried on until every fort is modernized. No 16-inch rifles will be installed in places of smaller guns, however, it is said, because to make all the changes in magazines, hoists, machinery, and the like would be more expensive and less satisfactory than to build new emplacements for these huge weapons.

Aside from the awards made today, the navy has still to award contracts for the major portion of the building program authorized by the last Congress. Contracts will be let next month for four fleet submarines bigger, faster, and more powerful than any submarine craft ever designed. The Schley, now building, will displace a thousand tons and make twenty knots on the surface. The new boats will displace 1,200 tons and make twenty-five knots. Next month also contracts will be let for two 32,000-ton superdreadnoughts, ships which will carry a round dozen 14-inch rifles each and which will have new protection against submarine attack, the nature of which is being closely guarded.

Four Big Ships Next Year.

Of the $68,000,000 increase to be asked for the navy next year, the bulk will go into four big ships, two superdreadnoughts and two superbattle cruisers. They would be the first of the sixteen capital ships to be laid down within five

SERBIA APPEALS TO THE UNITED STATES

Accuses German Troops of Exterminating the Civil Population of the Country.

PARIS, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—A special dispatch from Bucharest, Rumania, says:

"The Serbian Minister has handed to the American Minister a protest against the extermination of the civil population by the German troops, which will be forwarded to Washington."

GREY ASKS OUR AID ABOUT MISS CAVELL

Requests Investigation of the Execution of Englishwoman at Brussels.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—The Foreign Secretary, Sir Edward Grey, has requested the American Government to investigate the circumstances which attended the execution of Miss Edith Cavell, a British nurse, in Brussels.

Miss Cavell, who had been at the head of a training school in Brussels, was put to death on order of the German authorities on a charge of having harbored British and French soldiers and Belgians of military age and assisting them to escape from Belgium to join their colors.

WILL TAKE NO ACTION IN BARALONG INCIDENT

Government Sees No Violation of Law in Use of Our Flag by British Vessel.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The State Department does not contemplate any action on the affidavits filed by the German Embassy charging that marines and sailors of the British patrol boat Baralong killed the commander of a German submarine.

Officials pointed out today that the case did not differ from many others filed by belligerent Governments charging violations of military law and atrocities. The American Government has merely filed all such protests.

Officials foresee, however, that if such incidents become a general practice they may possibly affect the submarine controversy between the United States and Germany. They fear that if British ships generally attack German submarines, interfering with the attempts of the later to visit and search, the submarines may resume their practice of torpedoing without warning.

The use of the American flag by the British patrol boat is regarded as a ruse in keeping with the naval practice of previous wars, and used by the United States as well as other nations. The only requirement is that a war vessel must show her true colors before opening fire.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 18.—The first news of the alleged killing of German submarine officers and sailors by marines of the British patrol boat Baralong was related in New Orleans by muleteers on the steamship Nicosian. Affidavits were made by James J. Curran, foreman of the muleteer gang, and another, corroborating Curran, was signed by Charles D. Hightower, Bude Meron Palen, Edward Clark, and R. H. Crosby. The German Consulate here forwarded the affidavits to the German Embassy in Washington.

The English commander of the Nicosian, Captain Manning, in an interview, ridiculed the story of the muleteers, intimating that they were seeking revenge for treatment on the mule ship.

The Nicosian had been stopped by the German submarine, which was sunk a few moments later by the British patrol boat. It was charged by the muleteers also that the British ship used the American flag in coming up on the submarine.

Captain Manning, aboard the Nicosian, is on his way to Liverpool.

PLANS ARMENIAN CORPS TO FIGHT FOR THE ALLIES

Russian Officer Proposes to Obtain Recruits in Many Countries, Including America.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Petrograd says:

"Captain Torcom is planning to raise volunteer corps from the Armenians now residing in the Balkans, Egypt, Italy, France, Great Britain, and the United States to fight in the ranks of the Allies against Turkey.

"In an appeal with this end in view Captain Torcom says that the Armenians have been unable to prevent the massacre of Armenians in Asia Minor by the Turks, but that those living in other countries can help fight Turkey and that the allied powers will not refuse them the honor of joining in the war against their oppressors.

"Captain Torcom's plan provides for the formation of a maximum of thirty battalions and a minimum of ten battalions. Captain Torcom was wounded in the recent fighting in Galicia, but is now able to leave the hospital and is about to start for London to get his plan in operation."

BRITISH AGAIN DETAIN DR. DUMBA'S SHIP

Returning Austrian Ambassador Will Be Held Up at Deal for a Few Days.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—The steamer Nieuw Amsterdam, having on board Dr. Constantin Theodor Dumba, the returning Austro-Hungarian Ambassador to the United States, is detained off Deal, according to The Evening News, and will probably remain there for a few days.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 18.—Dr. W. S. Solf, German Secretary of State for the Colonies, has arrived at The Hague. Dr. Constantin Theodor Dumba, the returning Austro-Hungarian Ambassador to the United States, is also expected at The Hague, it is stated.

HAIL ROOT BOOM FOR PRESIDENCY

Cheers at the Republican Club Dinner Welcome the Informal Launching.

EX-SENATOR DEEPLY MOVED

Cannot Disregard the Call of the People, He Is Told by J. R. Sheffield.

DEFENDS NEW CONSTITUTION

Statesman Says Rehabilitation of the Legislature Is the Chief Feature of Revision.

Six hundred of the leading Republicans of New York State and many from other States, who gathered at the Republic Club dinner at Hotel Astor, which was considered to be the occasion of the informal launching of a boom for Elihu Root for President in 1916, stood and cheered when James R. Sheffield, President of the club, addressed Mr. Root and told him that he could not disregard the voice of the people when it called him.

Mr. Sheffield paraphrased the closing words from Mr. Root's speech at the Constitutional Convention in favor of the short ballot and urged on the former Senator his duty to bow to the will of the people in these words:

"Senator Root, there is a plain old house in the hills of Oneida, overlooking the beautiful Valley of the Mohawk, where truth and honor dwelt in your youth. When you go back, as you will some day, to spend your declining years, you mean to go with a feeling that you can say, 'I have not failed to act and to speak in accordance with the lessons that I learned there from the God of my fathers.'

Told He Cannot Disregard the Call.

"Those were the words you addressed to the little circle of your associates in the Convention of 1915, but their truth and nobility stirred the hearts of a nation and your fellow countrymen here and elsewhere. You may as well understand that they understand that, in a Republic you have done so much to honor, and in a representative government you have done so much to preserve, you can no more disregard the voice of the people when it calls than you can disregard the will of the God of your fathers you have so nobly served."

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, whose speech followed that of Mr. Root, urged emphatically that the qualities which the people of the country admired and wished to have as their guide, were embodied in him. He was cheered when he drew what was taken to be a contrast between President Wilson and Mr. Root. After reviewing the achievements of the ex-Senator and describing him as the greatest living statesman, he said:

"There can be no greater mistake than the belief that the people of this country do not wish a leader. There is now an impression that what the people want is to have their will interpreted by a kind of anatomical monstrosity which keeps one ear to the ground in such a position that it is impossible to look forward without turning the head. What the people crave is a man of ideas, a man who will lead them."

English Praise for Root's War Plans.

Dr. Butler was again applauded when he touched on the subject of preparedness, and said:

"Lord Haldane told me that, when he first accepted a high position in the British Cabinet, the first thing he did was to get five volumes containing the reports made by Elihu Root when he was Secretary of War, and that those volumes contained the last word on the subject of the military preparation for a democratic country."

While all of the speakers praised Mr. Root's public services in such a way that their desire to have him the Republican nominee for President in 1916 could hardly be mistaken, the frankest of these speakers was Job Hedges, who said in the course of his eulogy, addressing Mr. Root personally:

"There seems to be a general belief that you are the leader of the Republican Party. There seems to be a general belief that it is a good thing to be leader of.

"But I have never read or believed that you thought you were the Republican Party. That gives us hope for the future. We hope that in another year we will still hold that opinion—then we will do the rest. And when we come down there we hope that you will let us have a little social conversation and make us feel that you are one of us and that we are not a part of you."

Mr. Root choked with emotion when he rose to reply, and spoke his first few sentences in a broken voice. All through his speech, which those who followed him pronounced one of his masterpieces, he was interrupted by applause. One of his most striking passages was his denunciation of those who attacked the proposed Constitution for selfish or partisan reasons and who sought, he charged, to have a chance to write the Constitution themselves.

Mr. Root's Address.

In part Mr. Root's speech was as follows:

"Great as is the issue of the Constitution, almost as great is the question whether the people of the State of New York can be controlled by that low and unpatriotic view of public duty. If they succeed, who will write the Constitution in 1918? What will be in it? All this scheme of reform of our government will have been discredited. Not these things; oh, no, the people would have voted against them. What will be in it? Dare you think of it?

"Mr Gompers is against the Constitution. He was defeated in 1914. If he succeeds, and there is another convention, and he is elected, he will write the Constitution. I can name a lot of others who think they will write the Constitution if they can defeat this, but it will have none of this plan of reform, for

Mexican Bandits Wreck Texas Train; Kill Passengers, Including 3 U. S. Soldiers

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—A southbound passenger train on the St. Louis, Brownsville & Mexico Railroad was wrecked last night six and a half miles from Brownsville, supposedly by Mexican bandits, and the engineer, several passengers, and three United States soldiers were reported killed by the bandits and in the wreck.

A negro reached his home, four miles from Brownsville, and gave the first report of the wreck and fatalities.

Four companies of United States infantry were rushed to the scene by special trains, followed by two troops of cavalry.

The bandits are reported to have been passengers, and on arriving at Olmito, north of Brownsville, began shooting at other passengers.

Then they set fire to the train, which was still burning at 2 o'clock this morning.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 18.—With the women of three other Eastern States in which suffrage will be an issue at the November elections eagerly awaiting the result, the men of New Jersey at the special election tomorrow will vote on a Constitutional amendment which, if ratified, would make this State the twelfth to give women the ballot.

With the campaign coming to a whirlwind finish after one of the most remarkable fights women ever made for the right to vote, the leaders in the two suffrage organizations here in eleventh-hour forecasts expressed themselves as confident of victory. The consensus among the women who are opposing the enfranchisement of their own sex and among the leaders of the political parties who control the election machinery is that woman suffrage will be defeated.

The election tomorrow will be watched with particular interest by the suffrage and anti-suffrage forces in the nearby States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, which at the present moment are the battleground for woman suffrage, with the final test to come on Nov. 2. It may be taken for granted that the result of tomorrow's election will have a decided influence on the outcome of the suffrage fight in these States, and militant organizations of women on both sides of the conflict in these States have aided actively in the struggle here, which they regard as merely a preliminary combat in their own battle for the ballot.

100,000 Leaflets Distributed.

The waning hours of the campaign were characterized by the most intense activity on the part of the workers in the suffrage ranks. Especially in the large and populous cities in the northern part of the State, where the suffragists were endeavoring to offset the effect of the recent open letter from William T. Hickey, the former Secretary-Treasurer of the Colorado Federation of Labor, warning workingmen against giving their support to the enfranchisement of women, did the eleventh-hour fighting rise to a pitch not witnessed at any earlier stage of the campaign.

The green, white, and purple and the orange, white, and blue banners of the two suffrage organizations were fluttering from hundreds of automobiles racing through the highways and byways of the northern counties, carrying women enlisted in the suffrage war to the doors of the large manufacturing establishments. It is safe to say that 100,000 leaflets controverting the statement of Hickey that woman suffrage from labor's point of view had proved a failure in Colorado were distributed to the men in such establishments when they left work tonight.

The workers of the New Jersey Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage were less in evidence, but it was asserted that they were doing effective eleventh-hour missionary work in their own way. The rules of their organization prohibit open-air campaigning by members. The antis virtually closed their speaking campaign on Saturday.

In addition to the distribution of literature which was carried on by thousands of workers from the suffrage and anti-suffrage ranks in different parts of the State, the Woman's Political Union and the New Jersey Woman Suffrage Association had some 400 speakers addressing crowds in all the big cities of the State. One of the most picturesque features was the continuous twenty-four-hour open-air mass meeting in Newark, which began at 6 o'clock this morning and is scheduled to continue with a strong array of speakers until the polls open at 6 o'clock tomorrow morning.

This meeting is conducted from a converted lunch wagon, which is said to have been a familiar sight in the financial district in New York City until the crisis reached in the fight here made it necessary to transfer it and its militant crew to the New Jersey front. Drawn up near Military Square in Newark at what is declared to be the busiest spot in all New Jersey, it was the centre of a big crowd of attentive listeners throughout the day and far into the night.

Miss Mildred Taylor, the little New York suffragette who brought the big suffrage van to New Jersey, was jubilant tonight and declared that hundreds of converts had been made and that she and her fellow workers would remain on the job throughout the night. One of the speakers tonight was Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch.

"Dawn and daybreak will find us on the firing line," said Miss Taylor. "After the polls open, our case will be in the hands of the men of New Jersey and I think they will give us a square deal."

New Appeal to Politicians.

There was a new argument advanced from Victory Van platform in support of woman suffrage, and Miss Taylor was the exponent of it. She chose a moment when the van was surrounded by a crowd of men who were distinctly of the politician type, and who listened to what she had to say with hard, set faces and gave every evidence of being proof against pro-suffrage reasoning.

"I'll tell you another reason why you men in the East ought to vote for woman suffrage," Miss Taylor cried at the top of her voice, after running through the long list of staple arguments for the enfranchisement of women. "With representation in the Republican National Convention based on the vote for Congressmen, the great Eastern States of New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania would have twice the say they now have in the nomination of a President if they give women the ballot."

The argument seemed to impress the particular audience Miss Taylor was addressing more than anything that she had said previously.

The fight of the suffragists and the antis on the eve of the election was concentrated on the result in six counties which, it is admitted, will determine the outcome of the election tomorrow. They are Essex, where Newark, with its 400,000 inhabitants, is the

MASKED MEN HOLD UP 2 WEST SHORE TRAINS

Get Nothing from First, but Load Auto with Plunder from the Second, a Freight.

RAID MADE NEAR CONGERS

Auto Truck with Eight Men in It Taken by Waiting Police at the Cortlandt Street Ferry.

At 11:30 last night, as a fast express bound toward this city with goods shipped from Buffalo and other points along the line was passing Congers, N. Y., on the West Shore Railroad, the engineers saw a red danger light flashed across the track.

He brought the train to a stop and found himself confronted by two masked men, who kept him and the fireman covered with revolvers while four other men, also masked, who were with them, ran to the middle of the train. They broke open the doors of two cars, but were unable, apparently, to find any booty of the kind they wanted. One of the men who was ransacking the cars gave a shrill whistle; the men guarding the engineer jumped from the train, and it was allowed to go on its way.

Half an hour later a fast freight came over the line and was stopped in the same way. The thieves acted with the utmost rapidity and were evidently well rehearsed in what they had to do. While two men were breaking into cars in the middle of the train two others ran to the caboose in the rear and kept the train crew from disturbing the thieves, who were hurling goods from the cars to the side of the track.

The freight was held for about ten minutes in this way, or until most of the contents of three cars had been unloaded. Then the engineer was ordered to go ahead, and the thieves began loading their booty into an automobile, which they had waiting in the road near the track.

By this time people living along the railroad had got wind of the hold-up and ran toward the place where the train had been stopped. As the first of the townsfolk appeared the thieves tossed in a few last bundles, jumped into their automobile, and made off in the direction of Weehawken.

Word of the hold-up was telephoned to Police Headquarters here as soon as it was discovered. Reserves from all precincts in the neighborhood of the ferries were turned out, and shortly before 3 o'clock this morning a big auto truck, on which eight young men were riding, rolled off a ferryboat that came down to the Cortlandt Street ferry from the West Shore ferry in Weehawken.

These men denied having been concerned in the hold-up, but the police detained them, pending an investigation.

Meantime the Sheriff and police from Haverstraw, Congers, and Tompkins Cove had started in pursuit of the thieves' automobile in such conveyances as they could commandeer. The police in this city were of the opinion at an early hour this morning that the bandits were so thoroughly surrounded that they could not possibly escape.

It was impossible for the authorities to give an estimate of the value of the goods taken from the cars.

EIGHT SWEPT TO DEATH FROM WRECKED VESSEL

Gasoline Schooner, Said to Have Been Destined for Carranza, Pounds to Pieces on Rocks.

POINT ARENA, Cal., Oct. 18.—One after another, seven men and two women, who had fought their way on Mal Pass rocks, after escaping today from the wrecked gasoline schooner, Alliance No. 2, were dragged back into the sea by pursuing combers. Eight were swept to death. Rafael Mediner, was flung ashore alive. H. E. Jones of Vancouver, the mate, was the only other member of the ship's company of ten that was saved.

When the schooner, which sailed from Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 9, for Mazatlan, Sinaloa, piled up on Mal Pass rocks, twelve miles north of here early today, she had on board Captain Delouchrey, F. E. Harrington, Chief Engineer; J. S. Walsh, Second Engineer; H. R. Jones, mate; A. Allen, cook; Baillie, purser; Miguel Abila, owner; Mrs. Abila, Miss Miller, and Rafael Mediner, Abila's servant.

The two women and all the men except Jones, who remained on the vessel, aided one another over the side as the schooner was being smashed to pieces, but could not mount high enough on the rocks to escape the waves.

Soon afterward the hulk broke in two, flinging Jones into the sea. The ship's dory floated within his reach and he climbed into it. There he was found exhausted hours later. Mediner was tossed upon the beach unconscious.

Abila, the owner, was said to be a close friend of Carranza and was taking the vessel to Mexico for use in his service.

WIRE MAN TO RAIL TRACKS.

Highwaymen's Victim Has Foot Taken Off by a Train.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Oct. 18.—Highwaymen sandbagged Newton Hoffman, 22 years old, as he stepped from a southbound Erie train at South Avon tonight and wired him to the tracks. A foot was taken off by a train which came along an hour later, but as his head lay between the tracks, he survived.

When found, he was rushed to a Rochester hospital on a special train, and it is thought that he will recover.

GERMAN BOAT BLOWN UP.

Mine Patrol Vessel Sunk in North Sea—The Crew Missing.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—A German mine patrol boat has been blown up in the Baltic Sea and her crew of ten men are missing and are supposed to have been drowned, says a dispatch to The Exchange Telegraph from Copenhagen.

The dispatch adds that wreckage of the boat has been found at Marstal.

CARSON QUITS THE ASQUITH CABINET; BRITAIN RECALLS GALLIPOLI GENERAL; ALLIES LAND AT ENOS, SEIZE RAILWAY

Serb Women and Children Join in Fighting Foe; Army of 250,000 Women Forming, Says Chicago Serb

BERLIN, Oct. 18, (via London.)—Telegraphing under date of Oct. 17, the Lokal Anzeiger's correspondent with the German forces operating in Serbia says:

"The German and Austrian operations are proceeding successfully along the whole front. The Germans by an extended enveloping movement compelled the Serbians to evacuate Pozarevac almost without a struggle, although the defenses of the city had been so strengthened and the advanced positions prepared for keeping the Teutons at a distance that the Serbians evidently had planned making a long stand here.

"After the evacuation the Serbians retired to the heights southward and southwestward, which also were strongly fortified. The contour of the country offered great difficulties, there being few roads. The Serbians made a stout resistance on the whole line, but suffered great losses under the bombardments of the German heavy artillery. Especially on the mountain of Vranovo did the enemy fight desperately, but finally, after long resistance, yielded this strong elevated position to one of the Brandenburg regiments."

The Lokal Anzeiger's correspondent, in describing the spirit of resistance shown by the Serbians, says they did not abandon the plateau behind the mountain after the Germans had won the important heights, but continued holding the ground, fighting under unfavorable conditions, until they were slowly pressed back.

Other correspondents also emphasize the bravery and persistence of the Serbians, who, they say, often hold positions until hand-to-hand encounters become necessary to force their abandonment.

The Lokal Anzeiger's correspondent says that at some places the civilian population, even women and children, are participating in the fighting.

CHICAGO, Oct. 18.—John R. Palandech, a Serbian leader and editor, addressing Serbians here today, declared that an army of 250,000 Serbian women, equal in numbers to the entire Serbian regular army, would soon be on the firing line against the German and Austrian forces.

"No women in the world are more courageous than the Serbian women," said Mr. Palandech, "and they are not going to sit at home and see their fathers, husbands, and brothers driven out of Serbia. Many Serbian women have been killed fighting at the front, and I have learned from our native land that it will be but a short time until the army of women soldiers will [illegible] the men."

Allied Troops Ashore at Enos Seize Line to Dedeaghatch.

GERMAN REVERSE RUMORED

But Berlin and Vienna Say the Teuton Forces Are Pressing On Successfully.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—Almost simultaneously with their capture of the Bulgarian stronghold of Strumitza, near the Serbian frontier, the Allies landed an army at Enos on the Aegean Sea and seized the railroad running east from Dedeaghatch to join the main line from Sofia to Constantinople. Dedeaghatch, twelve miles northwest of Enos, is a strongly fortified port. It is now menaced by land and sea.

The German as well as the Serbian versions show that Field Marshal von Mackensen's army on the northern border of Serbia is meeting with greater resistance than was expected, and, although it is probable that the Serbians eventually must fall back on stronger strategic positions in the north, the fact that the Allies are bringing heavy forces against the Bulgarians, and so placing them that the Bulgarians will be compelled to divide their armies, gives hope here that the Germans may be balked in their latest attempt to reach the sea and bring assistance to the Turks.

All along the line the Serbians and their Montenegrin neighbors, who are also being attacked, are offering very stubborn resistance to both Austro-Germans and Bulgarians, and while they have given up a number of towns and positions, they have not yet reached the line on which they expect to make their stand.

German officers are in command along the entire Bulgarian front, but the Bulgars, so far as can be learned, have been checked everywhere. Their only serious advance was in the Zlotokupska Valley, near the River Morava, north of the town of Vranya, where they blew up a bridge. There is no confirmation of the report that they cut the Nish-Uskub Railway in this district, the bridge being a small wooden one near the railway. Athens dispatches report heavy firing in the Ristivac-Vranya district. The Serbians have been strongly reinforced and have driven the Bulgarians back. Beyond Vranya telegraphic communication is interrupted.

On the other hand, it is pointed out, the capture of Strumitza is of real strategic value, as its occupation permits the defence of the southern end of the railway and compels the Bulgarians to keep a force there. The seizure of the railroad north of Enos threatens Dedeaghatch, which has a great harbor, and is fortified and mined. The civilian population has already left Dedeaghatch, which is entirely in the hands of the military, under German officers. Allied warships are off the port.

The German War Office yesterday in reporting progress of the invasion in the north includes the front in Southeast Galicia as being within the sphere of the Balkan operations. General von Linsingen commands this front, which stretches to the Rumanian frontier. It was reported from Athens on Sunday that Linsingen's army had been ordered to Serbia to reinforce Mackensen, but had been recalled because of the seriousness of the Russian offensive. The official bulletin reads:

In the Balkan theatre:

In the Macva district the enemy is beginning to retreat on the plateau

MONRO TO COMMAND AT DARDANELLES

He Succeeds Ian Hamilton, Who Returns to England to Report on His Work.

BIRDWOOD NOW IN CHARGE

Berlin Reiterates Rumor That Gallipoli Operations Are to be Abandoned.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—Major Gen. Sir Charles Carmichael Monro has been appointed to command the Dardanelles expedition, in succession to General Sir Ian Hamilton, who is returning to England to make a report. This announcement is made by the War Office.

Pending General Monro's arrival at Gallipoli, Major Gen. William Riddell Birdwood will temporarily command the troops.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—In reference to the change in the Dardanelles command The Daily Chronicle says:

"General Sir C. C. Monro was appointed division commander with the expeditionary force on Aug. 5, and was mentioned in Sir John French's dispatch of Oct. 19. He received the K. C. B. on Feb. 18, his name figuring in the war honors list on that day for 'services rendered in connection with operations in the field.'

"In his dispatch of Aug. 26, Sir Ian Hamilton wrote of Sir W. R. Birdwood as follows: 'General Sir W. R. Birdwood has been the soul of Anzac. Not for a single day has he ever quitted his post. Cheery and full of human sympathy, he has spent many hours of each twenty-four inspiring the defenders of the front trenches; and if he does not know every soldier in his force, at least every soldier in the force believes he is known to his chief.'"

A few days ago, in the House of Lords, Viscount Milner suggested the withdrawal of the troops from Gallipoli and their transfer to some other theatre of the war. In reply, Lord Lansdowne said it was impossible for any member of the Government to give an undertaking that the troops would be continued in the Dardanelles operations or withdrawn from them.

The impersonal conduct of the present war has made it difficult to find out how much any General has had to do with the fortune or misfortune of his army, but military observers as a rule have attributed the British failure in the Dardanelles rather to the delay in starting, mismanagement at the War Office, and the natural difficulties of the task than to the shortcomings of Hamilton himself.

The change in the command of the British land forces at the Dardanelles removes the last of the original commanders who started out to clear the way to Constantinople; the British War Office is following in the course which the Admiralty and the French Government have already adopted. Soon after the disastrous naval attack of March 18 Vice Admiral Carden, commanding the fleets, was succeeded by Vice Admiral de Robeck. General A. G. L. d'Amade, who brought a French army from Africa to aid in the first land attack, was succeeded on May 9 by General H. J. E. Gouraud, who had made a brilliant record against the Moors. He was seriously wounded early in July and was succeeded on Aug. 6 by General Sarrail, who had commanded the troops about Verdun earlier in the war.

General Sir Ian Standish Monteith Hamilton, who has had the command of the British troops at the Dardanelles,

NEW BRITISH CABINET CRISIS

Attorney General Disagrees With Colleagues on Balkan Policy.

TALK OF GENERAL ELECTION

More Resignations Are Reported Likely and Redmond Calls Situation Precarious.

CARSON ASSAILED METHODS

Disliked "Inner-Cabinet" Plan and Criticised Dardanelles Operations.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—Sir Edward Carson, Attorney General, has resigned from the British Cabinet.

The resignation of Sir Edward, the first open manifestation of the divergence of views known to exist among the Ministers, is the result, according to an authoritative statement, not of the controversy over conscription, but of the condition of affairs in the Near East.

Sir Edward himself so far has made no personal explanation of his reasons for resigning, but it is understood that he disapproves the policy which is being followed in the Balkans and the method of confiding the whole national policy to a small "Inner Cabinet."

It is expected that there will be exciting debates in the House of Commons this week, as severe attacks on the Government are planned by members of the House in connection with the general military policy, especially in the Near East.

Presiding at the Nationalist Convention in Dublin yesterday, John E. Redmond said that a grave political crisis might arise any day. The position of the coalition Government, he asserted, was precarious. It was threatened by internal and external dangers. A conspiracy existed among men ready to sacrifice national unity in the face of the enemy to further their own predilections and theories.

It was common talk, said the Irish leader, that a general election was possible, but Ireland could boast that she was not responsible for these dangers.

Much regret is expressed in the London morning papers over the resignation of Sir Edward Carson as Attorney General, and there is lively apprehension expressed that his giving up his portfolio may be followed by other resignations.

Conscription Not an Issue.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—The Chronicle's Parliamentary correspondent writes this morning:

"Yesterday's Cabinet Council, summoned originally for noon, did not meet until 2 o'clock, the postponement being due to the fact that in the morning the Prime Minister was slightly indisposed. Contrary to anticipation, the conscription issue did not come to a head, matters arising out of the Balkan situation, especially the enigmatical attitude of Greece, occupying the whole time.

"Sir Edward Carson was again absent from the meeting. This ostentatious aloofness of the Attorney General from the nation's executive councils in the gravest crisis in our history is very unseemly. Late last night I learned on good authority that he had definitely withdrawn from the Government.

"It is understood that leading advocates of compulsory service have not abandoned the intention of forcing an early decision on the question.

"Before the week is out there may be sensational developments unless wiser counsels prevail. Ministerial resignations are freely talked about, and the very existence of the Administration may soon be in jeopardy. The break-up of the Government would be an unmitigable calamity. Abroad and at home it would have disastrous effects, and that at a critical stage in the war.

"Where is the alternative Government and who is to comprise it? Even if the conscriptionists succeeded in pressing an Administration they would be without a majority in the House of Commons, and they would have at least half the nation arrayed against them. A conscriptionist Ministry would, from the nature of the case, be unable to enforce a policy of conscription, for it would be suspect from the beginning.

"The only way in which the nation could be induced to acquiesce in compulsory military service would be on assurances from sympathizers with the voluntary principle, like Asquith, Kitchener, Grey, and Balfour, that voluntarism would not give us all the men we need. No one can say it will not until Lord Derby's recruiting plan has been fairly and honestly tried. Any attempt to rush a decision on conscription in the meantime is inimical to the best interests of the nation.

"John Redmond, a very acute political observer, said in his speech in Ireland yesterday that the Government's life is precarious, and that it is threatened with internal and external dangers. This description is not exaggerated. The compulsion zealots will, unless they restrain themselves, jeopardise the existence of the Government and destroy the unity of the nation."

Hints Differences Are Settled.

The Daily Express, referring to the Cabinet meeting, says:

"We believe that wiser counsels have prevailed and that the differences, which up to the moment of the meeting seemed to be insurmountable, have been patched up. It may be taken, therefore, that the danger of a Cabinet crash is for the moment, at least, no longer to be feared, and that the Government will now take up its task more harmoniously and with a vigor born of unison. Neither side may claim to have gained a victory on the disputed points, but the general conduct of the war will, it is to be hoped, receive fuller attention from a Cabinet that is not torn with dissension."

The Morning Post says in an editorial article:

"Sir Edward Carson has resigned on the Near Eastern question. The Government, against his strong advice and urgent counsel, have, as usual, allowed that question to drift, and Sir Edward, who had strong convictions on what he regarded as the right policy for this country, refuses to share responsibility for the results of postponing and evading a decision.

"We trust that Sir Edward, now that he has taken this definite step and has resumed his freedom, will use means to force upon the Government some sense of the dangers into which they are bringing the country by their refusal to look plain facts in the face. He commands, we feel sure, the confidence of the best part of the nation. Let him lead, and we can promise him a following."

The Daily News says:

"It is deplorable that at the moment when the fate of everything we hold precious is at stake there should be a continuance of the wrecking policy which has been so disastrous to the country. The outward and visible sign of this grave menace was the continued and ostentatious absence from Cabinet meetings of Sir Edward Carson.

"If this cabal against the coalition Ministry succeeds, if Asquith, Grey, and the other responsible Liberal Ministers are brought down, there will be far greater enthusiasm in Berlin even than in the office of The Times or The Daily Mail. A Curzon-Churchill-Milner Ministry, born out of intrigue and falsity, would rouse the country to bitter resentment. It would not take conscription from such hands, and the only result would be national confusion that would spell inevitable disaster."

The Daily Telegraph comments:

"No doubt Sir Edward Carson has been moved by some very compelling motive to take this serious step, but when Cabinet unity was of such paramount importance, his resignation is to be regretted the more. It is not, however, unexpected. During the last ten days Sir Edward has abstained from attendance at Cabinet councils. Such abstention, especially when the House of Commons was sitting, naturally gave rise to much speculation.

"The reason of his estrangement has been variously attributed. Some say that he was opposed to his colleagues on the question of the expedition to Serbia. Others believe his action was designed as a protest against the Cabinet's attitude toward compulsion. Others again are inclined to put it down to some Irish difficulty, connected, perhaps, with the case of Ulster. It is possible that he will promptly set these doubts at rest by making a personal explanation of his reasons for the resignation.

The Times says:

"No public statement is made of the precise ground on the difference on which Carson acted. It is well understood, however, that his action has been taken on what he holds to be a fundamental question of policy, and that he is by no means alone in his attitude toward the conduct of the war."

Carson's Long Fight for Ulster.

Sir Edward Carson entered the Asquith Coalition Cabinet on May 26, when the Liberal Cabinet of twenty members was superseded by twelve Liberals, eight Unionists, one Labor Party nominee, (without portfolio,) and one (Lord Kitchener) without any party associations, and the Ministry of Munitions was created and placed in the hands of David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer in the former Cabinet. Sir Edward was made Attorney General.

Although he had served as Solicitor General for Ireland in 1892 and as British Solicitor General from 1900 to 1905, as Queen's Counsel at the English and Irish bars, and had been a Bencher of Middle Inns, Dublin, and of the Middle Temple, London, he was little known outside of British legal and political circles until the home rule movement assumed its acute sensational stage more than a couple of years ago.

After the General Election of 1906 Sir Edward, beginning to be known as "Balfour Second" for his opposition to the Home Rule bill on behalf of the Conservative Protestant communities of Ireland, adopted Ulster as his protégé with a selfless passion that evoked the affectionate and unquestioning loyalty of the population of that province.

Cable dispatches could hardly mention one of the many phases through which the Home Rule bill was passing without describing his work—the legal obstructions he placed in the way of the bill and finally his preparations for armed resistance to its promulgation as a law. His untiring energy and his enthusiasm enabled him to overcome physical weakness; his sombre eloquence inspired and his counsels curbed the passions of the most determined and perhaps the most pugnacious section of the population of the United Kingdom.

When the war began his voice was at once raised and his influence exerted to turn the magnificent force of Ulster volunteers, whose potential strength had been his creation, into soldiers for the prosecution of the combat provoked by Germany. For ten months he labored with them, as did John Redmond, his sometime enemy, among the Catholic Nationalists, until he finally entered the Ministry.

The most notable cases with which Sir Edward had to deal as Attorney General were the Board of Trade's inquiry into the sinking of the Lusitania and the proceedings before the prize court for the condemnation of American meat carcoes which had been seized by the British Government on the ground that they were destined for Germany.

Recently there has been unofficial talk in London of Sir Edward being at odds with other members of the Ministry over conscription, the Balkan situation, and the Dardanelles expedition. The Attorney General did not attend any of the Cabinet meetings held recently.

HOW DERBY WILL RECRUIT.

Will Urge Unmarried Britons to Enlist First; Then Married Men.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—An official memorandum issued by Lord Derby's Recruiting Committee says it has been decided that unmarried men of 19 and upward shall be pressed to enlist first. They will be approached in the order of age. When this list has been gone through, the married men will be approached in the order of age.

TO REGULATE PARIS PRICES.

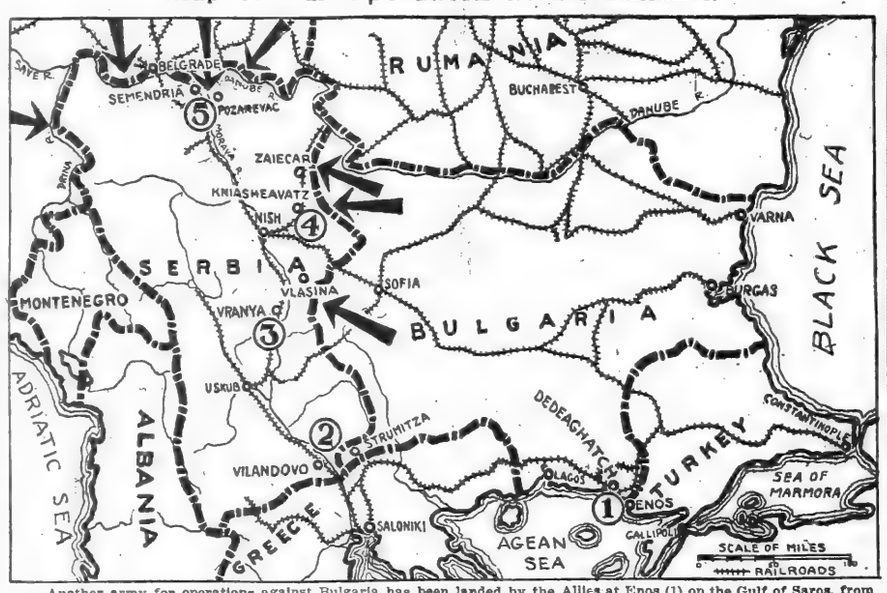
Malvy Threatens Taxing Profits of Speculators in Food Products.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—"The situation is serious, but no alarming," said Louis J. Malvy, the French Minister of the Interior, to a representative of the Matin, in discussing the growing cost of living.

"It would be an illusion," he continued, "to pretend to bring back prices to the normal, but by concentrated efforts on essential articles of food the Government can enable Parisians to obtain food at prices which never will be prohibitive.

"Arrangements have been made to make a rise in the price of bread impossible. Steps are being taken to increase imports of frozen meat, butter, eggs, and dry vegetables; but if as a result of speculators' operations these measures are ineffective the Government will not hesitate to have recourse to taxation."

Map of War Operations in the Balkans.



Another army for operations against Bulgaria has been landed by the Allies at Enos (1) on the Gulf of Saros, from which they can attack the fortified port of Dedeaghatch, twelve miles to the northwest, where the railroad from Saloniki from the west joins that from Kul Burgas on the Nish-Sofia-Constantinople road on the north. Dedeaghatch is also menaced by warships. On the western front the joint Serb and Anglo-French forces, which threw 40,000 Bulgarians back from Vilandovo (2) pursued them to Strumitza, and captured that stronghold, are carrying their swift movement further into the enemy's country.

The most serious point now of the Bulgarian invasion is at Vranya, (3,) where the Saloniki-Uskub-Nish Railroad again approaches the frontier. Here also the Bulgarians are being driven back, according to the latest reports. The Bulgar forces operating further north in the Kviasheavatz Zaiecar region (4) are still at the border.

The Teuton army of the Danube, which compelled the Serbs to evacuate Pozarevac (5) by a flanking movement, are advancing slowly against savage resistance.

At other points of invasion indicated by arrows the Austro-Germans have made little if any headway.

Southeast of Pozarevac the towns of Crnice and Bosevac have been captured.

Army of General von Linsingen: On the River Styr from Rafalowka to Kulikovitchi new local engagements have developed.

The Austrian War Office issued the following bulletin:

A Serbian division has been defeated in the region of Avala, retreating on both sides of the road to the south. Our troops are now attacking enemy detachments which remain north of Ralja. The enemy was also obliged to retreat in the Macva district on both sides of the lower Morava.

The Germans are gaining ground.

The Bulgarians occupy the heights of Muelin, Peroin, and Badin Zub. Further south they have advanced over Egri Palanka.

The Italians, according to the latest reports, will not send a contingent to the Balkans, but co-operation of their navy in the Aegean, where an Allied fleet has already gathered, is looked for.

The point at which the Russians will strike has not yet been disclosed. The expectation is, however, that the Allies have a surprise for the Central Powers and that steps are being taken to bring Turkey to her knees before assistance can reach her.

SERBS WHIP GERMANS, SAYS REPORT TO ROME

Bucharest Also Tells of a Bulgarian Force Thrown Back With Loss.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Oct. 18, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—Bucharest reports a serious reverse to the Germans on the Danube. The enemy's force, attempting to penetrate the Timok Valley in Northeast Serbia, was vigorously attacked by the Serbians and repulsed with heavy casualties and the loss of nearly 300 prisoners.

In the Gornacco sector a battle raged for eight hours. The enemy was unsuccessful in trying to break through the Serbian line and retreated. The defenders captured 2,000 prisoners, chiefly German. Four guns were abandoned by the beaten foe.

The Bulgarian brigade, co-operating with the Germans, shared the reverse, the Serbians advancing and occupying several Bulgarian positions.

Neither the Germans nor the Bulgarians were able to make headway in face of the deadly Serbian fire. An enormous number of enemy dead are along the front of the Serbian position. It is claimed that the Serbians' success has shattered, for the moment at all events, the enemy's offensive.

The Austrians operating on the Drina front have been driven back with loss.

BIG GUNS FORCE SERBS BACK.

Pozarevac Evacuated to Foil German Flanking Move.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—The entire Serbian line on the Bulgarian front is being held against the invaders, notwithstanding the superiority of the Bulgarian forces, according to a dispatch to the Temps from Nish under date of Oct. 16. It is declared that the Bulgarian army at Vlassina has been scattered.

"The battle continues along the whole front," says the dispatch. "Detachments of Serbians at Obrenovatz on the Save River withdrew toward the southeast in the direction of Lazarevatz to escape the fire of the enemy's heavy artillery.

"The Serbians continue to hold positions outside of Belgrade dominating the city and valley of Yezava.

"The Serbians evacuated Pozarevac so as to avoid a turning movement of their adversaries."

NISH FLIES ALLIES' FLAGS.

Way Stations Also Decorated—Busy Scenes at Saloniki.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—A correspondent of the Temps telegraphs from Nish that he has just arrived by railroad from Saloniki, finding all along the line crowds at the stations in Serbia awaiting the arrival of allied reinforcements for the Serbians.

"Nish, the provisional capital of Serbia, is today, despite its intense anxieties and its mourning for the fallen among the Serbian troops, decorated with the national colors of the Entente Allies in preparation for the arrival of French and British troops," the correspondent says: "They have been awaited for several days and some disappointment is felt at the delay in their coming. The news of the heroic resistance the Serbians are offering to the Teutonic invasion sustains the people who remain admirably calm and determined.

"Saloniki, from which the correspondent has just arrived, presents an amazing spectacle of naval power. Besides the numerous ships of war there, a vast fleet of transports, flying the French and British flags, is in the harbor. The streets of the city are crowded with troops in foreign uniforms, the khaki and the French service blue predominating.

"After the train on which the correspondent was traveling had crossed the Serbian frontier, all the stations were found to have been decorated, and crowds were in waiting to welcome the troops of the Allies. French and British officers on the train were repeatedly asked by excited enquirers if the soldiers of their nations would begin to arrive tomorrow."

DEMANDS AN ALLIED STAFF.

London Chronicle Says Co-ordination Is Urgently Needed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—The Daily Chronicle in an editorial this morning says:

"A few days ago we published an article by Maurice Barrès, who quoted a dictum of General Bernhardi that 'the powers of the Quadruple Entente have committed the strategic mistake of not co-ordinating their action.'

"The weakness on which Bernhardi dilates has been obvious even to the unexpert lay mind. Has this weakness been remedied, or is it in process of being remedied? We have yet to learn that there is a common war council meeting regularly for the purpose of co-ordinating the efforts of the Allies, of studying strategical situations, and of devising plans for new emergencies. Now that we are committed to a new campaign in the Balkans, the necessity for a general war council of the Allies is more urgent than ever.

"In this respect the central empires have an advantage over the Allies. Their military resources are under one control. Vienna and Constantinople have no independent volition. Berlin dominates everything. The strategy of the whole war, so far as our enemies are concerned, is laid down by the German General Staff. There is unity in strategy, in organization, and in execution.

"The whole military efforts and resources of the Allies ought to be organized and co-ordinated. That cannot be done without a common war council, in continuous session. In short, there is urgent need for a joint general staff, sitting continuously in Paris and representative of all the Allies."

BULGAR ADVANCES TO GREECE

Berlin Reports Zaimis Intimated Nations Understood Each Other.

BERLIN, Oct. 18, (by wireless to Tuckerton, N. J.)—The Overseas News Agency says today:

"Advices from Saloniki through Budapest state that the Bulgarian Minister to Greece, in advising Premier Zaimis of Bulgaria's declaration of war against Serbia, gave expression to the friendly sentiments which Bulgaria held toward Greece.

"Premier Zaimis expressed his thanks for the readiness of the Bulgarian Government to help provide for Greece in a way which would be necessary in the event of a blockade of the Greek coast. The Greek Premier added that the two nations had misunderstood each other, but from this time on would march in the same direction.

"A dispatch from Athens says that the Ministers of the Quadruple Entente were received by King Constantine, to whom the British Minister, in the name of the Entente, sought to demonstrate that it was to the interest of Greece to ally itself with the powers there represented. The King interrupted him, the dispatch adds, and asked the Ministers to present their case to the Government officials upon whom devolved the handling of such matters.

"The Ministers remained scarcely ten minutes in the Royal Palace, going thence to call upon the Prime Minister, to whom they delivered a new note.

"The correspondent of the Lokal-Anzeiger at Athens reports having had an interview with the Bulgarian Minister to Greece in which the Minister declared that Serbia had attacked Bulgaria, as was proved by the fact that the first fighting took place near Kuestendil on Bulgarian territory, several kilometers distant from the Serbian frontier, all statements to the contrary notwithstanding.

A dispatch to the Berliner Tageblatt from Sofia states that the condition of A. A. Savinsky, the Russian Minister to Bulgaria, who remained in Sofia because of illness after the break in relations between the two countries, recently took a turn for the worse. Whereupon, it is stated, M. Radoslavoff, the Bulgarian Premier, sent the Chief of Protocols to inquire regarding the welfare of the Russian diplomat.

The Bulgarian Government has permitted the Bulgarian sanitary mission in Russia to continue its work, the dispatch adds.

"According to a dispatch from Vienna, Russia inquired informally of Rumania whether that country would permit the passage of Russian troops through the Dobrudja district. The Rumanian Prime Minister, M. Bratiano, however, declared that it was the firm decision of Rumania to defend her neutrality most energetically against all armed encroachments."

WOULD KEEP ARMY AT HOME.

Italians Averse to Sending an Expedition to the Balkans.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Oct. 18.—Public opinion here continues painfully preoccupied with the gravity of the present crisis in the war. Some military critics, considering the Balkan front to be of secondary importance, argue that it would be a further error to endeavor to remedy past diplomatic mistakes by sending an Italian expedition to Serbia, and that the latter could best be helped by threatening other fronts having greater military and political value.

The conviction is growing here that the only chance of the Allies to prevent the crushing of Serbia, if there is yet time, is to resign themselves to acting temporarily on the defensive on other fronts and rush all available troops to the Balkans. If successful, this move dictated by the enemy's strategy would in the end prove his undoing.

But those who hold this view say that to expect Italy until she has had time for complete preparation to deprive herself of large contingents for overseas campaigning, is to expect the impossible and can only be productive of disappointment.

FIGURES ON DASH TO TURKEY.

Alleged German Order Says Corps Will Be in Constantinople Dec. 3.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—A dispatch from Basle says that it is learned that a German Lieutenant, detached from duty while convalescing, has received orders to rejoin his corps, the Sixteenth Bavarian, at Dedeaghatch, Bulgaria, between Nov. 16 and Dec. 3.

After this time, the order is said to state, the corps will be stationed at Constantinople.

TELLS OF BULGAR ADVANCE.

General Shoitov Says Serbs Were Driven Back Two to Nine Miles.

BERLIN, Oct. 18, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—"In an interview Saturday with the correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt," says the Overseas News Agency, "the Bulgarian chief of the General Staff, General Shoitov, said that the Serbians had unexpectedly attacked and conquered Bulgarian frontier positions, but that they were soon driven back by the Bulgarians, whose counter offensive movement advanced from four kilometers, (about 2½ miles,) to fifteen kilometers, (about 9 1-3 miles,) into Serbia.

"General Shoitov added that Athens and Bucharest were now apparently sure that Bulgaria only desired to carry out here national plans in the Serbian part of Macedonia.

Montenegrins Bag an Aeroplane.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—A Reuter dispatch from Cettinje, dated Oct. 12, says that attacks, delivered the preceding day by the Austrians against Montenegrin positions on the Drina Grahovo front, were repulsed with heavy losses. One of three aeroplanes, flying over the Montenegrin positions, fell near Plevlje and the pilot and an officer were captured.

COLUMBIA STUDENTS SAFE.

No Alarm Felt for Those Who Went to Do Sanitary Work in Serbia.

The Committee of Mercy denied yesterday the report published in the papers of Sunday that fear is felt for the safety of eight of the Columbia students who went with the committee's Serbian expedition, which left this country for Nish, Serbia, last June to aid in the sanitary work carried on by the Sanitary Commission of the American Red Cross and the Rockefeller Foundation.

Ten members of the expedition have already returned.

Members working in Lady Paget's hospital at Skoplje are W. W. Eaton, M. A. Tancock, D. Peters, and Mr. Lovell. W. Prickett was with the expedition on Sept. 22, but was expected to go to England within a fortnight to take up his work as a Rhodes scholar.

Dr. Douglas Dold, a member of the expedition, is stationed at Dobrun in charge of the clinic for Bosnian refugees, and he has with him W. E. Dold, E. E. Childs, P. F. Jones, and G. E. Bell. Elbridge Colby left Serbia for France before the committee's expedition came to an end on Sept. 22. L. L. Lisle remains in Serbia as a war correspondent.

ENOS LONG AN ALLIED BASE.

Turkish Port Has Been Used as Place to Transship Troops.

The Allies have had a base at the Turkish port of Enos, near the northern side of the entrance to the Gulf of Saros, since April 21, and have there discharged troops from transports, reshipping them on barges twenty or thirty miles south to where they were needed at Gallipoli.

Twelve miles northwest across the open Gulf of Enos is Dedeaghatch, where the railway from Saloniki from the west (230 miles) joins that from Kuleli Burgas on the Nish-Sofia-Constantinople road (60 miles) at the north. South of this railway (the famous Orient Express) from Kuleli Burgas to the Chatalja lines, which run seventeen miles west of the Turkish capital, from the Black Sea to the Sea of Marmora, the land, low and marshy and cut by innumerable creeks, is not suitable for military operations.

In the Russo-Turkish war of 1828-29 the Russian General Diebitsch fought his way from Midia across the isthmus and captured Enos, a matter of 110 miles, in three weeks, and thereby established communication with the Russian fleet blockading the Dardanelles. The result of this movement was that the Russians held a line, from sea to sea, about 100 miles in length, within 120 miles of the capital, with only 20,000 men until peace was signed at Adrianople on Aug. 1829. The Bulgarians with the aid of 60,000 Serbs held a line even nearer Constantinople in the Spring of 1913.

The Bulgarian port of Dedeaghatch has a bad anchorage, but is superior to Enos as a base. Between the two towns is the delta of the Maritza. The railway to Kuleli Burgas ascends the broad and marshy valley of this stream as far as Dimotika, on the River Chat, eight miles southwest of Kuleli Burgas. The railroad passes through an 800-square-mile Turkish salient, which was ceded to Bulgaria on July 22 last.

About thirty miles from the Maritza delta the Ergene joins the stream from the northeast, after having furnished a roadbed for the Orient Express on its way west to within twelve miles of Kuleli Burgas. Between the two rivers there is an area of 200 square miles, excellent for field operations but poor for defense. Any troops sent to oppose an invasion at Dedeaghatch or Enos either must be sent down the railway from the Orient Express or march for miles across marshes.

The fact that Enos, as a base of the Allies, has enjoyed immunity from a Turkish attack for five months shows that the Turks had no mind to make use of the second expediency. Whatever use they and the Bulgarians may now make of the Dedeaghatch-Kuleli Burgas Railway is problematical. As the surrounding country as far as Dimotika offers no natural defenses, they will probably retreat, destroying the railway as they go.

GERMANY'S HOPES NOW IN BALKANS

Check in Russia the Cause of Swift Change of Plans, It Is Said.

SEES SALVATION IN ORIENT

Troops Rushed to Meet Offensive in West as New Campaign Was Being Elaborated

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROTTERDAM, Oct. 18, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—"All Germany believes the complications in the Balkans have brought about an entirely new phase in the war, and they are looking more and more anxiously to the Balkans as the key to the situation. They have tried to cut a way out both east and west and failed. The way through Serbia is the last way out, and everybody is watching with the utmost keenness the progress of the new venture. They have great hopes of a far-reaching success."

These words were used in the course of an interview I had today with a gentleman who for some months has occupied a position that gives him exceptional opportunity of knowing not only the diplomatic activities of Germany but also her military plans. The original scheme for the expedition to Serbia was comparatively modest in intention. It has now been enormously elaborated, and both militarists and diplomatists think they see in its successful prosecution long vistas of consequences that will put a period to English world domination or bring England clamoring for peace.

"The central fact in the whole consideration of these new plans was to capture the Russian Army at Vilna," said my informant. "Too much importance cannot be attached to this. It upset the whole scheme of the Germans. They at once realized that their whole chance of crushing Russia was gone and rushed back troops to the west to meet the coming offensive of the Allies, and simultaneously they elaborated their plans for marching through Serbia and into the Orient. As a matter of fact, they had succeeded in getting a large body of troops back into the western trenches before the offensive, hence their ability to prevent an immediate break through.

"Russia's success caused the elaboration of the Serbia campaign, and Russia's ultimatum to Bulgaria forced them to start it before they were really ready. They had to start before the Allies could get there. They think they can strangle England by relieving the Turks and setting them free to cut the Suez Canal and seize big tracts of land in the Orient. That is their new place in the sun. The East offers them new chances of economic development. That is to take the place of Belgium, which no serious German ever hopes to retain. They realize the inadvisability of the plans of the annexationists and have no desire to create in the north another Alsace problem.

"The war madness has gone. The people desire permanent peace, and they hope the Balkan struggle will give it to them. Some believe a mere display of power and determination to undertake this new campaign will alone have a tremendous effect in England and make her more amenable to peace proposals."

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 18, (via London).—Telegraphing under date of Friday the correspondent with General von Gallwitz's army in Serbia of the Cologne Gazette, says:

"The Germans have to contend with severe battles against a stubborn and desperately fighting army." After referring to the progress already achieved by the Germans on Serbian soil he continues:

"The difficult mountain country with its bizarre, rocky and steep clinker formations causes our troops enormous difficulties, which also are augmented by the fact that the Germans have to fight continually higher on rising ground.

"The Serbians facing them are in admirable defensive positions, which enable them to hold for a long time the defensive sectors when attacked. Despite unfavorable mountain land and the extremely bad condition of the valley roads the German troops have succeeded in progressing."

London Paper Strongly Against Public Discussion of the Operations.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—The Daily Telegraph, in an editorial on the Balkan situation, says:

"It seems more than likely that operations to which secrecy is vital are still in progress and no responsible being in this country will show impatience of any delay which the Government may consider necessary before putting us in possession of the broad facts of the situation now being created in the Balkan theatre.

"It is for that reason in particular that we look upon the agitation in some quarters for a full discussion of that situation in the House of Commons as illtimed and mischievous. We have no doubt that the Prime Minister will adhere to his decision not to grant facilities for any such debate, and we are certain that not one Englishman in a hundred would question the propriety of such a refusal. If while the first stages of the enterprise were still in progress the whole matter were to come up in Commons and increased opportunity was given to some feeble and feverish spirits to do their little worst for their country the Government would be more seriously to blame than it has been in many of its proceedings about which clamor has been raised."

BRITISH FLEET IN MOVIES.

Complete Pictures of Its Activities to be Exhibited to Public.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—The Daily Mail says the Admiralty has arranged for complete kinetograph pictures of the grand fleet in both black and white and in colors.

The British film trade selected as their representative Charles Urban, who has just returned with three assistants from a ten days' visit to the fleet, during which he obtained complete pictures of the real activities of the navy.

The Admiralty has arranged that half of the receipts from exhibition of the pictures shall be distributed among naval charities.

SUMMONS THE KAISER FOR JUDGMENT DAY

Father of Raid Victim Proclaims in Court the Emperor's Personal Culpability.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—An inquest on the bodies of the three victims of the first bomb dropped in the Zeppelin raid last Wednesday night on the London area and of three others who were killed or who died as the result of subsequent air bombs was held today. The verdict in each case was "death as the result of an air raid."

The father of one of the victims stood up in court and protested against the laconic verdict, shouting:

"My son was murdered by the order of the Kaiser. I summon the Kaiser to meet me before the judgment seat of God to answer for the death of my son and of those other poor people."

Ameng thoso killed by the first bomb was a railroad employe. Both of his thighs were broken. His wife, who was by his side, escaped unhurt. The second was a man who was killed by broken glass which cut through his neck. The third victim was a woman close by, whose spine was crushed.

The other dead were the victims of a bomb dropped in the middle of a wide thoroughfare. A driver, a conductor, and a special constable were killed in a motor bus. The bomb pierced a water main, and the rush of water quickly extinguished the fire, but several persons passing at the time were either killed or injured.

BELLIGERENT AVIATOR BOMBARDS SWISS TOWN

Bombs Dropped on Village, Near French Border, Hurt Several —Government to Protest.

CHAUX DES FONDS, Switzerland, Oct. 18, (via Paris.)—A foreign aeroplane passed yesterday afternoon over this town, which is near the French border, and dropped three bombs. One adult and one child were wounded.

BERNE, Oct. 18.—Three grown persons and one child were gravely injured, according to Government reports of the bomb throwing by a foreign aviator flying over the Swiss town of Chaux des Fonds. The Government has ordered an inquiry into the occurrence and will renew protests to the belligerent countries against violations of Swiss territory by aeroplanists.

BELGIAN LINES HELD FAST.

Repulsed Fierce German Attacks Saturday and Sunday Nights.

LA PANNE, Belgium, Oct. 17, (via Paris, Oct. 18.)—The Belgische Standardt, published here, says that a terrible bombardment was in progress along the Yser front Saturday and Sunday nights. The firing was especially violent near Dixmude and Ypres.

This bombardment was the prelude to an attempt by the Germans to break the Belgian lines. The Belgian artillery returned the fire, shelling the enemy's communication trenches and scattering his infantry as they leaped from the trenches. A second attack on a smaller scale also was repulsed.

This offensive took place in the Dixmude region at a spot known as "Death's Highway," which has been stubbornly disputed by both sides. Although mowed down in rows, the Belgians have been holding their own and not yielding an inch of ground.

EDITS A LUSITANIA TABLET.

Church of England Official Bars the Word "Murdered" from It.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—"The wall of a church is not an appropriate place to perpetuate hatred," was the reason given by Sir Philip Wilbraham, Chancellor of the Diocese of Chester, when refusing to permit a memorial tablet to a victim of the Lusitania in Holyoke Church to bear the inscription, "Who was murdered on the Lusitania by the Germans."

The word "murdered," Sir Philip said, would have to be taken out of the tablet. The Chancellor then suggested that the inscription should read, "Who lost his life when the Lusitania was torpedoed by the Germans." This was agreed to.

FIND PASSPORT TRUE BILLS.

Rintelen and Meloy Indicted Here for Attempted Fraud.

Indictments were filed late last night by the Federal Grand Jury against Franz Rintelen, who is said to be known also as Fred Hansen, Miller, Muller, Edward V. Gates, and Edward V. Gasche, and against Edward Meloy, on the charge of conspiring to defraud the Government by procuring a false passport from the State Department. Rintelen is supposed to be in a detention camp in England; Meloy is out on $10,000 bail.

According to the indictments, the conspiracy was formed here on July 1. Rintelen applied at the Clerk's office in the Federal District Court on July 29 for a passport in the name of Edward V. Gates of Pennsylvania and took an oath to defend the Constitution of the United States. Meloy, it is charged, told Melville C. Barnard, who vouched for Rintelen, that the applicant's name was Gates, and on August 3 he wrote to the Department of State to say that he had known Gates as a wine agent and had bought wines from him. He said Gates came from his own State, Pennsylvania.

The State Department did not issue the passport, and Rintelen in the end sailed with a Swiss passport under the name of Edward V. Gasche. He was taken off the Nieuw Amsterdam by the British authorities at Falmouth, and Meloy, who was with him, was sent back to this country. Certain papers seized by the British authorities have not been returned, and that fact yesterday caused the suggestion in the Federal Building that Rintelen might have been shot as a spy.

The Federal Grand Jury is continuing its investigation of passport frauds.

Lieutenant Carlisle is a brother of Mary Helen Carlisle, an artist, of this city, and of Sybil Carlisle, the actress. With another officer he entered an excavation, which was in a very dangerous condition owing to gas fumes following an explosion, in order to rescue a man who had been overcome. The man was saved.

had a record before the war began which was eclipsed by very few in the British Army. He was born in the Island of Corfu in 1853, and entered the army at the age of 20. He had a year of military training in a circle of Hanoverian and Saxon officers in Dresden, and later received the first-class Order of the Red Eagle of Prussia along with other foreign decorations.

Hamilton served in the Afghan war of 1878-1880, the Boer war of 1881, the Nile expedition of 1884-5, the Burmese expedition of 1886-7, the Chitral expedition of 1895, and the Tirah campaign of 1897-8. In the Boer war he performed brilliant service at Elandslaagte and in the siege of Ladysmith, was Chief of Staff to Lord Kitchener in 1901-2, and commanded mobile columns in the Western Transvaal in the last months of the war. In the Russo-Japanese war he served as military representative of the Indian Army, and in 1910 he was made Commander in Chief in the Mediterranean and Inspector General of the Overseas Forces. He has done much to improve the marksmanship of the British Army.

His successor, Major Gen. Sir Charles Carmichael Monro, is also known as a musketry expert, having commanded the School of Musketry at Hythe, where he had previously served as chief instructor. He served in Afghanistan and in the Boer war of 1899-1902, and commanded a territorial division for two years before the present war broke out.

Maj. Gen. Sir William Riddell Birdwood, the commander ad interim, served as military secretary to Lord Kitchener while he commanded in South Africa in 1902 and later when he was Commander in Chief in India in 1905. He served in various campaigns in India in the nineties, was badly wounded in the Boer war, where he was mentioned in dispatches five times, and was Chief Staff Officer of the Mohmand expedition in 1908. He was wounded at the Dardanelles in May.

ALLIES TO LEAVE GALLIPOLI?

Berlin Hears That Troops Will Be Withdrawn Gradually.

BERLIN, Oct. 18, (by Wireless to Tuckerton, N. J.)—A dispatch to the National Zeitung "from the Russian border" says:

"Your correspondent learns from a well-informed source that the abandonment of the Dardanelles campaign by France and Great Britain has already been decided upon. Russian circles interested in this matter have been informed that the Allies will not suspend operations on the Gallipoli Peninsula all at once, but will gradually withdraw troops from there.

"Military circles of the Entente powers are fully convinced of the hopelessness of the Dardanelles undertaking in its present form."

The correspondent adds that another reason for the abandonment of the campaign is that the troops are needed for service in Serbia.

ARABIC SETTLEMENT WITHHELD IN BERLIN

Editor of Vossische Zeitung Suspects We Are Keeping Back Bernstorff's Report.

BERLIN, Oct. 18.—George Bernhard, editor of the Vossische Zeitung, continues today his weekly discussion of matters relating to Germany and the United States. He reviews the case of Dr. Constantin Dumba, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador who was recalled by his Government, the Ambassador's letter to Secretary Lansing having just been published here. Herr Bernhard concludes that Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador at Washington, is also having difficulty in communicating with his Government, because his official report of his Arabic transactions has not yet been made public.

After declaring that Dr. Dumba's letter "belongs to the most sensational written revelations in this all too sensational war," Herr Bernhard says: "These reports of the Ambassador throw a new and most

FRENCH GUNS SPOIL GERMAN ATTACK

Curtain of Fire Prevents a Drive in Force Planned Near Souchez.

BRITISH RUSHES CHECKED

Berlin Reports Heavy English Losses in Attempts to Carry the Vermelles Salient.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—By the expedient of a curtain of fire directed against the enemy's massed forces east of Souchez, the French today prevented an attack for which the Germans had been preparing by an intense bombardment of the French trenches. There were brisk artillery exchanges south of the Somme and in Champagne, where French shells exploded a German munitions dépôt.

French and German reports agree that the fighting in the Vosges is continuing with vigor. Berlin asserts that strong British attacks on the German salient northeast of Vermelles, in Artois, have failed with heavy losses. German aviators yesterday dropped bombs on the French fortress of Belfort.

Following is the official night report from Paris:

After an intense artillery preparation, menaces of infantry attacks were manifested in the German trenches at Bois-en-Hache and the Valley of the Souchez, where large masses of enemy effectives were gathered. Our artillery, by an energetic and effective barrier fire, and our machine guns prevented the adversary from debouching.

An artillery duel, in which we had the advantage, took place to the south of the Somme, in the environs of Tilloloy, Cessier, and St. Léocade.

On the left bank of the Aisne, to the south of Pommiers, our patrols discovered an enemy ambuscade and brought back prisoners.

In Champagne the bombardment of the enemy has been very active against the Tahure Hill and the Ravine of La Goutte. Our batteries, in replying on the trenches and bivouacs behind the enemy's front, caused an explosion of a large munitions depot.

In the Vosges spirited combats with grenades are reported on the crests of Schratzmannele and violent cannonading on both sides in the region of Hartmannsweilerkopf and in the Valley of the Thur.

This is the text of the French afternoon communication:

Three new attacks on the part of the enemy against our positions at Bois-en-Hache, to the northeast of Souchez, were completely checked last night by curtains of fire in which both artillery and infantry participated.

To the south of the River Somme, in the sector of Lihons, there has been almost continual fighting with trench weapons, while in the meantime our batteries directed an effective fire against the German works.

To the north of Verdun German forces have endeavored to occupy the craters of certain mines recently exploded between the lines. They have been repulsed everywhere.

Last night witnessed very spirited infantry fire between the trenches in the vicinity of Nomemy. Our artillery in the same region has dispersed groups of pioneers of the enemy, particularly to the east of Eply and near Gremecey and Bioncourt, and it has also bombarded the railroad station at Blamont.

The official statement from Berlin follows:

The trench work northeast of Vermelles, which projects far into the enemy positions, was repeatedly attacked by the English with strong forces. All their attacks failed with heavy losses, and the trench work remained in our hands.

Attempts of the French to attack at Tahure were subdued by our fire.

A new enemy advance with the object of recapturing lost positions south of Leintrey was unsuccessful. It cost the French, in addition to sanguinary losses three officers, seventeen noncommissioned officers and seventy-three chasseurs as prisoners.

On Schratzmannele the enemy could not recapture a single foot of ground by his attacks, notwithstanding the use of a considerable quantity of ammunition.

Yesterday German air squadrons attacked the fortress of Belfort, drove off the enemy aviators, and dropped eight bombs on the fortress. A number of fires were observed to have been caused by the explosions.

The Belgian official communication reads.

There has been an intermittent bombardment of our positions. Our artillery destroyed an enemy observation post.

BERLIN STOCKS ADVANCE.

News Agency Reports an "Important Upward Movement."

BERLIN, Oct. 18, (by Wireless to Tuckerton, N. J.)—A strong demand for stocks, with an important upward movement on the Berlin Stock Exchange, is reported by the Overseas News Agency today, "owing to the favorable situation in all war theatres, especially the Balkans."

Steel, mining, automobile, and petroleum stocks are in especially good demand. In the last few days there has been a wide inquiry for shares of shipping companies. Mexican stocks are improving, owing to the decision of the Pan-American Conference to recommend recognition of General Carranza. American railway stocks have a large following.

The money market reflects the influence of payments for war loan subscriptions. Call money is 4½ to 5 per cent. The private discount rate is 4⅝ per cent.

"Subscriptions to the new Austrian war loan," the Overseas News Agency said, "in the first six days of the subscription period are estimated to have amounted to more than 1,000,000,000 marks, ($250,000,000.)"

SEES ANTI-GERMAN PLOT.

Staats-Zeitung Assails the New "America First" Organization.

Under the title "America First—After England," the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung in its evening edition yesterday commented upon the organization recently formed at the home of Vincent Astor to carry out the slogan of "America First" in the assimilation of foreign-born citizens. It said:

"Let no one be deceived! As good as many names sound, and no matter how many neutral and high-minded men and women have allowed themselves to be drawn as members of the committees, and desirable as a movement is in principle that seeks to make immigrants familiar and in love with America, America's language, and America's history, and American characteristics—nevertheless, equally transparent is the real purpose of the movement.

"It is directed against the influence of the German immigrants in the future, against the influence of the German language, the German culture. It is a sort of Know-Nothing movement of former days in a polter form. It is a revival of the school of conflict of the nineties in the West. But at the same time the movement is an acknowledgment that the German-American has made himself felt as a factor, and must therefore be annihilated."

At another point on its editorial page the newspaper says:

"The President's daughter is authority for the fact that her exalted father possesses a fine voice, a very adaptable tenor. If we have nominated the Honorable of Oyster Bay as 'outside guard' we can scarcely now do less for the present Papa of the Country; therefore let us set him up as President of the mixed chorus in which the Collector of the Port learns to sing 'God Save the King,' and in which notes are read only in the German language."

THINK GERMANS BOUND FOR REFUGE IN CUBA

Were Sighted Off Virginia Coast —May Cancel Shore Liberty of Interned Men.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The missing petty officers and sailors from the interned German cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm at Norfolk are believed to be making their way to Cuba.

The Navy Department has received the report of a ship Captain who saw the power boat Eclipse off Virginia Beach Monday. He did not report until late last week, and no trace of the Eclipse has been found.

Unless the fugitive German sailors return, it was said today, the crews of all interned vessels at Norfolk would be held aboard their ships and no more shore liberty would be granted.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HAVANA, Oct. 18.—The vessels of the Cuban navy have been told to watch the inlets where the yacht Eclipse, manned by German officers and sailors, who broke their parole at Norfolk, might seek a harbor.

WAR AIDS SUFFRAGE, MRS. BLATCH BELIEVES

Lauds Work of Women in Hospitals —Urges Practical Peace Propaganda.

"I have come back from England and the Continent more than ever convinced of the necessity of a full and free democracy," said Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, President of the Women's Political Union at the headquarters of the union, 25 West Forty-fifth Street, yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Blatch returned on the Philadelphia on Sunday from a visit to England and France.

"No one can go to Europe," Mrs. Blatch continued, "without realizing that a small group of men has landed the nations over there in this awful cataclysm. I can't help asking myself what would they have said if it had been the women who had brought this about. It has been said many times in different ways that there was danger in giving women the vote because they would vote their countries into war and then stay at home themselves and send the men off to be killed.

"The value of the work of the women is recognized to such an extent now that former opponents of woman suffrage say that after the war the women must certainly receive the vote. Everything that I saw was an argument for suffrage. Mrs. Millicent Fawcett, President of the National Union of Women's Societies, said that Mr. and Mrs. Humphry Ward—Mrs. Ward ranks as a strong anti-suffragist in England—say that the women certainly will get the vote after the war.

"I have come back more opposed to war than ever. The whole situation seemed to be insane. But if the situation has arrived it must be met in some way. In the meantime something practical and political must be done to prepare for a continuous peace after this war is ended. I think the peace people were more interested in their Nobel prize than they were in making real plans for a general peace. They have not been thinking practically or politically. There is no use talking and talking against war until you outline a practical plan to prevent it. I believe in an international court, international police, and an army and navy to uphold the decisions of the court."

EXPECT $25,000,000 BRITISH GOLD TODAY

Much Secrecy About a Large Shipment of Sovereigns on the Way to J. P. Morgan & Co.

Another large shipment of British gold is looked for in Wall Street today or tomorrow. Details of the shipment were not obtainable yesterday, every effort being made to prevent information regarding shipments from leaking out until the gold is safely stored in the Government vaults, but reports had it that the consignment consisted of $25,000,000.

This shipment, like others recently, is expected to come by way of Halifax. The gold is in the form of sovereigns, for which reason it will go into the United States Assay Office instead of to the Sub-Treasury, there to be melted into bars. The proceeds will be credited to the British Government on the books of J. P. Morgan & Co. and used to pay for war purchases made here.

This gold was dispatched before the conclusion of the arrangements for the $500,000,000 loan, but it was said by bankers that that loan was not expected to make further gold shipments unnecessary. J. P. Morgan & Co. are not always advised when gold is on the way, owing to the possibilities of a leak in transmitting the notification.

LOAN RESULT PLEASES FRENCH

Paris Temps Believes We Have Confidence in Allies' Victory.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—In commenting on the signature of the American loan to the Allies, the Temps says:

"The American people are thus associated in the results of this enterprise. Evidently the events in the Balkans did not produce the effect that Germany desired and did not affect the growing feeling of confidence in the Allies' victory. Rather it is likely that the Americans, traditionally admirers of courage and loyalty, will become more sympathetic to our cause owing to the Macedonian expedition."

Commenting on the expected increase of the American fleet, the Temps says:

"The President has learned from dealing with Germany that right should be supported by might. Germany's Turkish allies did not deign even to notice the Americans' protest about the Armenians, while the flight of the officers of the Kronprinz Wilhelm gives the Americans one more instance of the value of German promises.

"We may hope that the new financial union will show Americans how many reasons exist for them as well as for the Allies to oppose world conquest by a nation that deifies brute strength and elevates barbarism to a science."

HINDENBURG'S ARMY PRESSES RUSSIANS

Kaiser's Forces Make Gains on the Front Between Riga and Dvinsk.

LOSE IN GALICIA FIGHTS

Cossacks Again Conspicuous in Encounters—Many Germans Taken Prisoners.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 19. — Heavy fighting is persistent on the eastern front, but neither side has attempted a new general offensive.

The Germans are still making a great effort between Riga and Dvinsk and have met with minor successes, but thence to the Rumanian border, wherever there has been any fighting, it is the Russians who are attacking. They also claim some gains.

The official communication issued by the Russian War Office says:

In the region of Riga, on the River Aa, north of Mitau, enemy elements which advanced beyond Hergogshof were thrown back across the river.

On the Dvinsk front, after the attacks repulsed yesterday, the enemy remained passive throughout the day. Only near the village of Pochlini did he make attempts to dislodge us from trenches in the occupied section. We repulsed both these attacks. Artillery fighting continues.

Between the Demmen and Dreswiaty Lakes there has been no cessation in the fighting.

The Germans were dislodged with enormous losses from positions north of the village of Nourviantzy on the southern shore of Lake Dreswiaty. We captured prisoners and machine guns.

On the Upper Niemen above Dellatitchi we carried by assault the village of Chtchersy.

South of the Pripet region and on the Middle Styr our troops yesterday gained an important success during the occupation of the village of Sovlechtachitzy, above Rafalovka. We captured thirteen officers, including two battalion commanders, and five hundred men.

Detachments of our cavalry charged the enemy near the station of Podcherevitchi, west of Rafalovka. Thus far 30 officers and over 1,000 men and some machine guns have fallen into our hands.

We have occupied the village of Kozlinitchi, below Czartorysk.

By simultaneous attacks from the north and south our troops occupied the village of Novoselki, on the Styr above Czartorysk, and its bridgehead.

After we had repulsed German and Austrian soldiers and a number of bomb throwers and some telegraph stores at dawn yesterday, our troops got into the village of Kulikovichi, above Novoselki.

Thus far we have captured over 1,000 prisoners and many machine guns and bomb throwers.

This is the German Headquarters Staff statement as to the operations:

Field Marshal von Hindenburg in his attack south of Riga made good progress. Two officers and 280 other prisoners remained in our hands.

Russian attacks west of Jacobstadt were repulsed.

West of Illoukst we captured enemy positions extending on a front of about three kilometers. (1.8 miles.)

Further south, in the region of Smorgon, repeated Russian advances, undertaken with strong forces, were repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy. Two officers and 175 men were taken prisoners.

Army group of Prince Leopold of Bavaria:

A Russian attack on both sides of the Liachovitschi-Baranovitchi Railway broke down under our fire at a distance of 400 yards in front of our positions.

From Vienna comes this official communication:

There were no special events yesterday in eastern Galicia on the Ikwa front and the region of the Volhynian fortresses.

On the Kormin Brook and the lower Styr the enemy made several strong attacks near Kulikovitchi, Novo Selki, and Rafalowka. The battle continues. At all other points the enemy yesterday was repulsed, with great losses. The Austro-Hungarian troops on the upper Szczara also repulsed a strong Russian attack.

SIMPLE LIFE OF CZAR WORKING AT THE FRONT

Authorized Description Says He Lives in Two-Story House and Labors Long.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 18, (via London,)—The following authorized description of the Emperor's life at the front has reached Petrograd:

"Headquarters has been established in a small two-story house in a White Russian city, the name of which is necessarily omitted. Emperor Nicholas occupies two rooms on the second floor—one as a bedroom and the other as an office. On the same floor are Minister of the Court General Baron Fredericks and the palace commandant, General Voekoff, each of whom occupies a single room. On the first floor are the Emperor's physician and various persons of his suite. The number of servants has been cut to the minimum.

"Near the house, in Government buildings and hotels, live the Grand Dukes Cyril, Boris, Dmitri Pavlovitch, and others of the temporary court.

"At 9 o'clock in the morning the Emperor, attired in a field uniform, walks to the offices of the General Staff accompanied by one of his officers. With General Alexieff, Chief of Staff, the Emperor reads the reports and issues orders until 1 P. M. He informs himself concerning the conditions on all parts of the immense front, examines maps, and discusses events. To the luncheon in the Emperor's quarters are invited the high military officers and the foreign military observers, altogether a dozen persons. The luncheon is brief and simple. No wine is served.

"After luncheon the Emperor chats with his guests. Two o'clock finds the Emperor and General Alexieff again occupied with reports in the Emperor's private office. In mid-afternoon the Emperor motors for an hour or two, and then returns to work until dinner is served at 7:30 o'clock. The dinner is of three courses and is less formal than the luncheon.

"At 9 o'clock in the evening, after brief conversations with his guests, the Emperor returns to his office and works far into the night, General Alexieff frequently going there for a conference. The General Staff works night and day."

Kaiser's Hope for Missions.

BERLIN, Oct. 18, (by Wireless Telegraphy to Sayville, N. BLAMES GERMANS FOR RIOTS IN RUSSIA

New Minister of Interior to Take Justice Against Them Out of Mob's Hands.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 19.—In a letter to The Times, discussing M. Khvostoff's appointment as Russian Minister of the Interior, Stephen Graham says:

"Khvostoff's first act seems to be a proclamation of martial law at Moscow, and that act raises the whole question of the riots and strikes in that city during the last six months.

"Last June, after the fall of Przemysl and Lwow the well known disturbance took place. It was not at the time thought to be important, but it has proved to be the starting point in the struggle toward mob rule in Russia and internal chaos. The official figures showed that the damage done to business establishments was 31,406,533 roubles, to private houses 7,100,090, making a total of 38,506,623 roubles.

"One hundred and thirteen Austrian and German subjects suffered, as also did 489 Russian subjects with foreign names and 90 Russian subjects with Russian names; and despite the fact that the German elements in the population of Moscow suffered heavily, it is generally held that Germans themselves were responsible for the rioting and that they wished to produce a state of confusion in the interior of Russia that would facilitate the onward march of the German and Austrian legions across Poland. Even Radicals in the Duma ascribed the provocation and incendiarism of these riots to Germans.

"Whether they were right or not is a moot point. One thing that is clear is that such disorders do help the eGrmans and that nothing would play more decisively into the hands of the eGrman Army than mob rule in the depths of Russia and in the great cities. Every one is agreed that justice must be taken out of the hands of the mob; that Germans and Pro-Germans must be prosecuted if they have committed acts of treason and that in any case justice must be reserved to the State to administer.

"The people were crying that they had been betrayed. The popular thirst for vengeance on the betrayers must be assuaged not by mob rule and murder, but through the administration of an ordered government.

"This policy was extremely popular among all true Russians, either of conservative or radical opinion, and it is astonishing that it should have been foregone in favor of the advanced policy of parliamentary reform proclaimed by M. Miliukoff. It was a mistake to put it to one side; but the mistake has probably been rectified, and Khvostoff is beginning with his besom.

"During the whole of Summer and Autumn there has been a sense of insecurity in Petrograd and Moscow, the sense of hidden forces at work striving to bring about disorders. On the whole, the good sense of the Russian working class population has kept the upper hand.

"If there had veen vodka to hand out it is possible that all might have been lost; but the Bear's firm hand in prohibiting liquor has kept the hooligan element cool.

"Now Khvostoff is setting about a vigorous investigation of the facts with regard to the German forces at work in the country. There are undoubtedly a great number of German agents always at work. Let them be brought to justice, and the popular thirst for what are called samosudi, or what we call lynch judgments, will be assuaged."

COLOMBIA DETAINS A SUSPICIOUS YACHT

Academy, Alias Ethel, Said to Have a German Master and Irregular Papers.

BOGOTA, Colombia, Oct. 18.—An American yacht bound from San Francisco, with the name "Academy" painted over the name "Ethel," and carrying an unusually large crew, is being detained by Government authorities near Buenaventura, a Colombian port on the Pacific, under suspicious circumstances.

According to the Colombian officials, the vessel's papers are irregular. The German name of the master of the ship, it is asserted, has been erased from the papers and an American name substituted for it.

The yacht was searched, but nothing was found to indicate the mission of the crew. The vessel will be detained until her legal status has been established.

The only yacht named Ethel given in available registers of American yachts is that of a screw launch 30 feet long, with a beam of 8 feet. She is owned in Eastern waters, and, in view of her size, it is not probable that this is the vessel now under detention on the Colombian coast.

SUBMARINE HAVOC IN MEDITERRANEAN SEA

Bernstoff Gets Report of Twenty-three Vessels, Including Four Transports, Sunk in Last Few Weeks.

Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, announced yesterday that an official communication from Berlin stated that German submarines had recently sunk twenty-three vessels, including four transports of the Allies, in the Mediterranean Sea. The Ambassador received this message:

"During the last few weeks German submarines, operating in the Mediterranean, have sunk twenty-three vessels having an aggregate tonnage of 100,000. Of the vessels sunk four were transports of the Allies."

No statement was made as to the loss of life incident to the sinking of the various vessels.

In the last six weeks four British transports have been reported sunk in or close to the Mediterranean and a fifth in the Aegean Sea. In some instances there has not been any direct confirmation of these sinkings from London. During the same period several merchant vessels flying either the flags of Great Britain, France, or Russia have been reported sunk in the Mediterranean Sea. On Sept. 24 the Overseas News Agency at Berlin sent a dispatch quoting Spanish newspapers as stating that German submarines had recently sunk a number of steamers belonging to the Allies.

On Sept. 28 it was officially announced at Athens that the Greek Government had released the Sikhs and Gurkhas who were survivors of the British transport Ramazan. There had been no previous report of the sinking of the Ramazan. A Berlin dispatch the following day indicated the transport had been sunk in the Mediterranean.

Vienna reported on Sept. 17 that an Austrian submarine had sunk a British transport in the Mediterranean district. On Sept. 9 Berlin announced the British transport Southland had been sunk by a submarine in Turkish waters. On Aug. 29 Berlin reported a submarine had sunk a British transport carrying Canadian troops near the Mediterranean.

On Sept. 3 Berlin reported a British transport had been sunk, either by a submarine or mine, in the Aegean Sea and that 320 officers, 1,250 soldiers, and a crew of 300 had been drowned. This was believed to have been the British transport Royal Edward, officially reported sunk on Aug. 14 in the Aegean Sea with a heavy loss of life.

SURVIVE SUBMARINE ATTACK.

Crew of French Transport Tells of Fight in Mediterranean.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—The Marseilles correspondent of the Petit Journal telegraphs that the mailboat Eugene Pereire has arrived there with thirty-three members of the crew of the French steamship Amiral Hamelin, which was sunk by a submarine. A previous report from the Havas correspondent said seventy-one persons aboard the steamer lost their lives.

The Amiral Hamelin was under Government requisition. According to the Petit Journal's correspondent she was torpedoed by an Austrian submarine without notice, and while passengers and crew were being transferred to the boats the submarine bombarded the steamer, which was struck by forty shells.

The Captain of the submarine asserted as justification of his attack that the steamer was armed; but this is denied by the correspondent. Six of the crew were wounded by the bombardment. The sound of firing drew a French torpedo boat and an English hospital ship to the spot, and the wounded and many fugitives were taken aboard by these vessels. The submarine fled at their approach after firing two torpedoes into the Amiral and sinking her.

NORWEGIAN STEAMER SUNK.

Twenty-four Survivors of the Salerno Have Been Landed.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—Lloyd's announces that the Norwegian steamer Salerno has been sunk, and that nineteen men, two women and three children have been landed from her.

The Norwegian steamer Salerno, of 1,398 tons net, arrived at Gothenburg, Sweden, from Buenos Aires on September 26. Her subsequent movements are not covered by available shipping records.

A dispatch from London on Oct. 15 reported the sinking of the British steamer Salerno. The records list this vessel as a Wilson Line steamer of 2,071 tons gross.

BOMB MISSES KING VICTOR.

Italian Staff Can't Persuade Him to Avoid the Dangers of Battle.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—King Victor Emmanuel's contempt for danger, says a dispatch from Rome, is the source of one of General Cadorna's greatest anxieties. Recently the King stood watching a battery in action on the Carso front when a hostile aeroplane flew right over him. His staff begged him to move but he refused.

Two Italian aeroplanes meanwhile gave chase to the enemy, who flew back toward his own lines, dropping a series of bombs, one of which fell close to the King.

LANSING DEFINES SAFETY FOR CREWS

Tells Germany That Mere Opportunity to Escape in Lifeboats Will Not Suffice.

TERMS OF NEW FRYE NOTE

United States Agrees to Accept London Declaration Pending Settlement for Damages.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The feature of the latest note sent by Secretary Lansing to the German Government in connection with the claim for damages for the sinking of the American merchantman William P. Frye is the understanding upon which the United States agrees to the arbitration of the disputed treaty interpretation.

Secretary Lansing makes it plain that the condition on which the United States will agree to refer the question to The Hague is that, if American vessels carrying absolute contraband are to be destroyed by German vessels, all persons on board must not only be placed in safety before the vessel is destroyed, but that merely giving such persons an opportunity to escape in lifeboats cannot be considered as satisfying the requirements of the Declaration of London.

When the United States first indicated its willingness to submit to arbitration the treaty question involved in the Frye case it asked Germany how it would proceed during the pendency of the arbitration—whether the American or the German construction of the treaty would be observed. The United States contends that under treaties between this country and Prussia Germany has no right to destroy American merchantmen even if they carry munitions of war. The German Government contends that the treaty gives them the right to destroy such vessels, but compels them to pay for the damage. This dispute is the point to be arbitrated.

In the recent reply the Berlin Government indicated that it would not destroy American merchantmen carrying conditional contraband during the arbitration proceedings, but reserved the right to destroy vessels carrying absolute contraband "whenever such destruction is permissible according to the provisions of the Declaration of London."

The United States does not recognize the Declaration of London as binding during the present war. In his note to the German Government Secretary Lansing, speaking for the United States, says:

"Without admitting that the Declaration of London is in force, and on the understanding that the requirement in Article 50 of the Declaration that before the vessel is destroyed all persons on board must be placed in safety,' is not satisfied by merely giving them an opportunity to escape in lifeboats, the Government of the United States is willing, pending the arbitral award in this case, to accept the Declaration of London as the rule governing the conduct of the German Government in relation to the treatment of American vessels carrying cargoes of absolute contraband. On this understanding the Government of the United States agrees to refer to arbitration this question of treaty interpretation."

Text of the Note.

The full text of the new American note to Germany follows:

The Secretary of State to Ambassador Gerard.

Department of State, Washington, Oct. 12, 1915.

You are instructed to present the following note to the German Minister of Foreign Affairs:

In reply to your Excellency's note of Sept. 19 on the subject of claim for damages for the sinking of the American merchantman William P. Frye, I am instructed by the Government of the United States to say that it notes with satisfaction the willingness of the Imperial German Government to settle the questions at issue in this case by referring to a joint commission of experts the amount of the indemnity to be paid by the Imperial German Government under its admitted liability for the losses of the owners and Captain on account of the destruction of the vessel, and by referring to arbitration the question of the interpretation of treaty rights.

The Government of the United States further notes that in agreeing to this arrangement the Imperial German Government expressly states that in making payment it does not acknowledge the violation of the treaty, as contended by the Government of the United States, and that the settlement of the question of indemnity does not prejudice the arrangement of the differences of opinion between the two Governments concerning the interpretation of the treaty rights. The Government of the United States understands that this arrangement will also be without prejudice to its own contention in accordance with the statements of its position in its note of Aug. 10 last to your Excellency on this subject, and the Government of the United States agrees to this arrangement on that understanding. Your Excellency states that the Imperial German Government believes that the nomination of an umpire should be dispensed with, because it has been the experience of the Imperial German Government that the experts named in such cases have always reached an agreement without difficulty, and that should they disagree on some point, it could probably be settled by diplomatic negotiation.

The Government of the United States entirely concurs in the view that it is not necessary to nominate an umpire in advance. It is not to be assumed that the experts will be unable to agree or that if they are the point in dispute cannot be settled by diplomatic negotiation, but the Government of the United States believes that in agreeing to this arrangement it should be understood in advance that in case the amount of indemnity is not settled by the joint commission of experts or by diplomatic negotiation the question will then be referred to an umpire if that is desired by the Government of the United States.

Should Meet in America.

Assuming that this understanding is acceptable to the German Government, it will only remain for the Government of the United States to nominate its expert to act with the expert already nominated by the German Government on the joint commission.

It seems desirable to the Government of the United States that this joint commission of experts should meet without delay as soon as the American member is named and that its meetings should be held in the United States, because, as pointed out in my note to you of April 30 last, any evidence which the German Government may wish to have produced is more accessible and can more conveniently be examined there than elsewhere.

With reference to the agreement to submit to arbitration the question of treaty interpretation, the Government of the United States notes that in answer to its inquiry whether, pending the arbitral proceedings, the German Government will govern its naval operations in accordance with the American or American interpretation of the treaty stipulations in question, the reply of the German Government is that "it has issued orders to the German naval forces not to destroy American merchantmen which have loaded conditional contraband even when the conditions of international law are present, but to permit them to continue their voyage unhindered if it is not possible to take them into port," and that "on the other hand it must reserve to itself the right to destroy vessels carrying absolute contraband whenever such destruction is permissible according to the provisions of the Declaration of London."

Without admitting that the Declaration of London is in force, and on the understanding that the requirements in Article 50 of the declaration that "before the vessel is destroyed all persons on board must be placed in safety" is not satisfied by merely giving them an opportunity to escape in lifeboats, the Government of the United States is willing, pending the arbitral award in this case, to accept the Declaration of London as the rule governing the conduct of the German Government in relation to the treatment of American vessels carrying cargoes of absolute contraband. On this understanding the Government of the United States agrees to refer to arbitration this question of treaty interpretation.

The Government of the United States concurs in the desire of the Imperial German Government that the negotiations relative to the signing of the compromise referring this question of treaty interpretation to arbitration under the provisions of Article 52 of The Hague Arbitration Convention, should be conducted between the German Foreign Office and the American Embassy in Berlin, and the Government of the United States will be glad to recognize the draft compromise which you inform me the Foreign Office is prepared to submit to the American Ambassador in Berlin.

Anticipating that it may be convenient for the Imperial German Government to know in advance of these negotiations the preference of the Government of the United States as to the form of arbitration to be arranged for in the compromise, my Government desires me to say that it would prefer, if agreeable to the Imperial Government, that the arbitration should be by summary procedure, based upon the provisions of Articles 86 to 90, inclusive, of The Hague Arbitration Convention, rather than the longer form of arbitration before the permanent court at The Hague.

Arrange for simultaneous publication of this note at earliest date which will give you time to notify the department.

ARCHANGEL FIGHTS ICE.

Russians Making Desperate Efforts to Keep Northern Port Open.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—Russia is making a desperate effort to prolong her connection with the outside world through the port of Archangel, as it is probable that munitions can be taken into the Empire only by way of Vladivostok when the port of Archangel is closed by ice. The British have sent to Archangel, according to a report from Consul General Baker at Petrograd, two large ice breakers, the Canada and the Latrose, and several more are being built in England with the hope of keeping the port free from ice until the latter part of January.

Ice is forming there now, and usually by December the port is closed against all ocean steamships. It is expected that during the latter part of the year steamships will be allowed to freeze in; they will unload their cargoes on the ice and then be broken out and have a chance to get away. From January to March, it is conceded, it will be impossible to keep Archangel open.

Work on the railway across the Murman Peninsula is being pushed to take care of cargoes that will be piled up at Archangel during the next three months. Great quantities of goods are now lying there, outdoors, and likely to suffer waste and injury during the Winter.

"Archangel," says Consul General Baker, "has become one of the most important wheat-exporting ports of the world; practically much of the wheat formerly exported from Black Sea or Baltic ports is now shipped from here. Comparatively small and unimportant cargoes have arrived from England, but extremely important and full cargoes, including especially eggs, butter, and flax, go to England, while ships from the United States arrive with full cargoes, but return practically in ballast, because most articles that Russia ordinarily exports to the United States are now embargoed from exportation, except to allied nations."

TRIEST'S FATHER WAITING.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—Gustav W. Triest, father of Kenneth Triest, the young Princeton student held in London on a charge of espionage, made an engagement through counsel today to discuss his son's case with State Department officials tomorrow.

Officials were surprised to learn that Mr. Triest was still in the United States. He was expected to sail for London Saturday with witnesses through whose testimony he hoped to establish that his son's mind was unbalanced. Young Triest's trial is set for November 1, but an effort will be made to have it postponed.

CONSUL DISPUTES HUNGARIAN REPORTS

Von Nuber Revives Old Charge Against London Morning Post's Articles.

AUTHENTIC, SAYS EDITOR

Cables The Times That Attacks on Them Are Baseless—Shows Evidence as to Their Source.

THE TIMES has received from Alexander von Nuber, Austro-Hungarian Consul General in this city, a communication attacking the authenticity of a London Morning Post article, republished in THE TIMES under the heading "Famine in Hungary; Government Accused." Consul von Nuber says:

"The Austro-Hungarian Consulate General in New York is in possession of reliable information to the effect that all the unfavorable news concerning Hungary published in The London Morning Post purporting to be telegrams or other correspondence from Budapest are manufactured by a certain Joseph Szekulesz, alias Joseph Szebenyei, resident in London. None of the alleged telegrams or other correspondence has ever originated from Hungary, and their contents are malicious inventions pure and simple.

With reference to Count Tisza, against whom attacks were said to be directed, Consul von Nuber writes:

I venture to express the opinion that Great Britain would be thankful to have such an energetic, clean-handed, and far-sighted statesman as the Hungarian Premier, who is considered in the Dual Monarchy, Germany, Turkey, and several other European countries as one of the ablest statesmen and administrators.

Upon receipt of this letter THE TIMES cabled inquiries to its London office and to The London Morning Post, and received yesterday the following replies:

By Cable to the Editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—I understand that the Austro-Hungarian Consul General in New York has cast doubt on the authenticity of the letters that have been appearing in The Morning Post from Budapest. You can assure your readers that these letters are authentic; otherwise they would not be published in The Morning Post.

H. A. GWYNNE,
Editor Morning Post.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—In conversation with the correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES, H. A. Gwynne, editor of The Morning Post, gave a detailed explanation of the source whence he received the letters in question, the methods of transmission, and other evidence which he did not care to make public at the present time, to prove the authenticity of the letters. Mr. Gwynne further gave data to demonstrate that Consul General von Nuber's letter is only one incident in a long series of efforts made, first to stop, and secondly to discredit The Morning Post's Budapest letters. That the Hungarian journalist mentioned by name was not the author of the letters, as Consul General von Nuber asserts, was clearly proved by documentary evidence.

The London Morning Post's Hungarian articles were first attacked last January by Rudolph Kommer in The Vital Issue. He declared that the articles were pure fakes, written by a Hungarian in London. THE TIMES at that time obtained from the editor of The London Morning Post a denial of these charges. The editor of The Morning Post declared that before publishing the translation, the good faith of the correspondent had been very carefully established. He added:

"As to the accuracy of the statement contained in the letters, there can be no question either, for they have been amply confirmed from various sources."

TURKEY BARS RED CROSS.

Will Not Permit America to Aid Armenian Sufferers.

The Turkish Government has informed the State Department at Washington that the American Red Cross will not be permitted to send surgeons and nurses to the aid of the Armenian people of the Turkish Empire. Not only are American Red Cross surgeons, nurses, and agents barred from Turkey, but also all other foreigners, foreigners in this instance undoubtedly meaning the nationals of neutral countries.

The State Department informed Ernest T. Bicknell and Miss Mabel Boardman of the executive staff of the American Red Cross of Turkey's decision, and Miss Boardman communicated the information to Dr. M. Simbad Gabriel of 410 West Twenty-third Street, this city, the President of the Armenian General Progressive Association in this country.

A few weeks ago Dr. Gabriel wrote to Miss Boardman concerning the atrocities committed against the Armenians by the Turks. He asked the American Red Cross to send physicians and nurses to Turkey to aid the sufferers. In his letter Dr. Gabriel said:

"A hundred American Red Cross nurses and physicians can work miracles there not only by the bread and medicine they will give but by virtue of their personal presence." He also suggested that Armenians in this country might raise $50,000 to be expended by the Red Cross.

Informing Dr. Gabriel of the inability to send Red Cross aid, Miss Boardman, writing from Washington under date of Oct. 16, said:

"Your letter of Sept. 21 arrived during my absence from Washington. On my return I made inquiries regarding the possibility of the American Red Cross sending surgeons and nurses for the aid of the Armenians if the Armenians in America raised funds for this purpose. Mr. Bicknell took the matter up with the State Department, and on inquiry we found that the Turkish Government has declined to allow any foreign personnel to undertake this work. Therefore it would be impossible for us to do so, even if the money were secured, greatly to our regret.

"We find it also difficult at present, almost impossible, in fact, to send supplies to Turkey, everything is in such fearful condition in Europe. We have notified those that desire to send contributions for Armenian relief that we would transmit them through the American Ambassador at Constantinople, as this seems to be the only method at present of aiding the Armenian population. We can only hope that this situation will before long come to an end. It is growing daily so much worse that it seems as if it could not last long."

"The letter from Miss Boardman," Dr. Gabriel said yesterday, "speaks for itself, and I think in the eyes of all unprejudiced persons it will prove convincing evidence of the truthfulness of the terrible stories that are coming out of Turkey regarding the persecution, murder, and torturing of the Armenian people. Perhaps the President might make a personal request of the authorities at Constantinople that the American Red Cross be permitted to undertake this mission of mercy in behalf of a people who are the victims of the greatest and most systematic series of massacres recorded in history."

WILL STOP JERSEY SMOKE.

Whitman Orders Court Action to Protect Staten Island.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Oct. 18.—Governor Whitman today asked Attorney General Woodbury to begin an action to restrain certain factories at Constable Hook, N. J., which are engaged in refining oil and the manufacture of chemicals, from discharging quantities of smoke, fumes, and poisonous vapors which float over Staten Island.

Several Commissioners of Health in the past have investigated the situation on Staten Island and have reported at different times that a nuisance was created by the operation of these plants. The fumes and gas, they said, endangered health and damaged property on Staten Island.

Auditors Say Capitol Contractors Want Too Much.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Oct. 18.—Special Auditors reported today to the Trustees of Public Buildings that some of the contractors who helped to restore the west wing of the Capitol, which was burned in 1911, in rendering bills amounting to $144,828, made overcharges of $54,082. These Special Auditors, who were appointed under act of the Legislature at salaries of $20 a day, are: August Windolph of New York, an architect, appointed by Governor Whitman; Henry Allen of Syracuse, a civil engineer, appointed by Lieutenant Governor Schoeneck, and Charles Mosher of Buffalo, a contractor, appointed by Speaker Sweet.

The bills of these contractors have been in dispute for two years. The contractors worked under the percentage plan.

The Trustees of Public Buildings decided to have a hearing on the Auditors' report on Nov. 22, when the contractors will have an opportunity to be heard.

LABOR CAMPAIGN IS ACTIVE.

State Federation Has 13 Reasons for Voting "No."

James P. Boyle, President of the Brooklyn Central Labor Union, which is aiding the Central Federated Union in its campaign against the adoption of the new Constitution, said yesterday:

"The Central Labor Union of Brooklyn, at its session in the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum, decided to distribute hundreds of thousands of copies of a sample ballot, with directions to vote against the new Constitution, and in favor of the woman suffrage amendment to the Constitution. All international unions of the State are working in harmony in the fight against the Constitution. It is expected the election will be an unusual demonstration of the strength of labor when it goes to the polls."

The State Federation of Labor has issued a circular to union men throughout the State headed, "Reasons for voting 'No' on revised Constitution." There are thirteen alleged reasons, containing statements that the document firmly intrenches "Invisible Government;" seeks to abolish jury trials in criminal cases; denies the right to establish living wages for women and children; denies recognition of the eight-hour day and prevailing rate of wages on public work; strengthens military domination; refuses a plain definition of freedom of speech and of the press.

The first reason given is that the convention did not accept the "memorial of organized labor," and the thirteenth, that the convention had 134 lawyers out of 168 delegates.

HAIL ROOT BOOM FOR PRESIDENCY

that will have been defeated by the people.

"But there will be no other convention, because this Constitution will be adopted. And if it were not, the people of the State, after spending approximately half a million dollars for one convention, are not going to turn around and spend another half million dollars to send a lot of other men to Albany to try their hands at it, and they certainly are not going to send to Albany the men whose views upon the Constitution are exhibited by the published objections to this revision.

Three Defects to Correct.

"When the Constitutional Convention delegates, whom you elected, addressed themselves to considering the Government of the State, they found that there were serious defects in all three branches of our Government.

"Our judicial procedure was complicated, technical and full of subtleties, and of a multitude of statutory provisions relating to procedure, which made it difficult for a plain and honest man to come into court and get his rights. The procedure had been built up by year after year of separate and specific code provisions and code amendments, which, taken all together, created a multitude of statutory rights in the way of procedure that made it almost impossible for a litigation to be brought to a prompt and inexpensive conclusion.

"We found that the executive branch of our Government was ill-compacted, confused, extravagant, subject to no effective control; over 150 agencies, great and small, all over the State, were carrying on business and responsible practically to no one. Every one spent all the money he could get, every one acted in accordance with his own judgment.

"We found that the Legislature had declined in public esteem; we found that the members of the Legislature, a very large proportion of them, were going to Albany with local and private bills and special interests which they wished to subserve, and that every man who had a special bill and a special interest was made a coward and prevented from doing his duty toward the general interests of the State.

Evils in the Legislature.

"We found that the continually increasing tendency of the Legislature to exercise its powers for the playing of politics, was making our Government the means of securing personal advantage, personal appointments to office, personal appropriations out of the treasury of the State and we sought, with all sincerity and earnestness within our power, to find remedies for those evils in the three great departments of the State.

"We sought to deal with one by requiring the Legislature again, as the Constitutional Convention of 1846 did, to return to simplicity and effectiveness of procedure in the attainment of justice. We undertook to require the Legislature to pass a brief and simple practice act, and sweep away all this great body of statutory rights in procedure and leave the regulation of the rules under the general provisions of the practice act to the courts, so that our Judges on the bench would be permitted to do justice in the particular case, instead of making men run the gauntlet of these acute and subtle and technical barriers to the attainment of their rights, which have been a disgrace to the administration of justice in this State.

"In the executive department we sought to apply the rule of responsibility and to give men who are elected by the people the power which would make it possible to hold them responsible. We undertook to condense all those 152 agencies of the State into seventeen departments; we undertook to require that the overlapping and the interference, and the useless expenditure of money should be done away with, by putting all those agencies into a limited number of departments, into one head that could be responsible and that could be held responsible by the Governor of the State, who himself can be held responsible by the people of the State because they will have given him power upon which they can hold him responsible.

Appropriation Plan Revised.

"And we undertook to rehabilitate the Legislature of the State, not by any one provision—that was impossible—but by a series of provisions, and that is the central idea of the whole constitutional scheme included in this revision. In the first place, we found the Legislature making up the appropriation bills, making them up in the dark, with suggestions for appropriations coming to the committees in private, in secret, coming from every one, responsible or irresponsible, coming from members of the Legislature themselves, each one wanting something, and each one trying to get something for his constituency, appropriation bills brought out late in the session, running along on the calendar until the close of the session, and then, under an emergency passage, not printed, not discussed, not understood, passed by the Legislature, often during Legislature adjourning and the Governor left with thirty days in which to sit down in the privacy of his office, with a blue pencil, and control the Legislature.

"That system was a complete reversal of the true and traditional system of representative government, under which the representatives of the people are to hold the purse strings. The Governor was made to hold the purse strings, and the representatives of the people, instead of controlling expenditure, ran pellmell to increase it. We have reversed it. We have taken this procedure, which stood on its head, turned it around and stood it on its feet, and we have required, first, the heads of all those departments—the seventeen of them who are now responsible for departments in the place of the 152—we have required them to furnish the Governor in ample time a statement of the needs of their departments, to be responsible for the statement, to arrange them in the order of their importance, and then we have required the Governor to revise them and cut them down, or hold himself responsible for the amounts.

Dealing in the Dark.

"And we have required the Governor, early in the session, to lay that statement of the needs of the executive departments of the whole State Government before the Legislature side by side with a statement of the resources of the State from which the appropriations were to be paid. And we have put the Legislature in a position where, instead of making up a statement of appropriations in the dark, they are bound to deal with the Governor's statement of appropriations—not to increase them, but to cut them down if they will, or refuse them if they will. And we have given them the right to have the Governor and the heads of departments come before them that they may be interrogated as to why they want the money, what they want it for, why they have to have so much.

"And so we have restored the Legislature of the State to the legislative function of a representative assemblage in holding the purse strings.

"We have cut off by positive prohibition all that class of bills authorizing the approving of claims against the State, bills by which it is commonly sought to evade the prohibition against legislative auditing of claims. We have cut off the flood of local improvement bills by prohibiting the passing of any bill for the use of the State's money, in building a culvert in your district, or a bridge in yours, or an embankment in yours, unless there is filed a plan and an estimate of cost and a certificate by the Superintendent of Public Works as to whether the interests of the State at large require the improvement to be made.

"And now when the members of the Legislature come to Albany they will have practically nothing to do but to attend to the public business.

Publication of Debates.

"We have required that the debates of the Legislature shall be printed from day to day just as the debates in Congress are, and the debates in the British House of Commons are, and the debates in the French Chamber are, so that, in the first place, the people of the State will know what the men at Albany are doing, and why they are doing it, and so that the Legislature of our State will be an opportunity for an able young man to help himself along in a career.

"Who knows now—who knows now why things are done at Albany? Here and there a newspaper prints something that is said, but the necessities of news service require the striking and the spectacular to be reported and the dull and uninteresting, real debates are never known, and as a result the art of debate has gradually been declining in Albany. Now, a young man, if this Constitution is adopted, can go to Albany, and he has got to show what is in him."

The other speakers were Dean W. W. Grosvenor, George R. Sheldon, George W. Wickersham, Senator Frank W. Brandagee, George T. Oliver, Chauncey M. Depew, General Horace Porter, and Robert Bacon.

Some of those at the dinner were Joseph P. Auerbach, Jules S. Bache, Otto T. Bannard, William Barnes, Lindon W. Bates, Dr. Charles L. Bernheimer, William M. Calder, Joseph H. Choate, Justice John Proctor Clarke, Colonel D. C. Collier, William Nelson Cromwell, Samuel S. Koenig, Adolph Lewisohn, Chester S. Lord, Louis Marshall, Deacon Murphy, Judge Otto A. TEACHERS NOT AFFECTED.

Root Writes Finley Constitution Does Not Change School Plan.

Robert S. Binkerd, Secretary of the City Club and of the Committee for the Adoption of the Constitution, made public yesterday correspondence between John H. Finley, State Commissioner of Education, and Elihu Root, regarding the effect of the proposed Constitution on the school teachers of the State. Commissioner Finley wanted to know if the home rule clause of the proposed Constitution put the school teachers under the control of local government.

Mr. Root wrote that the provisions of the Constitution made no change in the control of the schools.

Chairmen of the Progressive County Committees held a meeting yesterday in the State headquarters, in the Forty-second Street Building, and decided decision on the proposed Constitution should be left to the voter to decide for himself. The Chairmen passed resolutions favoring woman suffrage.

There will be a mass meeting at Tammany Hall on Thursday, when Tammany candidates will discuss the issues of the campaign and also the new Constitution. It is understood that the organization will take no stand on the Constitution.

The Citizens Nonpartisian Committee for the Adoption of the Constitution gave out last night a list of the members of the organization. The list contains names of Democrats, Republicans, and Progressives, none of whom were members of the Constitutional Convention. The committee is to supply speakers who will talk against the constitution.

Both Mayor Mitchel and President McAneny said yesterday they would make an announcement of their stand on the Constitution within a few days. The Mayor gave a luncheon yesterday at the Whitehall Club at which Herbert Parsons, Henry L. Stimson, and Mr. McAneny were guests. The Mayor was urged to take a stand in favor of the Constitution.

AIRMEN BIG FACTOR IN SUBMARINE WAR

Patrolling British Coast, They Spy Out German Raiders and Call for Destroyers

OR THEMSELVES ATTACK

The America Said to Have Wrecked Three Submarines, Two by Smashing the Periscopes.

Details of the active and efficient work of the aeroplanes of the Royal Naval Aviation Corps in ridding English waters of the German submarine peril were received yesterday by Henry Woodhouse, a Governor of the Aero Club of America. The information came from an authoritative source, and disclosed the latest methods adopted by the British Government in "spotting submarines" and destroying them.

Mr. Woodhouse also received an explanation of the reason why the 400 aeroplanes defending London have been unable to prevent the Zeppelin raids.

"Probably the most interesting thing about the conflict between the dreaded German U-boats and the aeroplanes," he said last night to a TIMES reporter, "is that the America, which was built here before the war, and in which Flight Commander Porte intended to fly across the ocean, has destroyed no fewer than three submarines single-handed. One of these was blown up with bombs, and the other two were forced to come up, the America having broken off their periscopes. Then the destroyers got them.

"The method of anti-submarine warfare is as simple as it is efficient. The aeroplanes go out, usually in pairs, followed by forty-knot destroyers, which follow after them and watch for their signals. The observer accompanying the aviator can see from fifteen to twenty miles in every direction, according to the height at which they fly. The destroyers can see the aeroplane at about the same distance, and its officers, with their powerful glasses, can tell every movement made by their scout.

"If a submarine is sighted traveling on the surface, or if even its periscope is seen, the aeroplane drops a smoke bomb to call its destroyers. If the submarine submerges or remains submerged, the aero man keeps flying around and around, noting its direction. At forty knots an hour, the destroyers are soon on the spot, and they will follow the submarine and wait for it to come up and then blow it to pieces, or they may run ahead of it and lower their steel nets and catch it. If it is feared that the quarry is going to submerge to a great depth, the nets are dropped as the destroyers come to the spot, and they often pick it up before it can get too deep for the nets.

"Aeroplanes of the America and Canada class, carrying heavy armament and a large number of bombs, are much feared by the U-boats. In the early days of the war they were not afraid to come to the surface and fight the aeroplanes, but they don't dare do this any longer. The submarine is so fragile that a bomb or shell exploding near it will smash its sides in and sink it. Of course, all the aeroplanes are flying boats or hydroaeroplanes, and have no fear of the water. There have been a number of cases where the aviator has swooped down on the submarine and smashed its periscope. Then it is blind and must come to the surface, where it is easy prey for either the aeroplane or any destroyer or trawler, all of which have guns.

"Of course, if the aeroplane destroys the submarine single-handed, none of its crew can be saved.

Destroyed at the Bottom.

"One of the most recent developments of this warfare has been the destruction of submarines on the bottom. It is their custom to lie on the shallow bottoms when they want to wait for their victims or to avoid destroyers. They will sink until they are down below the nets and then wait until the danger passes. Early in the war, and even before the war, it was found that an aeroplane could detect a submarine even when submerged nearly one hundred feet.

"Acting on this knowledge, the Royal Naval Aviation Corps has a plan that is sure death to the enemy. The observer 'spots' the submarine lying in wait, and then signals for its destroyers. Of course, the men of the submarine have no idea of what is going on above them and can only wait to meet their death.

"The aeroplane will circle about the spot until the destroyers arrive and then will indicate as nearly as possible exactly where the enemy lies. Then the destroyers place a number of floating bombs on the water, each of which consists of what looks much like half a torpedo than anything else, and is kept at the surface by the broad, flat float.

"After the bombs are placed, and they are powerful enough to blow up a dreadnought, the destroyers steam off out of harm's way. The bombs are heavy and drop straight to the bottom when the destroyers pull the string that detaches them from their floats. On striking the bottom, they explode by contact, and as soon as oil comes to the surface, an infallible sign that the submarine is destroyed, they go on, looking for another victim.

"It is not necessary for a bomb to strike the submarine, although this has happened several times when the vessel was submerged at a shallow depth. The impact of the explosion of the several thousand pounds of 'T. N. T.' contained in the bombs is communicated to the submarine by the water, which is denser than at the surface, and caves its sides in.

"Probably the pursuit of these submarines is the most exciting sport that has yet been experienced by an aviator and the efficiency of the Royal Naval Aviation Corps has played a great part in eliminating the submarine peril."

Why Zeppelins Succeed.

In regard to the ease with which the Zeppelins raid London, in spite of the 400 aeroplanes of the Royal Naval Aviation Corps, Mr. Woodhouse has learned that it is a practical impossibility for the British fliers to destroy the giant craft, except with the greatest luck.

"The first sign that London has of a Zeppelin raid is when a bomb drops," he said. "Now that warnings are not sent from Holland any longer, the Zeppelins, flying at more than 10,000 feet on the darkest nights they can pick, are above London before any one is aware of their proximity.

"From the time that the first bomb drops until the Naval Corps aeroplanes take the air in pursuit is usually not less than fifteen minutes. It takes them from half to three-quarters of an hour to climb, to an altitude where they are above the Zeppelins, and by that time the dirigibles have left London fifty to sixty miles in the rear.

"Of course, there are squadrons of aeroplanes patrolling the air above the city night after night, but the upper darkness is so vast, and usually so dark on the night of a raid, that it is impossible to find the Zeppelins. Then, again, the aviators run great risks when they take up the pursuit. The guns begin to roar the minute a searchlight picks up a Zeppelin, and they fire from all angles. There is a perfect hail of death arising from all over the great city, and the aviator stands a good chance of being brought down by the guns of the city he is trying to protect.

"It has been suggested that great balloons be stationed over London at 10,000 or more feet, and that these be armed with heavy guns. Models of these were made and then it was found that the upper air currents would swing the balloons about so much that it would be impossible for their gunners to hit a Zeppelin. However, it is safe to say that the time is near when the Zeppelins will be unable to raid London with impunity, and it will be due to the work of the Royal Naval Aviation Corps that their murderous raids are ended.

"A newer and greater war plane than any yet built is now being made in Toronto for the British Government. The success of the Canada type has shown the way, and from them has evolved the 'super-Canada' type of tractors and hydroaeroplanes. These are a full third larger than the Canadas, and can carry nearly 3,000 pounds of armament or bombs. The hydroaeroplanes can stand a heavy sea, and can rise from almost the roughest waves with ease. Their wings are more than 100 feet across, and they can make sixty miles an hour with only one motor. With both going, they can make close to ninety miles.

"Twenty of the Canada type have been sent abroad from Toronto, and they are building the larger type as fast as the facilities can turn them out."

BARS WILSON DEMOCRATS.

County Clerk in Newark Denies Them Place on Ballot.

NEWARK, N. J., Oct. 18.—County Clerk Joseph McDonough announced today that the contested petitions filed with him nominating independent candidates known as "Wilson Democrats," for the general election were not acceptable. He will not place the names on the ballot unless ordered to do so by the courts.

The petitions thrown out are those offered in the name of Richard G. Rust for County Register, and Edward R. Soleau and Edward F. Berry for Freeholders. On the petition with Soleau and Berry was the name of John H. Bunnell, but Bunnell filed a formal declination last week. In announcing his decision, Mr. McDonough said:

"I am of the opinion, and have come to the conclusion and do hereby determine, that the said objections filed were valid, and that the petitions filed as aforesaid were not made in good faith and are not valid in accordance with the requirements of the election law."

Taft Declines G. O. P. Invitation.

An invitation to speak in the Republican campaign in Kings County was declined yesterday by ex-President William H. Taft because of a press of engagements. Mr. Taft will visit Brooklyn on Friday night to deliver a lecture on "Our World Relationships" at the Academy of Music and the campaign managers will make another effort to have him appear at one of the Republican meetings to be held on that date. Mr. Taft will lecture at Columbia University tomorrow evening.

25 HURT ON TRAINS WRECKED BY JOKER

Police Seek Person Who Set Emergency Brakes on Cars of Brighton Beach Line.

PANIC FOLLOWS COLLISION

Passengers Run Through Tunnel to Escape from Accident Near Woodruff Avenue Station.

Two trains of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, the first composed of six wooden cars and the second of five wooden cars, collided in the rush hour last evening in the poorly lighted tunnel on the Manhattan side of the Woodruff Avenue Station. Twenty-five persons were injured. It was a rear-end collision, both trains being on the southbound track of the Brighton Beach Line.

The first train had been brought to a sudden stop just before the crash through the application of the emergency brakes. The motorman of this train says that he did not apply the brakes, and the company's officials contended last night that they must have been applied by a "practical joker" on the train.

With the first train at a standstill the force of the impact fell mainly on its rear car. Its platform was wrecked, and the front platform of the second train plunged into it like a battering ram, telescoping the car. The six persons most severely injured were in this car of the first train. They were:

BOYD, ARTHUR, 18 years old, clerk, of 1,234 East Twenty-fourth Street, Brooklyn; right foot mashed.

McLEESE, ELMER, 20 years old, clerk, of 37 Kenilworth Place, Brooklyn; right foot amputated through crushing and several ribs on the left side fractured.

MEYER, Mrs. ANTONIO, 37 years old, of 17 New Lots Road, Brooklyn; contusions of the head and body.

PAXTON, Mrs. E., 48 years old, of 28 Sheepshead Bay Road; contusions of left arm and body.

WILSON, JOSEPH, 35 years old, 1,984 East Thirteenth Street, Brooklyn; fracture of left leg and ribs.

The trains collided at 6:35 o'clock. The last two cars of the front train were still in the tunnel when the accident happened. The tunnel, which crosses diagonally under the juncture of Ocean and Parkside Avenues, is about 400 feet long, and the entire second train was inside of it.

There was a resounding crash as the platforms splintered and the glass in the trains broke. This was followed by the cries of the passengers wedged between the cars. Lights went out in the two cars that were telescoped and there was wild confusion as passengers struggled to get out. Every car was crowded, and in all of the cars it was estimated there were about 1,300 persons. Hundreds poured out of the cars in the tunnel, nothwithstanding the danger from the third rail, and scrambled, pushing and shouting for the two ends of the tunnel.

The crash and cries of the passengers brought policemen running to the wreck. They sent in emergency calls to the Kings County Hospital, Coney Island, Methodist Episcopal, and Norwegian Hospitals for ambulances. Half a dozen ambulance surgeons arrived in a short time, and they considered it surprising that more persons were not injured seriously. Only one person, Elmer McLeese, was removed to a hospital, the Kings County institution, and twenty-four others were treated and sent to their homes.

The collision tied up traffic for more than an hour on both tracks of the line. Wrecking crews and a shuttle train were sent out by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit, and shortly before 8 o'clock the two trains were pried apart and removed. Meantime the shuttle trains carried belated passengers on the northbound track to the stations on either side of Woodruff Avenue.

The injured persons were carried through the front train to the platform of the Woodruff Avenue Station, which was turned into an emergency hospital by the ambulance surgeons.

The Assistant Superintendent of Transporation of the B. R. T., T. F. Blewitt, examined Motorman John Lyons of the first train and Motorman Benjamin Bauman of the second, after which he made the statement that the company would "hold Bauman responsible for the accident." Lyons told Supt. Blewitt that he was slowing up for the Woodruff Avenue Station and that four cars of his train were beside the platform and two still in the tunnel when the emergency brake was applied suddenly, stopping the train so abruptly the passengers were thrown from the seats. Supt. Blewitt concluded that somebody on the train had pulled the emergency brake cord.

Motorman Bauman, who is 32 years old, and lives at 300 Sixteenth Street, Brooklyn, said that he did not see the red lights that marked the rear of the front train until he was almost upon them, that he instantly applied the emergency brake, but that it did not work. Officials of the company tested this brake after the accident, and said they found it working perfectly.

"Bauman probably misjudged the distance of the lights," Superintendent Blewitt volunteered, after hearing the motorman's story. "And thought that, as usual, the front train was still moving toward the station platform."

Bauman was taken to the Parkville Police Station, where he repeated his story to the police. He was released pending further investigation. Superintendent Blewitt said that this was the first accident at the tunnel in eight years. In 1907, there was a collision at the curve on the Manhattan side of the tunnel, but none was seriously injured. The company, it was said, thought that the placard at the tunnel's end, warning motormen not to exceed six miles an hour in passing through it, was adequate protection. The police are seeking to identify the practical joker who caused the wreck.

'DIE WACHT AM RHEIN' GREETING FOR BRYAN

Then He Tells 3,500 in Terrace Garden Women Should Get the Vote.

William Jennings Bryan told 3,500 persons at a mass meeting last night under the direction of the German-American Committee of the Women's Suffrage Party, at Terrace Garden, in East Fifty-eighth Street, that woman suffrage was certain to become universal. He wouldn't venture a guess on the result of the New York election.

"If you don't vote for women suffrage this time, you will some time, for it is the one thing that is certain to be in this country," he said.

"Women have obtained the vote first in the West because there conditions are more democratic, the people more independent and less under the influence of combinations of great wealth than the people of the Eastern States.

"It is not fair to refuse to woman, who does so much for the child, a voice in the future welfare of that child.

"A citizen needs two things alone to be a good voter—intelligence and morality. If you are going to contend that a woman should not have the vote you cannot exclude her on these grounds. I made an investigation of the inmates of a certain Western prison, and found that less than 2 per cent. were women and more than 98 per cent. men. In church I always find there are more women than men. If a woman has sense enough to keep out of prison and morality enough to go to church, she has the mental equipment to go to the polls.

"We trust woman in every thing else; don't you think we can trust her to vote?

Mr. Bryan was the guest overnight of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Untermyer at their country home at Yonkers, and went to the hall in their car. On the stage were Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Guggenheim, Professor and Mrs. John Dewey of Columbia University, Frank W. Fruend, Eugene Nortz of London, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Lewisohn, Professor Moritz Bonn, exchange professor at Cornell; Katherine S. Dreier, Mrs. Raymond Robins of Chicago, and Professor William R. Shepherd of Columbia University. When Mr. Bryan appeared the band played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "Die Wacht Am Rhein."

SUFFRAGE CAMPAIGN IS CARRIED TO POLLS

county seat; Hudson County, with Jersey City, Hoboken, and Bayonne within its boundaries; Union, with Elizabeth as its largest industrial centre; Bergen, where thousands of New York commuters make their homes; Passaic, with the big industrial city of Paterson and Camden across the Delaware River from Philadelphia which has a city of the same name with a teeming population of factory workers.

Issue is with Six Counties.

In Essex County, where James R. Nugent, the Democratic boss, is conducting a quiet, but vigorous, anti-suffrage campaign, the suffrage workers fear that the best they can hope for is to cut down the prospective majority against the woman suffrage amendment by keeping up a bitter fight until the very moment when the polls open and campaign clamor must cease.

Passaic County is claimed by both sides. Dr. Mary Cummins, President of the Paterson branch of the Woman's Political Union, said tonight:

"There will be a big vote tomorrow, and both Paterson and Passaic County will give a large majority for the suffrage amendment."

Mrs. Garret A. Hobart, widow of the late Vice President, who is a leader among the antis, said she thought the amendment would be defeated.

Frederick W. Van Blarcom, Chairman of the Passaic County Democratic Committee, is predicting a close vote, with the advantage slightly to the suffragists.

In Hudson County the leaders of the Democratic and Republican organizations, both ostensibly favoring woman suffrage, profess to be puzzled as to the outcome.

In Union County, where the suffrage leaders claim they will receive a majority for the amendment, the eleventh hour indications point to its defeat by at least 3 to 2, according to the Democratic and Republican leaders. The suffragists base their hopes on a light vote. They express the belief that men opposed to giving women the ballot will not go to the polls while the others will.

Both Sides Claim Victory.

In both Bergen and Camden Counties both sides claim a victory, and the political leaders express the belief that the vote will be close.

"I predict victory for the anti-suffragists when the question is put to a vote tomorrow," said Miss Clara Vezin, campaign manager of the anti-suffragists, tonight.

"Woman suffrage will be defeated in New Jersey by a large majority," said Mrs. Edward Yarde Breese, President of the Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage. "We base our confidence in the outcome on substantial data."

The final words from the suffrage leaders who insist that there has been a steady drift to their side in the battle ever since President Wilson promised that he would vote for woman suffrage made optimistic eleventh hour forecasts.

"We will carry New Jersey by 25,000 majority," said Mrs. E. F. Feickert, President of the Woman Suffrage Association of New Jersey. "Of this majority 15,000 will come from the populous northern counties and 10,000 from the rural counties in Southern New Jersey. These figures are based on our canvass of voters throughout the State, on the friendly spirit shown by the street crowds everywhere, and on the fact that there is practically no opposition to woman suffrage, except from James R. Nugent of Essex County and his followers and a few organized business men, the nature of whose business makes them afraid of women's votes."

Five Thousand Watchers.

The woman suffragists expect to have 5,000 watchers at the polls tomorrow to guard against frauds. Some of these watchers will be women, others will be men supplied by the Men's Woman Suffrage Committee of One Hundred, of which Everett Colby is President.

The fact that the ballots in this special election will not be numbered has spurred the suffrage forces to take elaborate precaution against fraud at the polls. A reward of $100 was offered tonight on behalf of the committee by George M. La Monte, Banking Commissioner of New Jersey, for any evidence of repeating or false registration.

Tomorrow is also a registration day throughout the State. The polls for the special election will close at 7 P. M., but the election officers will be busied with registering voters for the November election until 9 P. M. This is expected to make the count on the suffrage amendment very late.

ASSAILS WOMEN'S OPPONENTS.

Men's League for Suffrage Says They Descend to Obloquy.

A committee of men is being formed "to defend the women of New York against the scurrilous attacks of the Man Suffrage Association Opposed to Extension of Political Suffrage to Women' which are appearing from time to time in various forms."

James Lees Laidlaw, President of the Men's League for Equal Suffrage, is sending out letters which tell the recipients that he is taking the liberty of putting their names on the committee, and hopes to have their acceptance. The letter says:

"There is an association of men, who, in the heat of the campaign, seem to have forgotten the fact—perhaps because of the stand they have taken against women in the suffrage campaign—that there is still chivalry in this country. The campaign has been wonderfully free from personalities on the suffrage side, and it is a pity that our opponents, perhaps because they feel that their cause is lost, have descended to obloquy."

BIG FINISH TO PARADE.

Thirty Bands to be in Spectacle on the Plaza.

There will be a spectacular finish to the big Oct. 23 suffrage parade when the symbolic figures, encircled by thirty bands, at the fountain at the Plaza, will raise a big United States flag while the bands play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Mrs. Howard Mansfield, Chairman of the Music Committee, has devised this feature in which "Victory," "Equality," "Justice," "Uncle Sam," "Miss Columbia," and the twelve suffrage States and Alaska will form inside the musical circle on the steps of the fountain.

The Empire State Campaign Committee has received $500 for the suffrage week at the Park Theatre, from Sept. 27 to Oct. 2, during the run of May Irwin's play, but more than half of it was a personal contribution from the actress. Miss Irwin, as Chairman of the Campaign Committee's "Bureau of Laughter," sent another contribution:

"Sam," said she to her negro butler, "do you mean to vote on Nov. 2?"

"'Cose I means to vote," Sam answered promptly.

"What do you know about the Constitution?" asked May Irwin.

"Law now, Miss May," he countered, "you don't have to be a doctor to vote."

Miss Irwin's butler is to vote for "Miss May" and woman suffrage.

REFUTE HOME ARGUMENT.

Women Investigate Lives of Some Males Who Oppose Suffrage.

Suffrage canvassers have been told so many times by the men whom they met that woman's place is the home that they investigated some of the homes of the men making the argument. Here are the conditions of five of them:

One was a bachelor, who had never made a home for a wife, for a mother, sister, or any woman relative. The second had three daughters working in a factory, and a wife cooking in a restaurant, and an old mother janitress in a flat building where they all lived. The wife of a third had divorced him for non-support. The fourth was an old man supported by two daughters, one of whom had refused an offer of marriage so that the entire burden of the father's support should not fall on her sister. The fifth man employed 300 girls in a factory, where they made dresses for other women.

President Coming to Princeton.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—President Wilson will leave here early tomorrow morning for Princeton, N. J., to cast his ballot in the special State election on a Constitutional amendment giving suffrage to women. He has announced he will vote for the amendment. He will return to Washington tomorrow night. Secretary Garrison, Secretary Tumulty, and many employes at the White House and in Government departments will go back to New Jersey to vote.

DECLARES JUGGLING NEW HAVEN NEMESIS

Government's Counsel Tells Jury Road Hid Accounts to Conceal Guilt.

SAYS SYSTEM SCORNED LAW

Explains Governor Hill's Note and Brands Transactions of the Billard Company.

R. L. Batts, one of the special counsel appointed by the Government to prosecute William Rockefeller, Lewis Cass Ledyard, and nine other past and present Directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, on a charge of conspiring to monopolize the transportation facilities of New England, spent the entire session yesterday in the Federal District Court in explaining to the jury the intricacies of New Haven finance. Occasionally R. V. Lindabury or De Lancey Nicoll, counsel for the defendants, woud question some statement which Mr. Batts made, but he went on steadily explaining how a company which in 1890 had owned only 526 miles of railroad had gradually built up almost a complete monopoly of New England transportation.

He told the jury that the Government did not hold all combinations illegal and laid it down as a principle that the test of the legality of a combination was whether it was such as would be developed naturally in the normal way of business. Moreover, Mr. Batts told the jury they need consider not only what was done but what was intended to be done and that they should convict if they found an intent to monopolize. He quoted an incident in the early history of the fight between the New Haven and the New York & New England Railroad Company, which was one of its first competitors. It was intended to depreciate the value of the stock of that company in order that it might be cheaply acquired, and the New Haven did not shrink, the counsel declared, from many unfair and illegal acts, such as the acquisition of the stock and the wrecking of the New England Terminal Company and the consequent destruction of a freight and passenger route by way of Wilson's Point and the Long Island Railroad to New York.

A Saloonkeeper's Role.

In connection with this campaign, Mr. Batts said the New Haven obtained control of a suit against the New England company, which had been brought by a Boston saloonkeeper. One Austin Corbin had in the first place backed the saloonkeeper, giving him a written guarantee to hold him harmless if his name might be used, and when the New Haven Company took over the suit William Rockefeller, said Mr. Batts, did not hesitate to sign an agreement to indemnify Corbin.

Then he sketched the agreement between the New York Central, the New Haven and the Harlem & New York, by which the two former companies obtained the use of the New York Central terminal and said the transaction involved the agreement that neither of these roads should handle at the terminal any freight obtained from the other's territory, which might have been legal before 1890, but was certainly illegal afterward, he said.

The $1,500,000 note found among the effects of the late Governor John F. Hill, of Maine, who died on March 6, 1912, has never been satisfactorily explained. It was in an envelope which bore the indorsement "This note does not belong to me. J. F. Hill." When Charles S. Mellen was asked about it, he suggested it might have something to do with the Eastern Steamship Corporation. Mr. Batts's explanation was that ex-Governor Hill was used by Edward D. Robbins, counsel for the New Haven, in forging one of the links in the long chain of transfers which brought about the ownership by the New Haven of the Metropolitan Steamship Company of New Jersey. He incorporated the Eastern Securities Company, which held all the stock of the Metropolitan Steamship Company of Maine. This concern agreed to turn over the physical property of the Metropolitan Steamship Company of Maine to the Eastern Steamship Corporation and received in exchange $1,700,000 of its bonds and 8,500 of its shares, he told the jury. By this means Robbins, Mr. Batts asserted, got control of the steamship property the New Haven desired.

Of the transaction for the control of the Sound steamships and the so-called Corsair agreement, by which the New Haven and the Boston & Maine divided New England, taking the line of the Boston & Albany as their boundary, Mr. Batts said:

"Any person of a little bit of intelligence ought to have known that the legality of these agreements could be questioned."

Then he discussed the Billard transaction. He told how the New Haven had acquired 109,948 shares of the Boston & Maine, preparatory to securing its control, and then found that Massachusetts would not permit it to hold them.

"At this time appears John L. Billard, one man in the history of the country who has acquired fame as a person who did nothing but permit the use of his name," Mr. Batts said. "He was prepared for the life of a railroad magnate by conducting for years a coal business. But on a certain morning just when the New Haven wanted to dispose of 109,948 Boston & Maine shares, he came to the office of Mr. Mellen and said, 'I have no experience and no money, but I want to purchase 109,948 Boston & Maine shares. Have you got them to sell?'"

"I suppose you will offer proof of this," interrupted Mr. Lindabury.

Mr. Batts said he would, and went on to describe how, although the shares stood on the books of the New Haven at 140, they were sold to Billard at 125. The New Haven borrowed $11,000,000 to buy the stock for him, and he gave his demand note for it. So, Mr. Batts said, though the stock remained in the safe of the company, the New Haven could say that it no longer owned the Boston & Maine shares.

Tracing the transaction still further, Mr. Batts said that on the sale and resale by Billard of the stock back to the New Haven at 150 there was an apparent profit of $2,750,000, and the question was, How was that used? He said the Government would show part of it was used in the Dominion of Canada in connection "with the Grand Trunk affair."

Mr. Nicoll Objects.

"I think you are going beyond the legitimate scope of an opening statement," interrupted Mr. Nicoll. "I do not want to interrupt, but I must object to that statement."

"More of the money," said Mr. Batts, "was paid to one Brown, a disbursing agent in attendance at the Connecticut Legislature, and $750,000 was invested in the securities of Boston newspapers or paid to other newspapers. Billard himself received a small percentage, and $2,000,000 was for the capital of the Billard Company.

"I ask the jury," said Mr. Batts, "to determine whether the acquisition of the securities of a newspaper by a railroad is a proper incident of normal development. Then the books of the Billard Company were transported to Canada, out of the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and we cannot trace all the transactions."

Mr. Batts passed in review the acquisition of the Joy Line, the Hartford & New York Transportation Company, and the Neptune Line, and then turned to the Metropolitan Steamship Company.

"In this," he said, "the defendant, Robbins, added somewhat to the history of his country. In one day in paying out a single sum of money he used three different banks, five different accounts, ten different deposits, and nine different checks. He also had recourse to Grover Cleveland Richards, the young electrician, and brought him to New York at $5 a day to draw a check for $1,500,000 on the Eastern Securities Company, which had been called into existence merely to permit Richards to draw that one check."

Mr. Robbins seemed amused. He followed the intricacies of the deal with the Prosecutor and seemed to consider it a very good joke.

Mr. Lindabury suggested that Mr. Batts should give the details of the transaction, and Mr. Nicoll said:

"I don't think he understands it all."

"I agree," replied Mr. Batts, "I don't understand it all. No one can understand it all."

"Then," said Mr. Batts, "in 1909, in order to get possession of the Metropolitan Steamship Company of New Jersey, Billard and Samuel Hemingway took $3,000,000 of the notes of the New England Investment and Security Company to the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company and borrowed $1,700,000 and deposited it to the credit of the Billard company. Against this a check for $1,550,000 was drawn and deposited to the account of one Canfield in the National Bank of Commerce. Against this a check for $1,500,000 was drawn and deposited in the Bank of the Manhattan Company to the credit of the New England Securities Company, and against this a check for $1,450,000 was drawn and deposited in the same bank to the credit of the Metropolitan Steamship Company of Maine.

"To the credit of the Metropolitan Company of Maine was also deposited a check for $2,000,000 from the Billard Company, and against it was drawn a check for $1,600,000 which was deposited to the credit of Canfield at the National Bank of Commerce. Canfield then drew a check for $1,550,000 and paid it to the Billard Company at the Farmers Loan and Trust Company, and the Billard Company next drew a check for $1,500,000 and deposited in the Bank of the Manhattan Company to the account of the New England Securities Company. Next a check for $1,550,000 was drawn on that account and deposited to the credit of the Metropolitan Steamship Company of Maine in the Bank of the Manhattan Company, and finally a check for $1,400,000 was drawn by the Metropolitan Steamship Company of Maine, with which the securities of the Metropolitan Steamship Company of New Jersey were bought from the Assets Realization Company.

"These transactions placed the control of the steamship in the hands of the New Haven."

Mr. Batts told in detail of the way in which to get rid of the two great steamboats of the Metropolitan of New Jersey, the Harvard and Yale, the Pacific Navigation Company was formed, which took them to the Pacific, and three freight boats were transferred into passenger steamers to take their place. A whole series of intricate transactions between new dummy companies followed, he said, with the result that by December, 1911, the Eastern Steamship Corporation was formed to take over all the steamboat traffic of the various lines controlled by the New Haven.

"Secrecy Proof of Quiet."

"Such secrecy as this," the counsel asserted, "could not have been undertaken if the acquisition of these lines had been merely the legitimate expansion of business, and the intricacies which passed the power of the human mind to remember and the similarity of the names of the companies formed, evidently with the idea of confusion, appeared to be proof of the guiltiness of the transactions."

At the afternoon session Mr. Batts spent most of his time in explaining on a map the routes followed by the different lines which had been absorbed in the New Haven system, while Judge Hunt came down from the bench to watch his demonstration. As Mr. Batts lacked a pointer Mr. Rockefeller volunteered his cane, but John G. Milburn was nearer and forestalled him with his walking stick.

In speaking of the acquisition of the trolley lines of New England, which began in 1905, Mr. Batts said it involved the policy of spending however much money might be necessary to acquire a monopoly. He suggested the price paid for a property might be taken as another test by the jury of the legitimacy of the expansion it produced, and he instanced the purchase of a trolley system from Senator Aldrich and his associates. The New Haven paid for it $21,000,000, and the Government would show it was worth only one-tenth that price.

Then Mr. Batts launched forth on his explanation of the condition of the New Haven in 1890, when the Sherman law was passed, and set forth what were the principal competitors it had to face. He pointed out that there was then plenty of competition, and it would have been possible to build up several rival systems.

He had not concluded his demonstration when the court adjourned until this morning at 10:30. Mr. Batts expects to finish his opening address before the end of the day. The first witness is likely to be put on merely to identify documents, but Charles S. Mellen, former President of the New Haven, will be called early in the trial.

HOTEL CONTINENTAL POKER GAME RAIDED

Detective Confiscates 1,700 Chips and Arrests None of the Players.

ALL WERE BUSINESS MEN

Manager Duncan Indignant at Disturbance of Regular Patrons—Blames Discharged Waiter.

Detective Brady, of Inspector Morris's staff, disguised himself as a traveling salesman yesterday afternoon and lolled around the lobby of the Hotel Continental, at Broadway, and Forty-first Street. His disguise consisted of a suitcase. The detectives had received an anonymous complaint that poker playing was going on in the hotel.

When a couple of men entered together and went up to the second floor the detective followed them. They entered Room 242; he waited a while and then rapped four times, then kicked on the door. It was opened, and on a table in plain view he saw a quantity of poker chips, cards and some change, with several players seated about the table. The detective sent the chips found in this and the adjoining room, 1,700 in all, with the cards and money to the West Thirtieth Street Police Station, but did not arrest the players.

Manager Henry Duncan announced last night that the same players could have a room any time they wanted to play poker and that he knew them all well. He was indignant at the raid. The men were all business men and regular patrons of the hotel, he said, and had said they all chipped in to pay for the room whenever they wanted to play, and played only a friendly game. The anonymous letter, he said, was sent to the police by a negro waiter who had been discharged on the complaint of the players that he was "lazy." Mr. Duncan said that a detective called at the hotel a week ago following the receipt of the letter, and that when he was told that the men were regular patrons and played only a friendly game he said the hotel was not breaking the law. Mr. Duncan said that he offered to prohibit the games in the future if the authorities objected to them, and was told that it would not be necessary.

"Any hotel in town would allow patrons to play poker if they cared to," Mr. Duncan said. "This 'raid' was an outrage."

$28,600 BUYS A RAILROAD.

The New Jersey & Pennsylvania Resold on Court Order.

The New Jersey & Pennsylvania Railroad was purchased yesterday at public auction in Newark by Frank B. Allen of Bernardsville, N. J., for $28,600. The road was sold several weeks ago, and because the price paid was too low it was ordered resold by Vice Chancellor Howell.

After the auction, which was held in the law offices of Pitney, Hardin & Skinner and was conducted by the receiver, Frederick V. Pitney of Morristown, the Vice Chancellor confirmed the sale. Mr. Allen bought the main part of the property of the railroad, and George E. Fisher of New York City obtained a right of way from Watnong, the easterly terminal, to Speedwell Avenue, Morristown.

Mr. Allen said that the railroad would be rehabilitated as soon as the necessary repairs could be made to satisfy the State Board of Public Utility Commissioners so that the road could be operated with safety.

The holders of the capital stock of $800,000 will obtain nothing out of the sale, as there is outstanding $200,000 worth of bonds. There also were unsecured debts amounting to $80,000 which will remain unsatisfied.

'COUNT' LOUDEN HELD, PROTESTS INNOCENCE

Alleged Bigamist, Under $10,000 Bail, Reserves Right to Change "Not Guilty" Plea.

"Count" Max Lynar Louden, suspected by Federal agents of being a spy, but finally arrested for alleged bigamy, was held by Judge Crain in General Sessions yesterday for trial in $10,000 bail. His lawyer, J. Philip Berg, protested against the amount as excessive, but Assistant District Attorney Bostwick said every precaution ought to be taken to keep the "Count" within reach pending further investigations.

Argument will be heard by Judge Crain today on Mr. Berg's motion to reduce the bail. Mr. Berg also reserved for his client the right to withdraw his plea of not guilty within ten days.

For the first time since he was locked up in the Tombs on evidence procured against him by agents of the Department of Justice, the "Count" yesterday consented to issue a formal statement through Miss Louise Winterer of 149 Broadway, who said she had charge of Louden's legal affairs for the last three years. Miss Winterer said her client's real name was Count Maximilian Rochus de Passy-Lynar-Louden. His statement was as follows:

"I am not a bigamist. I am a victim of circumstances and mistaken identity. I will vindicate myself. I never forged any passports. That is all moonshine. I am not in the employ of the German Government, nor am I a spy. My name is not and never has been Chimang. I never heard of this man until my arrest. The Government thought I was a spy because I obtained a passport for the purpose of going to South America and Japan, where I had planned to introduce a patent army kit which I had invented.

"My wife's trip to Sweden was not a mission of espionage, but was for the purpose of claiming an inheritance left by an uncle. The statement that I have a son is false. I have no children. I have a dear wife on whom unfortunately most of the brunt of this unpleasant notoriety will fall. Time will show that a great mistake has been made."

Not one of the three women who profess to be the wives of the "Count" were in court at his arraignment. They are Mrs. Fred Arnold, who says she was married to him in 1893; Rose O'Brien, whom he is alleged to have married in 1912, and his present wife, Lalia Florence Jansen, whom he married in the City Hall, his name appearing on the record of that marriage as "Count de Passy."

HILLSTROM TO DIE NOV. 19.

Declines to Talk When Taken Before the Court for Resentence.

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 18.—Joseph Hillstrom, convicted of murder, was resentenced today to be shot Friday, Nov. 19. Hillstrom was brought to the courtroom from the State prison in an automobile. He declined to say anything.

Hillstrom, who is a Swede, was convicted of the murder of J. G. Morrison and Morrison's son here Jan. 10, 1914. He was originally sentenced to be executed Oct. 1. A respite until last Saturday was granted by Governor Spry at the request of President Wilson, whose action was on a request of the Swedish Minister to the United States.

The respite was terminated, and Hillstrom's application for commutation of sentence was denied by the Board of Pardons Saturday, as no new evidence was presented.

TESTIFIES SHE SAW A FRAUD CONCOCTED

Girl Asserts Silk Was Deliberately Soaked and Then Used as Basis of Damage Suit.

SAYS SHE MADE INVENTORY

Court Orders That an Officer Be Detailed to Guard the Witness Until the Trial Is Ended.

Anna Stern, 20 years old, testified yesterday before Justice Platzek and a jury in the Supreme Court against Strysower & Nichthauser, who are suing Block & Co. for $3,500 for damage alleged to have been caused by the carelessness of the defendants. The plaintiffs are furriers at 152 to 156 West Twenty-fifth Street and the defendants are makers of costumes in the same building. The alleged damage occurred during a furious rainstorm on Sept. 4, 1913. The rain, according to the plaintiffs, came through an open skylight.

Miss Stern appeared to be afraid to testify, but she was soothed by I. Gainsburg, counsel for the defendants, and in answer to many questions she said she had seen the two members of the plaintiff firm take an inventory of the damaged goods. Then she said:

"Jack Nichthauser, brother of a member of the firm, brought out from the stockroom large quantities of buttons and silk. He poured water over them and packed them in a case. Among the articles put in the case were some goods that had been damaged in a fire and on which the insurance had been collected."

Miss Stern said that these goods were part of the articles put in the inventory and for which Block & Co. were charged. She said she knew this because she had made out the inventory.

Miss Stern told Justice Platzek she was afraid to go alone to her home in New Jersey and asked that protection be afforded her. The court directed that a court officer be detailed to accompany her until the trial was over.

MAYOR IS OUTVOTED: SALARIES RESTORED

City Employes Find Defenders in McAneny and Borough Presidents.

DIM LIGHTS ON 5TH AV.

Commissioner Williams Says Saving of $1,700 Will Be Resented by Residents Above 23d Street.

The first test vote in the Budget Committee of the Board of Estimate on reductions in salaries of city employes came yesterday when the Mayor and Controller Prendergast lined up on one side against President McAneny and Borough Presidents Pounds and Mathewson on the other. The Mayor and the Controller were outvoted at every turn. Several times the Mayor suggested a compromise. Only once was it accepted.

Salaries which had been reduced by the sub-committee on the recommendations of the examiners of the Bureau of Standards were restored to their present amount, the vote being three to two against the reductions.

The first appeals heard were from the Tenement House Department, Commissioner Murphy arguing for the restoration of the salary cuts. Twelve inspectors at $1,500 a year had been cut to $1,200. The Mayor and the Controller were promptly outvoted and the reductions were not made. Superintendent Andrew J. O'Neill of the Brooklyn office, receives $3,000 and the Bureau of Standards recommended a reduction to $1,980. The Mayor suggested that $2,400 be allowed and on a vote this compromise was carried.

When President Adams, of the Municipal Art Commission, requested that the salary of his stenographer, Miss Clark, which had been cut by the sub-committee from $1,500 to $1,200, be restored, a lively controversy followed. Mr. Adams said Miss Clark was possessed of a lot of tact. The Controller thought $100 a month was sufficient for any stenographer. President McAneny remarked that Miss Clark was not only a stenographer, but had acted as secretary and earned the salary she is being paid. The Mayor offered a compromise salary of $1,850, but the other members of the committee, except the Controller, voted to keep Miss Clark's salary at $1,500.

Supervisor David Ferguson, of the City Record, made a protest against the salary of a storekeeper, Washington Teler, being reduced from $1,950 to $1,200. He has been in the department twenty-five years. Mayor Mitchel offered to compromise at $1,650, but the majority of the committee, McAneny, Pounds and Mathewson, voted to keep the salary at $1,950.

The Controller then said he was willing to submit the case to any committee of business men and pay whatever salary they agreed was right.

"Why hold a post-mortem and autopsy?" asked the Mayor. "We've already voted on this question, and if we don't look out the stenographer's charges will amount to more than the money we tried to save by reduction."

Earlier in the day the sub-committee reduced the 1916 estimate of Commissioner Williams of the Water Department for light, heat, and power from $4,695,545 to $4,844,979, which is $1,000,000 less than allowed for 1914. A few cuts in salaries were recommended, and Commissioner Williams fought hard for his employes.

The Commissioner was particularly aroused when the sub-committee recommended that the 400-watt lights on Fifth Avenue above Twenty-third Street be reduced to lamps of only 300-watt power, effecting a saving of $1,700.

"I tell you, gentlemen, that you are making a big mistake when you try to economize in this way," said Commissioner Williams. "The residents of that neighborhood and the taxpayers will not stand for it, I am sure. It is an outrage."

The matter has yet to come before the main Budget Committee.

When the Mayor's attention was called to a statement that if the Board of Estimate allowed the cuts the sub-committee are expected to make in the salaries of the chief, deputy chiefs, and battalion chiefs of the Fire Department these officials would request to be retired on a pension of one-half of their salaries, he said:

"Oh, fol de rol."

The question of reducing salaries in the Fire Department has been referred to the Corporation Counsel and until he gives an opinion no action will be taken by the Budget Committee.

OPEN NEW SUBMARINE BASE.

Cruiser Columbia and Undersea Craft in New London Harbor.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Oct. 18.—Seven submarines, the G-1, G-2, G-4, E-1, D-1, D-2, and D-3, accompanied by the monitors Tonopah and Ozark as tenders and by the cruiser Columbia as flagship, Rear Admiral Albert W. Grant commanding, arrived in this harbor today to open the new submarine base at the Navy Yard.

The Columbia anchored off New London Light, but the submarines and tenders at once proceeded up the river and the undersea craft tied up at the piers at the Navy Yard.

NEARING ON PREPAREDNESS.

He Does Not Like the Way the President Is Handling It.

Special to The New York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., Oct. 18.—Addressing the Hartford Get-Together Club tonight, Professor Scott Nearing, formerly of the University of Pennsylvania, referred to the Wilson Administration's handling of the question of preparedness, which he disapproved.

"Individual opinion is a matter of personal judgment. Public opinion is a balance, not of individual feelings and facts, but of people weighted in proportion to their relative influences," he said. "In the individual you get a matter weighed and considered in the terms of his prejudices, feelings, and all the background of his life. In the case of a public matter, what you really have is the registering of votes on a public matter. Different people with different ideas are balanced against one another to give you a decision and a conclusion.

"If you are employed by the du Pont Powder Company or the Colt Revolver Works you are not likely to shout for peace. And this brings up the question of preparedness. I cannot admire the present administration's method of handling that problem.

years, under the Administration program, the last of which would not be in commission until 1925.

The building of these four ships would tax the capacity of American private yards. There are only five companies now equipped to construct such vessels, four on the Atlantic and one on the Pacific. The Government itself has only one yard, the Brooklyn Navy Yard, where battleships can be constructed, although it is planned to equip the Philadelphia yard also, and possibly the Bremerton plant for this work. Development of the new building program must follow these restrictions.

The present program of not more than four big ships a year also gives opportunity to keep the designs up to date from year to year. This is one reason why it is proposed to build only two battle cruisers the first year and none the second. Naval architecture is making such rapid strides with the great navies of the world engaged in actual hostilities, that American designers hesitate to recommend the construction of a large number of ships at one time. Each year sees radical alterations in battleships design even in peace times.

Through its Secretary, H. Findlay French, the Maryland League for National Defense has presented to the President a petition urging that he carry out the constitutional injunction to the Executive to "provide for the defense." This is a non-partisan organization. Among those signing the petition are Senator John Walter Smith, Democrat, and Governor Phillips L. Goldsborough, Republican. The petition is an argument for preparedness against "acts of aggression or opposition by any foreign power."

The defense conditions at New York and Washington are referred to in this way: "And while the necessary training was going on, what? New York, with its accumulated wealth and massive buildings, would be laid low by dynamite and fire or levied upon for a ransom which would fairly stagger the imagination. Scarcely less an objective would be the beautiful Capital City, Washington, and for a second time would its magnificent buildings and luxurious homes fall prey to flames at the hands of the invader. Baltimore and Maryland would be equally in danger. Shall Maryland be made a second Belgium, to be laid waste and depopulated by fire and sword because, forsooth, some one of limited vision raises a bogey cry of militarism? All along the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards important cities and towns would be wrecked, and these include 90 per cent. of the plants capable of supplying munitions of war, which would be needed for national defense."

be submitted to the incoming Congress recommend an appropriation for the construction of a large building slip at the Philadelphia Yard so as to enable that yard to construct battleships and battle cruisers. Mr. Daniels is hoping that this appropriation will be available in time for the Philadelphia Navy Yard to have a slip for the construction of battleships in another year.

The Submarine Contracts.

The contracts for the construction of the submarines were awarded as follows:

Eight submarines to the Electric Boat Company, for $545,000 each.

Three submarines to the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, for $545,000 each.

Three submarines on the Lake Torpedo Boat Company's design to the California Shipbuilding Company, for $548,500 each.

One submarine to the navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H., for $500,000.

One submarine to the navy yard, Puget Sound, Washington, for $500,000.

The Newport News Shipbuilding Company and the New York Shipbuilding Company of Camden, N. J., were bidders, but got no contracts. Secretary Daniels explained that their bids were higher than those of the concerns to which contracts had been awarded, and, in addition to that fact, these companies proposed to build submarines according to the Hay-Denny design and patents. Only four or five of these submarines have been built anywhere in the world. The engines for them could not be built in this country at once. The first engines would have to be built abroad, and this, it was thought, would delay the completion of the submarines.

Secretary Daniels last July delayed the opening of bids for the submarines at the request of the Newport News and Camden companies to enable them to perfect arrangements for bidding. He did this in the hope that other companies might enter the field of submarine construction.

Secretary Daniels explained also why the two submarines awarded to the Portsmouth and Puget Sound Yards were to be of the Holland type. He said that if the Lake type had been chosen it would have cost the Government a royalty of $50,000 for each submarine built in a Government yard, while the royalty to be paid to the Electric Boat Company for the privilege of building Holland-type boats in these yards would be only $1,000 for each boat.

The awards for the six destroyers were as follows:

Two to the William Cramp & Sons Ship and Engine Building Company at $845,000 each.

One to the Seattle Construction and Dry Dock Company at $885,000.

One to the Bath Iron Works at $879,500.

One to the Navy Yard, Mare Island, Cal., in accordance with its estimate of $762,638.

One to the Navy Yard, Norfolk, Va., in accordance with its estimate of $706,305.

The design of these vessels marks an advance in vessels of the same class designated in previous years. Their principal characteristics are:

Length over all, 315 feet 6 inches.

Beams, 30 feet 7 inches; draft, 8 feet; displacement, 1,125 tons; battery, four 4-inch rapid-fire guns, two anti-aircraft guns, four triple-torpedo tubes to discharge the heaviest and longest range torpedoes now built.

Machinery, steam turbines, oil fuel fired water tube boilers; speed, 30 knots.

Accepts a New Design.

In making the awards, Secretary Daniels said:

"The vessels to be built will be in the main in accordance with the department's designs, except in the case of the one boat to be built by the Bath Iron Works, which will be according to the bidder's design of machinery, for which that company guarantees results in speed and cruising radius somewhat in excess of those required by the department. The contract was placed with this company for this special boat in pursuance of the Department's policy of encouraging private enterprise which promises progress along scientific and engineering lines.

"The order for the construction of one of these vessels at each of the Mare Island and Norfolk yards is in pursuance of the Department's policy of equipping and developing our navy yards to the highest point of efficiency in times of peace, so that they may be prepared for the greatest strains which would be thrown on these organizations in time of war.

"The award of contract for one vessel to the Seattle Construction and Dry Dock Company marks the beginning of the first vessel of this class to be built on the Pacific Coast by a private concern since the completion of the Paul Jones, Perry, and Preble in 1902. It also marks the entry of this company into the field for building this class of vessels. It therefore serves the double purpose of developing the country's shipbuilding facilities on the Pacific Coast and of widening the field of competition for the award of Government contracts.

"The vessel assigned to the Norfolk Navy Yard will be the first of this class of boats to be constructed by that yard, and the one assigned to the Mare Island Yard will be the second boat of this class to be undertaken by that yard.

"The contracts for all of the above vessels call for delivery in eighteen or twenty months, which marks a distinct advance in rapidity of construction over previous years."

Concerning the award of submarine contracts Secretary Daniels said:

"The designs and specifications which were submitted meet, in all essential respects, the rigid requirements for this class of vessel which were laid down by the Navy Department. In general features and characteristics they represent a small advance in size, but a much greater advance in efficiency. Both designs propose improved engines of the heavy oil type and greatly improved storage batteries, these advances having been made possible by general developments in engineering science and by extended experience in previous submarines of the United States Navy.

"As in the case of the destroyers, the bidders show their ability to build more rapidly than heretofore, as the guaranteed dates of delivery are in all cases well within the twenty-four months which was the best period of construction for any boats of this class previously laid down.

"Also, as in the case of the destroyers, it will be noted that the awards for submarines have followed out the Secretary's policies of developing the building facilities of navy yards, and at the same time encouraging private enterprise and widening the field of competition.

"With special reference to the navy yards, the present assignment gives a second submarine to the Portsmouth Navy Yard, which has already partially completed a vessel of this type, and assigns the first vessel of this type to the Puget Sound Navy Yard, which will insure that this yard in the future will be able to undertake new construction."

NAVY LETS CONTRACTS FOR 22 WAR CRAFT

Opens Bids for Sixteen Submarines and Six Destroyers to Cost $13,563,943.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—Secretary Daniels announced today the names of the successful bidders for the new submarines and torpedo boat destroyers authorized by the naval appropriation act 1915. The awards were for six destroyers and sixteen submarines, the greatest number ever let at one time in the history of the Navy Department. The total value of the contracts was $13,563,943. Of this amount $11,095,000 will be spent in private shipbuilding yards, and $2,468,943 in Government yards. The value of the contracts for submarines was $8,640,000, and for destroyers $4,923,443.

There were nine bidders, including some who had not before offered to build submarines for the United States Navy. The department awarded the contract for the submarines to three private concerns and two navy yards. The submarines to be built in Government yards will be of the Holland type, built after plans by the Electric Boat Company, making a total of ten Holland boats, including those awarded to the Electric Boat Company itself, while the remaining six will be of the Lake type.

Two of the torpedo boat destroyers also will be built at navy yards, one each at the Norfolk and Mare Island Yards, in pursuance of the policy of Secretary Daniels in endeavoring to arrange for construction of naval vessels of all types in the navy yards. Norfolk and Mare Island are being developed especially for the construction of destroyers. The Portsmouth and Puget Sound Navy Yards, each got a contract. The New York and Philadelphia Navy Yards are being developed as yards for the construction of battleships. The New York Yard is now the only one that can build a dreadnought. The estimates ready to Dry very gently, spread on a thin layer of the resinol ointment, and cover with a light bandage—if necessary to protect the clothing. This should be done twice a day. Usually the distressing itching and burning stop promptly, and the skin soon becomes clear and healthy again. For trial free, write to Dept. 5-R, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

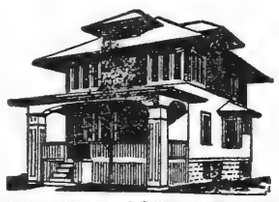
Year 1892: Their ne ideal heating investment

Year 1915: Their life-long ideal heating investment

Twenty-four years ago we began to make and sell these now-world-famous heating outfits. Every outfit that we sold then and since is giving ideal heating results, for even conflagrations and quakes do not destroy them. If buildings are remodeled or wrecked, the outfits are used again, as they are made in units and can be altered to fit. We advertised them as life-long investments, and they are proving so in more than a million buildings at home and abroad.

AMERICAN RADIATORS & IDEAL BOILERS

IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators are about the only articles entering into the building equipment which do not deteriorate. But, more than that, these outfits repay their own cost again and again through fuel economy, less caretaking, absence of repairs, and because their cleanliness saves soiling and wearing of furniture and decorations.



A No. 6-22-W IDEAL Boiler and 600 ft. of 38-in. AMERICAN Radiators costing the owner $245, were used to heat this cottage. At this price the goods can be bought of any reputable, competent Fitter. This did not include costs of labor, pipe, valves, freight, etc., which vary according to climatic and other conditions.

Property thus outfitted sells quicker at the higher price, or 10% to 15% increased rental; or banker will extend larger loan. Why do you longer run the health risk, the fire danger, the ash and coal-gas spouting annoyances, as well as the expenses and short-life of old-fashioned heating? Twenty-four years of unequaled heating service, and many refinements, as developed in our factories and laboratories in United States, Canada and Europe, and the great volume of our business, enable us to offer IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators at a price no greater than asked for inferior devices. Accept no substitute.

Made in sizes to fit old or new stores, offices, flats, schools, churches, garages, as well as houses and cottages in country or city. No rekindling the fire all season. Same water is used for years. Phone your nearest dealer today and get his estimate. Prices now most attractive and at this season you get the services of the most skilled fitters. Ask for pamphlet (free.) "Ideal Heating Investments." Puts you under no obligation to buy.

IDEAL Boilers are made in sizes for 4-room cottages up to largest public building—cost but little more than the cheap heating devices, which only last a few years.

Of all general publications, the magazines for women are most dynamic. Their primary purpose is the improvement of methods—including housekeeping, cooking, care of children and dress.

Thus, while a magazine of entertainment fulfills its mission if it gives you a pleasant hour, a magazine like The Designer to be successful at all induces concrete activity in some department of domestic economy, and this activity must include the purchase of necessary articles.

Thus, just as a Philadelphia woman goes to Strawbridge & Clothier for patterns and dry goods with which to make a dress which she has seen in The Designer, in the same manner she will go to Thomas Martindale or some other grocer for the ingredients of a new recipe.

2 KILLED, 16 HURT IN AUTO MISHAPS

Man Is Crushed to Death When Car Is Upset in Trying to Avoid Him.

MOTOR RUNS OVER A BOY

Lad on His Way to School Hurt Mortally in Jersey City—Aged Driver Injured.

Two persons killed and sixteen injured was the toll of automobile accidents in and near New York yesterday.

John Cevelihan, 26 years old, of 444 Nepperhan Avenue, Yonkers, was killed yesterday afternoon when, stepping from behind an automobile in Tuckahoe Road, he was struck by another car driven by Herbert Travers of Yonkers. Travers turned sharply to avoid the accident, and in doing so upset his car, which fell upon Cevelihan, crushing him to death. Travers was thrown to the ground and bruised.

While on his way to school yesterday morning from his home at 84 Mill Road, Jersey City, 8-year-old John Edwards was struck by an automobile driven by John B. Raffert of 149 Harrison Avenue, Jersey City, and killed. The car passed over the child's body.

J. H. Sutton, a merchant of Monroe, N. J., who is 80 years old, lost control of his automobile early yesterday morning while driving to his home from Newark, and the car rolled down an embankment after crashing into a tree by the roadside. Mr. Sutton and his wife, who is nearly as old as he, were pinned under the automobile and remained so until Miss Margaret Sutton, their niece, who was also in the car, brought help from Newfoundland, two miles away. Miss Sutton was thrown from the automobile, but escaped injury. She ran all of the way to Newfoundland for assistance. Mr. and Mrs. Sutton were taken to their home, and, though seriously injured, they are expected to recover.

An unmanageable horse was responsible yesterday for injuries to Peter Reeves, 30 years old, Vice President of the Daniel Reeves Company, wholesale grocers, at 451 West 125th Street, and Arthur L. Rogers, 48 years old, a salesman for Pritchard & Co., 31 Spring Street. Both men were in Mr. Reeves's buggy, which he was driving north on Amsterdam Avenue, near 110th Street, when the horse became frightened and bolted. As the animal was about to cross 110th Street its path was blocked by an automobile driven by Edward Conklin of 90 Sunnyside Drive, Yonkers, who was going east on the street. The horse ran head-on into the car, and Mr. Reeves and Mr. Rogers were thrown to the pavement. Mr. Rogers suffered internal injuries and a possible fracture of the right arm; Mr. Reeves suffered a fracture of the left arm and contusions. Mr. Conklin escaped injury, though the automobile was damaged. The horse was so badly injured that it had to be shot.

Benjamin Rosenstein and his nephew, Manuel Rosenstein, of 597 Orange Street, Newark, suffered bruises and cuts yesterday when an automobile driven by the uncle crashed into a telephone pole in Verona, N. J. The uncle, who was the more seriously injured, was taken to the Newark Hospital.

CLEARS DEAD JOY RIDER.

Youth Exonerates Young Wenzell of Theft of Auto.

Special to The New York Times.

ENGLEWOOD, N. J., Oct. 18.—William Lachmund, the Englewood boy blamed for the joy ride which terminated near Congers, on Saturday midnight, when Arthur Allan Wenzell, 16 years old, was killed, today made a statement in the Nyack Hospital exonerating Wenzell from any connection with the theft of the auto and the ride.

Lachmund is charged with homicide and with taking a stolen automobile into New York State. The Rockland authorities fixed his bail at $2,000. His most serious injuries are a fractured jaw, contusions of the head, and a sprained back. The three other boys who are in the Nyack Hospital probably will leave tomorrow.

Francis Marsa and George Flotard, who escaped injury and were held in the Nyack Jail, were brought here today and charged by Prosecutor Huckin, whose automobile was stolen and wrecked, with larceny. They were released under $500 bail each. No date has been set by Coroner Semendinger of Rockland County for the inquest.

Lachmund said that all except Wenzell participated in the plans to take an automobile, but they did not know the one they took belonged to the Prosecutor.

CITY HIRING IS SLIPSHOD.

Bruere Says New York Pays Little Attention to Employment.

The Society for the Study of the Problem of Employment held its first meeting last night at the United Engineering Societies Building, 29 West Thirty-ninth Street. Mayor Mitchel, scheduled as the principal speaker, sent City Chamberlain Henry Bruere, who said New York City had paid too little attention to the scientific study of the employment problem and therefore did not get the results to be hoped for. He said also that employers in the city had not used the city Employment Bureau as much as it had been anticipated.

Other speakers were Meyer Bloomfield, Director of the Boston Vacation Bureau; Dr. E. F. Nichols, President of Dartmouth College; J. H. Willits of the Wharton School, Philadelphia, and Magnus W. Alexander of the General Electric Company.

Nathan Straus In Synod Hall.

Nathan Straus will speak tonight at a public meeting in Synod Hall, Amsterdam Avenue and 110th Street, Cathedral of St. John the Divine, arranged by the Laymen's Efficiency League, volunteer personal workers in the Episcopal Church. The other speakers will be Henry A. Wise Wood, member of the Naval Consulting Board, and L. Hollingsworth Wood, Secretary of the League to Limit Armaments. The meeting is held to discuss the duty of men in the present situation of war preparedness.

WOODS'S BIG POLICE PLANS.

Commissioner Tells Boston Audience of Department "Preparedness."

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 18.—A police force which seeks to prevent the manufacture of criminals was set up as the ideal of Police Commissioner Arthur H. Woods of New York, who addressed the 400 members of the Episcopal Club tonight.

"The New York policeman," he said, "has had a bad name, but if you had worked with the police for almost four years, as I have, you would realize that, although his sins have not been inconsiderable, he has been more sinned against than sinning. When we think of the policeman as a grafter I wonder if we think of the kind of work he has to do. I often think of the policeman as a sort of surgeon of the body politic."

Speaking of "preparedness," Mr. Woods said that the plans which were so speedily put into operation at the time of the recent subway accident were made by him six months before, and he went on to say that a plan had been worked out whereby the force could be operated if the signal system should be put out of commission. Arrangements have also been made by the department for caring for 500,000 people in case of a great disaster. Moreover, the men are being trained to shoot with rifles and to use rapid-fire guns should it ever become necessary.

$111,970 IN TEN MINUTES.

E. T. Stotesbury Raises Funds for Children's Hospital—Gives $50,000.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 18.—E. T. Stotesbury, J. Pierpont Morgan's partner in Philadelphia, tonight in ten minutes at a dinner to aid the $500,000 children's hospital fund, drew subscriptions for $61,970 from the 240 guests and then, in a moment of much excitement, brought his gavel down upon the table and shouted that he would add $50,000 as his own contribution. This brought the ten minutes' total up to $111,970.

Mr. Stotesbury, as well as the others at the banquet, and they included some of the most prominent persons in the social and financial life of the city, intend that the hospital shall be the finest children's institution in the world. Their enthusiasm was demonstrated when the subscriptions were announced. Men and women rose from their chairs, waved flags, cheered, and sang.

Among other donors of large sums was Eckley Brinton Coxe, who gave $25,000, while his mother, Mrs. Charles B. Coxe, gave $10,000. Mr. Coxe gave the $100,000 with which to purchase the site of the hospital three years ago.

BAPTISTS GIVE A PAGEANT.

Obtain $1,000 Toward the Saving of Judson Memorial Church.

Before nearly 1,000 persons assembled last night in the auditorium of the Metropolitan Building, the members of the various Baptist churches of the city presented "The Spirit of Christian Service, a Judson Memorial Pageant," under the auspices of the Women's Committee of the Judson Memorial Fund. The committee is trying to raise $300,000 in behalf of the Judson Memorial Church at Washington Square, South.

"The Spirit of Christian Service," a sketch of immigrants being received and sheltered in this country, was a reminder of missionary work the Judson Memorial Church has been able to accomplish among the foreign-born living in its district. There were twenty-one characters in the cast, and a chorus of sixty-three women's voices, under the direction of Mrs. Bessie Bowman-Estey, a soloist of the Calvary Baptist Church, Manhattan.

Afterward the Rev. Arthur T. Brooks of the Tarrytown Church, author of the pageant, urged that those present subscribe to the fund which would save the Judson Memorial to the denomination. Dr. Brooks estimated that more than $1,000 was subscribed last night. The Fund has received pledges for nearly $70,000, and denominational committees are working all over the United States for contributions.

STRIKE VOTE TAKEN BY WIRELESS MEN

Secretary of Operators' Union Along Atlantic Thinks Walk-Out Probable.

INCREASE IN WAGES SOUGHT

Government Will Revoke Licenses If Workers Quit, Non-Union Employes Believe.

The majority of the wireless telegraph operators of the Atlantic Coast are preparing to strike for higher salaries, according to George Schnatzinctz, Secretary of the Wireless Division of the Atlantic Coast District of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America. Mr. Schnatzinctz said yesterday that a strike vote was being taken by the 400 members of the union.

"And," he added, "it looks as though a strike were coming. The operators have been getting from $25 to $50 a month, and the sentiment among them is for a wage scale of $50 to $75. They will probably demand this increase because they deserve it and can get it. A strike of the members of the union would tie up 65 per cent. of the Atlantic Coast and Transatlantic shipping, and it would be difficult for employers to man vessels with strikebreakers, for the Government requires each operator to have a license from the Department of Commerce, and I doubt whether there are sufficient operators not in the union who could and would obtain licenses to work as strikebreakers."

This strike talk, despite Mr. Schnatzinctz's emphasis and office, was not taken seriously by several wireless operators who had not joined the union.

"I don't believe there will be any wireless strike," said one of the non-union operators last night. "In the first place, I estimate that only about 10 or 15 per cent. of the Atlantic Coast operators belong to the union. It is not trong enough to declare a general strike. Its parent organization is a wire operators' union, and the leaders of this body have been trying for some months without much success to organize the wireless operators into a branch union.

"Furthermore, I believe that one of the things the would-be strikers are counting on to act in their favor would react against them—the fact that Government licenses are required of each operator. Most of the ships that would be affected by a general wireless strike carry United States mails, and if the operators by striking interfered with the delivery of the mails, the Government, in my opinion would revoke or suspend their licenses. The Department of Commerce has the power to do this, for it is specified when each license is issued that it may be revoked or suspended for cause. Certainly a concerted action of operators resulting in delays in the delivery of mails would give a cause for suspension or revocation."

Mr. Schnatzinctz estimated the membership of his union at 400 operators, considerably more than 15 per cent. of the operators on the Atlantic Coast, and he scouted the idea that the Government would take action against strikers making what he considered just demands. He said that the strike had been imminent ever since last week, when 300 operators on the Pacific Coast declared a general strike. The Western men would win, he thought, and so would the Eastern operators.

In addition to the wage dispute, the operators had another grievance against their employers, Mr. Schnatzinctz said. According to him, the employers, especially those on the Pacific Coast, have been violating the law requiring two wireless operators on every vessel. He said that the union had called the attention of the Department of Commerce to such violations.

WOMEN HURT IN STRIKE RIOT

One Bayonetted In New Hampshire Row Where Striker Is Shot.

NASHUA, N. H., Oct. 18.—An augmented military guard tonight patrolled the plant of the Nashua Manufacturing Company, where one man was probably fatally shot, one woman bayonetted, and other persons were clubbed during a strike disturbance today. Two companies of militia from Manchester arrived late today to help the two local companies which have been on duty since the strike for more pay and shorter hours began two weeks ago.

Adam Raxavitch, who was shot by a militia officer, according to a statement by the police, was in a critical condition tonight. Alexandria Beke, who was wounded in her right arm by a bayonet, was said to be in no danger. Six other girls who were clubbed also received medical attention.

The disturbance grew out of an attempt of the manufacturing company to run cars on a siding which, the police assert, was blocked by women sitting on the track with babies in their arms.

Minor disorders occurred during the day and night when strike sympathizers tried to prevent food supplies from reaching the militiamen quartered at the mills.

OUR SPAS DRAW EUROPEANS

Doctor Says Waters of Some Springs Are Charged Artificially.

American spas have become so well conducted that Europeans are coming to this country for treatment, according to the observations of Dr. William George Russell of Philadelphia, who addressed the American Medical Editors' Association at the Hotel McAlpin yesterday.

His theme was "Hydropathy, the Cure in the United States." Certain springs in this country are running low on carbonic acid gas. Dr. Russell said the requisite amount of gas could easily be forced into them, and that waters so charged were even better than those in which the gas was present naturally. Fine results were obtained by bathing in these artificially charged waters. He showed many moving pictures of treatment.

Most of the great European spas are now deserted, and Dr. Russell said that on that account many natives of foreign countries who ordinarily went to those spas were keeping away from the war zones and were taking the waters in this country. Americans who formerly went to Carlsbad and Bad Nauheim now try the curative quality of waters on the western side of the Atlantic.

The association appointed a committee to investigate the case of Dr. George E. Malsbary, editor of The Southern California Practitioner, of Los Angeles, Cal., who has been accused in a Federal indictment of sending improper literature through the mails. The medical editor has laid his case before the association and asked for help. The committee, if it finds he is in the right, is authorized to give him assistance in defending himself. The committee consists of Ira S. Wile and Dr. Henry Harrower of this city and Dr. George Wood Fassett of Kansas City.

The sessions of the association will be continued today and will close with dinner this evening.

TOO MANY TRAMPS HERE.

Persons Wants State Farm to Which to Send Vagrants.

W. Frank Persons, director of the Charity Organization Society, said yesterday at a meeting under the direction of the School of Philanthropy at 105 East Twenty-second Street that New York City had been compelled, especially within the last two years, to bear more than its share of the "problem of the homeless man." This was due in a large measure, he said, to the fact that other municipalities had done little to solve the problem, and that sooner or later most of the vagrants reached New York and formed a real social menace.

Mr. Persons said that the problem in the city should be centralized in the Municipal Lodging House, and that citizens approached on the streets should refuse to give alms and send the applicant there. The State, said Mr. Persons, could do much toward solving the problem by establishing a State farm colony, property for which was acquired several years ago. This would, he said, provide a proper place for a Magistrate to send men arrested for vagrancy—a place where they could work for what they got and not be a charge upon the municipalities.

EDISONIA OFFICERS FREED.

Indictments Quashed In $25,000 Charges Three Years Old.

Judge Osborne, in the Court of Quarter Sessions in Newark yesterday, quashed indictments against William D. Zellman, President, and Thomas O'Grady, Secretary and Treasurer, of the defunct Edisonia Company, who were charged with obtaining $25,000 from the Union National Bank under false pretenses, on the ground that the indictments were defective.

The indictments charged that Zellman and O'Grady obtained the money from the bank in 1912 through misrepresentation as to the value of collateral. The security consisted of leases, and it was alleged in the indictments that the leases had been issued in duplicate and triplicate, and that the signatures to some had been forged.

Henry A. Heiser, attorney for the Edisonia creditors, expressed much disappointment over the quashing of the indictments, saying that the statute of limitations prevented the State from taking any further action in the matter.

ARRESTS OPEN WAR ON BOGUS LAWYERS

State Bureau Finds More Than 600 Impostors Here and Gets 16 Warrants.

IGNORANT ALIENS THE PREY

Notarial Certificates Displayed to Deceive Them—Fraudulent Papers Made Out.

Sixteen warrants issued yesterday by Chief Magistrate McAdoo calling for the arrest of persons alleged to be illegally practicing law are the forerunners of wholesale prosecution of hundreds who victimize the poor under the guise of attorneys.

The Bureau of Industries and Immigration of the State Department of Labor, which for a year has been gathering evidence, estimates that there are between 600 and 700 of these false practitioners in New York City.

The crusade was supervised by Mrs. Marian K. Clark, chief investigator, with the advice of Miles O'Brien, Jr., counsel for the bureau. The field work was done largely by Samuel M. Auerbach, who speaks many languages and was all kinds of a client. The New York County Lawyers' Association lent substantial aid.

The imposters draw in their clients mostly through the foreign language newspapers. They hang out their shingles with such inscriptions on them as "Legal Office" and "Lawyer." It is comparatively easy by the payment of $5 for anybody to get a commission as a notary, and the pseudo lawyers often display notaries' certificates. In most European countries notaries must be lawyers, and to the immigrant class here the certificate is accepted as a guarantee that the holder is a lawyer.

Some of these legal frauds advertise extensively and proclaim that they are the best lawyers in the city. Many of them have been making half as much as that eminent New York attorney who wrote the anonymous confessions of "The Goldfish," in which he told how sad he was in trying to keep up appearances on his earnings of $75,000 a year.

The so-called lawyers sometimes draw up chattel mortgages without investigation or with guilty knowledge, which results in persons losing their household effects who never even heard of the claims against them. Some neighbor gives their names to the charlatans, and the papers are made out without question. False bills of sale have been the cause of all kinds of trouble on the east side.

The bulk of the work of these pretenders is done in their own offices, but if hard pressed they appear in the police or the municipal courts. Usually they turn the case over to a qualified lawyer and divide the fee with him. There are a few practitioners who have dealings with this class.

Mr. O'Brien said last evening that the campaign would result in a general examination into the conduct of notaries public in certain localities. The bureau has photographs showing that the men under surveillance displayed signs on which they proclaimed themselves as attorneys.

20,000,000 BANANAS IN SEA.

$75,000 Cargo of Condemned Fruit Dumped Outside of Harbor.

A cargo of 20,000,000 bananas was dumped yesterday from the United Fruit Company's steamer Baronica just beyond the three-mile limit in response to an order from the Health Department, which had condemned the entire lot.

The Baronica reached this port last Friday and docked at Pier 15, East River. When her cargo of bananas brought from Porto Rico was examined by Inspector Quinn of the Bureau of Foods and Drugs it was found that the bananas were spoiled. Dr. Betts of the Health Department ordered the cargo destroyed. The bananas were valued at $75,000 when in wholesome condition.

ELLIS ISLAND ORDER DEAD.

Examination of Second Cabin Passengers Here Temporarily Revoked.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—At the close of a hearing at the Department of Labor today, Secretary Wilson announced his decision to revoke temporarily the regulation requiring alien second-class passengers on arriving at New York to undergo examination at Ellis Island as to their fitness under the immigration laws to become citizens of the United States. The hearing, which was held behind closed doors, was participated in by over fifty representatives of the various steamship lines. In support of the new regulation there were present Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor; Anthony Caminetti, Commissioner General of Immigration; Alfred Hampton, Assistant Commissioner General; Frederic C. Howe, Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island; Representative Eagan of New Jersey, and Postmaster Lankering of Hoboken.

It was urged that under the navigation laws second-class passengers were on identical terms with steerage passengers, as at the time the various navigation laws were passed there were practically only the two classes of passengers—first cabin and steerage; the steamship lines subsequently introduced the new classification, second cabin. The practice of conducting the examination of second-class passengers on the ships by the officials of the Immigration Service, it was urged, had become the subject of much criticism because of the difficulties connected with it and the conditions which affected the efficiency of the inquiry made into the qualifications of intending citizens.

In great part the opposition to the continuance of the new rule was based on the effect it would have on the business interests of the steamship section of Hoboken. In behalf of that city it was predicted that it would ruin the place to require second-class passengers to go to Ellis Island.

In announcing his purpose to revoke the regulation, Secretary Wilson said he would have the matter inquired into by a competent commission of immigration officials. One thing was certain, he said, and that was that a more effective method of examining second-class passengers was necessary.

THINKS LOCALITIES SHOULD TAX REALTY

Prof. E. R. A. Seligman Would Take Such Power Away from the State.

FAVORS AN INCOME TAX

Mills Committee to Hear General Public This Afternoon and Then Adjourn Till Nov. 29.

The only witness before the Mills Committee on Taxation in the Municipal Building yesterday was Edwin R. A. Seligman, Professor of Political Economy in Columbia University and Chairman of the Executive Committee of Mayor Mitchel's Committee on Taxation. He readily qualified as an expert on taxation and was allowed to give at length his views regarding a State income tax.

Professor Seligman said he was in favor of an income tax, and that if it was limited to 1 per cent. it would provide a revenue of more than $20,000,000 and would make the imposition of a direct State tax unnecessary.

Real estate taxation at present is too burdensome for property owners, in Mr. Seligman's opinion. He urged that localities be given the sole power to tax real estate, taking such power from the State. Personal property taxation, he said, was bound to fail in New York and in every place where similar conditions prevail, largely because the American system permits personal property to follow the taxpayer's legal residence.

Bronson Winthrop, counsel to the committee, asked Mr. Seligman to outline the principal defects of New York State's taxation system, taking up real estate first.

"The defects are of a double nature, State and local," said the witness. "The State defect lies in the State's attempt to tax real estate at all. The result is that in each county there is pressure on assessors to reduce assessments. England, Germany, and France have abandoned taxation of real estate by the States and have relegated it to local divisions. That is tending to come about in the United States because of inequalities in assessments in the different counties.

Undue Burden on Real Estate.

"The second defect is that real estate is made to bear an undue proportion of the tax burden. It pays more in a great many cases than is true anywhere else in the world. Its proportion is unfair. Real estate taxation ought to be given only to the localities to handle and should be for local, not State purposes. As far as the administration of real estate taxation goes, New York City, under Commissioner Purdy, has advanced until now it is at the head of the world in that respect. One of the chief defects of the present system is that we tax virtually nothing except real estate."

"What is your impression of the personal property tax?" asked Mr. Winthrop.

"It is a distinct failure," replied Mr. Seligman, emphatically. "Everywhere else in the world, where conditions exist such as prevail in New York, that tax is a failure. It is a failure because, first, under the present economic conditions a man's property, scattered over the country or world, is no longer a good index of his ability to pay. Second, whole classes nowadays possess ability to pay personal property taxes and have no property. Third, under our American system, personal property follows the taxpayer's residence. A man's legal residence is in a place other than where he earns his money or where he lives most of the year. It is practically impossible reach a man who can evade taxations as easily as that. Fourth, as a consequence of this, in order to raise money for governmental burdens the rate has to be very high.

Personalty Tax Is Unfair.

"Any system is obviously unfair that takes away 40 or 50 per cent. from one man and from his neighbor nothing at all because he changes his residence. Therefore, I say that our system of general personal property tax, which was good 100 years ago, when conditions were simple and economic conditions different, when people lived where they earned their money, is a failure now, especially in wealthy States like New York. Now the system breaks down completely and is not only inadequate, but unfair. This system results only in increased perjury. To make a man pay the taxes he feels are unjust is to make an otherwise honest man resolve to dishonest practices. In New York State a man may be absolutely honest and high minded and evade the personal property tax entirely by investing in other ways."

Professor Seligman expressed the belief that a small stamp tax on mortgages would work no hardship and would bring in considerable revenue. This tax would be borne by the lender of money. Assemblyman Chase told the witness that most of the testimony of the bankers and financiers was to the effect that the borrower invariably paid the mortgage tax. The witness said this was a debatable question.

In reply to a question from Chairman Mills the witness said he saw no objection to a tax on motor vehicles at a rate of a cent a pound, or a rate based on their horse power. Such a tax, however, should not be levied against the profit of a business, he said, when it can be reached in other ways.

"I think the function of this committee, he said, "is a fundamental revision of the system of taxation. Your functions here twofold; first, to increase revenue and, second, to better the method of taxation." He said that probably the best method of taxation would be the direct income tax, which would apply alike to individuals and corporations in the State.

"Individuals are not paying their share of the burden of government," said Mr. Seligman, "because they are not paying a personal property tax. Revenues from a habitation tax would be enormous, even if the rate were low. If you exempt all low rentals, wage earners with low incomes won't be affected. But I would hesitate to place this tax on the law books of the State. The equality would be less the further you get away from all cities, but the different economic conditions of the country towns would make more inequality throughout the State.

Favors Direct Income Tax.

"A direct income tax is the only scheme left if you reject the other schemes put forth. Individuals are not paying a fair share to the State, nor are the corporations. If an income tax were applied it would get over the personal property tax obstacles and would give you all the money you need and more. A personal property tax requires a high percentage of assessment, while an income tax requires only 1 per cent. tax.

"I have calculated that a 1 per cent. income tax would bring in a minimum of $21,000,000 or $22,000,000 a year," he said.

Professor Seligman said the income tax should be levied where the income was derived. Incomes derived from real estate outside the State should be exempted on the theory that they were already taxed in the locality of their existence. The exemption on incomes of $4,000 by the Federal income tax, he regarded as entirely too great. He said exemption should vary according to the size of the family and place of residence. Statisticians had calculated, he said, that in New York City it requires from $1,000 to $1,2000 a year to keep body and soul together. In a family of three or four children, therefore, there should be an exemption for each child. These figures include, he said, the moderately prosperous mechanic or clerk. A graduated income tax should not be imposed, he said, and there should be no super tax on great incomes.

Professor Seligman said that a man could hardly be taxed on an income derived from another State, but he should be taxed on so much of his interests as lay in New York.

How to Tax Rockefeller.

"Mr. Rockefeller lives in New York," he said, "and should be taxed on his income in New York. Mr. Carnegie should also be taxed on what income he derives here. On the other hand, if a man is proved to have just enough for his wife and family he should not be taxed at all. If you want to allow children certain comforts, which they are entitled to, an allowance ought to be made for wife and children. If a man has an income of $1,200, which would be the minimum income taxable under the plan I suggest, and has two or three children, he should be allowed $200 or $300 a year for each child. I would exempt the average farmer and laborer.

"The advantage of the income tax is that the rate would be low and the revenue great, and because of its low rate, people would not object to paying it. Men who earn between $3,000 and $4,000 a year would not be opposed to paying $10 a year, while men with salaries between $5,000 and $6,000 would not object to paying $20 a year tax on their incomes.

"If an income tax is to be levied at all, it must be levied by the State. Any local application of it would result in failure. Under the new Constitution there is no doubt of our power to impose a State income tax, and I believe we have the same power under the present Constitution. It would be the same as the liquor and other taxes."

Lawson Purdy, President of the local Tax Board, and A. E. Holcomb, tax expert employed by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, will be witnesses today. At noon the committee will throw the hearing open to the public and any one who chooses may appear and give his ideas about taxation. At the close of today's session the committee will adjourn until Nov. 29, and then will hold hearings at Syracuse and Rochester.

"TAX LAW ABSURD," MULLAN'S FAREWELL

Commissioner, Resigning, Says Big Personalty Roll Was Designed to Force Repeal.

The Tax Commissioners yesterday examined 316 persons who were on the tentative tax assessment rolls of 1916 for $24,846,300. Then thirty-seven were held for a final assessment of $670,850. Of those examined thirty-one were exempted because of non-residence, while four were found to have died after the books were opened.

The total number of examinations in the Manhattan office since the books were opened on Oct. 1 is 1,816. The tentative assessment amounted to $147,247,700. Of this number 284 have been held for a final assessment of $2,219,450.

The first complete reports from all boroughs on tentative assessments up to and including Oct. 9 were made public yesterday by President Purdy of the Tax Board. On a tentative assessment of $52,879,650 there were 1,171 examinations which resulted in a final assessment of $689,850. On this showing, if the percentage holds until the final assessments are made, the big total of nearly $3,705,000,000 would shrink to approximately $48,334,000.

Tax Commissioner George V. Mullan sent his resignation to the Mayor yesterday. His letter said:

"The board has adopted toward the personal tax a policy best calculated, in my judgment, to focus public attention upon the absurdity and unfairness of the existing statutes taxing personalty and to secure their repeal. In enforcing, as best it may, the really unenforcible personalty tax the board is not only expressing its recognition of the undeniable fact that it is a law-enforcing body and not a legislative and policy-making body, but the hardships and inequalities resulting from a serious attempt at enforcement cannot fail to bring about a reform which, in my opinion, would have been secured many years ago had continued endeavor to enforce these laws as they then stood been made."

In reply the Mayor said he accepted Mr. Mullan's resignation with extreme regret.

BOY RAISED $4,000 FOR 'MRS. FLAGLER'

$15,000,000 ESTATE A LURE

Mrs. Zora Emma Johnson, on Trial for Swindle, Promised to be His Fairy Godmother, He Testifies.

Charged with swindling a telephone operator out of nearly $4,000 by representing herself to be the widow of Henry M. Flagler, the Standard Oil capitalist, Mrs. Zora Emma Johnson was placed on trial for grand larceny in the first degree before Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions yesterday. The operator whom she is alleged to have lured into her power through promises of wealth and affluence for himself and all his family is Frank Mahoney, 20 years old, employed by the New York Telephone Company on a switchboard at a salary of $6 a week.

Mahoney told yesterday how the white-haired woman had convinced him that she was to inherit $15,000,000 under the will of Henry M. Flagler. He said she promised to make him her secretary at $20,000 a year after she had come into her share of her husband's estate. According to his story she solemnly promised to make gifts outright of $40,000 to himself and $10,000 to each member of his family. He believed it all.

He first met Mrs. Johnson on the night of April 30 in the New York Telephone Building at 17 Dey Street, he said. She wanted a long distance number in Pittsburgh, and Mahoney, who was at the switchboard at the time, tried hard to make the connection. His energy aroused the woman's sympathy, and even though he failed to get the Pittsburgh number she commended him for his efforts. She stopped to talk with him and dropped the hint that she was the widow of Henry M. Flagler.

Fascinated by Her Promises.

Mahoney was impressed. His amazement grew when she informed him that on May 20, which was the second anniversary of Mr. Flagler's death, she would come into possession of a $15,000,000 estate. Her manner, her language, her appearance, everything about her convinced him that she was all she claimed to be—a woman of wealth and distinction. And when, with a sigh of pain, she told him that she was in distress being in great distress because she found herself in some mysterious way left without the cash to pay her hotel bill, Mahoney at once reached into his pocket and gave her all the money he had, $35.

She would repay him handsomely, she said. Indeed, according to his story, Mrs. Flagler said there was nothing she would not do for him and his family after she had taken possession of her estate. She wanted him to meet her the next day in front of the National City Bank, which he did, the woman arriving in a limousine. Then they had a long conversation in which the woman told the boy that she had decided to become his "fairy godmother."

Her plan, as testified to by Mahoney yesterday, was to appoint him as her secretary at a salary of $20,000 a year. After she came into her inheritance he would receive a bonus of $50,000, and each member of his family would get $10,000. But before all that could happen, she wanted Mahoney to do everything he could to help her get her money. The securities which composed her estate under Flagler's will were scattered in safe deposit vaults in Pittsburgh, Chicago, and Philadelphia, she said. To bring these securities together, so that she could realize on them, would require money. She had not the money.

With his ambitions all aflame, the $6 a week telephone operator ran his legs off in every direction to borrow the required money. Besides his telephone job, he did work for the Civil Service Commission, and from his two salaries he had been able to save, up to the time he met the woman, nearly $200, every penny of which he turned over to her. He also turned over his Wall Street investments, which consisted of ten shares of Miami Copper which he bought originally at $24 a share, and 100 shares of Mother Lode Copper purchased at 17 cents a share.

Then He Began to Borrow.

But that was not enough. On May 6, a week after he first met "Mrs. Flagler," he gave her $850 which he said yesterday he had borrowed from George H. Eberle, chief clerk in the office of the Civil Service Commission. He told his friends and his relatives that he would soon be drawing $20,000 a year salary as secretary to the widow of a Standard Oil millionaire, and they gave him all he asked. And, according to his testimony, the woman took all he gave her and sent him around for more, saying that it would be impossible to get her securities out of the various safe deposit vaults unless she had all the money required for that purpose.

In the meanwhile, to prove she was acting in good faith, she took him into the National City Bank and made out two promissory notes each for $5,000, one payable to Mahoney and the other to his mother. The teller said the notes were not properly made out, and the woman thereupon asked him to hold the notes until she came back. But when she returned several weeks later, Mahoney was not there to see the assistant cashier pass the notes back to the woman because she had no account in the bank. Harry Johannsen, the assistant cashier, testified to this fact yesterday.

Mahoney also described a visit to the law office of Rose & Paskus, where "Mrs. Flagler" had papers drawn up giving the boy full power of attorney over her $15,000,000 estate. One of the members of the firm objected on the ground that Mahoney was too young and probably not capable of handling such a vast estate. But "Mrs. Flagler" insisted that Mahoney was efficient, and consequently he received full power of attorney, with a right to transact all her affairs.

Stimulated by the prospects she opened to him once she came into possession of her estate, the boy continued to borrow and pour into her lap all the money she could get from his friends. From a brother-in-law, William J. Warner of 506 West 171st Street, he borrowed more than $1,000. From Michael J. Shanahan, clerk in the office of the Corporation Counsel, he borrowed more than $600. They all believed he would soon be in position to repay them—that he had "struck it rich." By June 3, not much more than a month after he had first met "Mrs. Flagler," he testified he had given her in all $3,885, for which he received not one penny in return.

Then, like an inspiration, he said, it occurred to him that he was being swindled. On one occasion, in the Pennsylvania Railroad Station, she showed him a box which she said contained securities upon which she would realize at least $1,000,000. She left the box in the baggage room, and that was the nearest thing to her alleged inheritance Mahoney ever saw. After his suspicions were aroused he demanded his money back. She said she hadn't anything to give back, and he thereupon had her arrested.

Harry Johannsen, Assistant Cashier of the City National Bank, testified that when the woman came to the bank she spoke of herself as the "divorced wife of Henry M. Flagler." He said she did not impress him as being coherent or particularly rational.

The trial will be continued today.

DEFENDS SCHOOL DANCES.

John Collier Replies to Attack of Father J. B. Curry.

John Collier, Director of the New York Training School for Community Centre Workers, yesterday replied to Father James B. Curry's attack on dancing in the public schools, in an address at the opening session of the school's term.

"Community Centre dances are organized and supervised by groups of neighbors, including fathers and mothers, with an abundance of voluntary supervision, and the social dance is only an instance of community centre work," said Mr. Collier. "The dance is a 'feeder' of participants in the more substantial activities of the community centre. Father Curry's remarks about a masquerade ball being held in an east side public school are simply based upon misinformation.

"Of course social dancing is good in itself, but it is quite true that public dancing in school buildings is a dangerous enterprise. The school building which goes into competition with commercial dance halls before the people of the neighborhood have been organized and without an adequate paid staff to supervise the dance is inviting public disaster."

To remedy this condition greater cooperation between the neighbors and the officials in charge of the dances was urged. Dr. Luther H. Gulick also spoke at the opening session of the school and said that many social problems had been solved by employing experts and inviting co-operation.

MADDEN ACCUSER RECANTS.

Corroborates Girl's Story That Gangster Was "Framed Up."

"Willie" Mott, a gunner on the U. S. S. Brooklyn, was examined before Judge Nott in General Sessions yesterday in proceedings brought to obtain a new trial for Owney Madden, the west side gangster who was sent to Sing Sing for twenty years for killing "Patsy" Doyle last November. Mott is one of three witnesses for the State who since Madden's conviction have filed affidavits alleging that they were forced to "frame" Madden by Assistant District Attorney Walter R. Deuel.

Mott corroborated in substance the "frame up" story told by Frieda Horner and Margaret Everdeane, who previously testified on the motion for a new trial. When asked why he had given perjured testimony at the trial, he replied:

"I was sick of being harried in the District Attorney's office."

"Then you claim Mr. Deuel told you to lie at the trial?"

"No," the gunner answered. "He never told me to lie, but he had a very clever way of making me say just what he wanted."

Mott said members of the Madden gang had visited him in Philadelphia, but he denied that they had coerced him by threats to retract his testimony against their leader.

SAYS WOMEN ROBBED HER.

Gems Disappear After a Chance Meeting in Broadway Cafe.

A young woman, dressed in a dark blue evening gown with a picture hat, called at the Fourth Branch Detective Bureau early yesterday morning and said that she had been robbed of three diamond rings and a diamond bracelet, worth $2,500, in a café in Broadway, near 106th Street, by three women. She said that after having several drinks with the women, whom she did not know, she became unconscious, and when she recovered her senses both her jewelry and the women were gone.

She gave the name Mrs. A. J. Breitung, and said that she was from Dallas, Texas. She said she was stopping at the Hotel McAlpin. At the hotel, however, it was said that she was not stopping there, nor was she known there.

Truck Breaks Broadway Pavement.

A wheel of a motor truck carrying from Coenties Slip to the Equitable Building the steel door of a vault weighing twenty-five tons, and so bulky that it is estimated three days will be required to install it, broke through the block pavement in Broadway, at Morris Street, at 5:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the surface line was halted for an hour. Then railway men, with powerful jacks, freed the wheel, but such a crowd had gathered the police reserves were called from the Old Slip Station to keep order.

CHARGES RAILROADS MULCT IMMIGRANTS

State Labor Officials Press Complaint Against Six Carrier Companies.

U. S. INVESTIGATOR HERE

Alleged Agents Make Improper Allowance for "Third-Class" Passage Sold Abroad.

Complaint has been made against six railroad companies by the Bureau of Industries and Immigration, New York State Department of Labor, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, charging unjust discrimination against immigrants in the selling of railroad tickets.

The common carriers mentioned are the Baltimore & Ohio, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, the Erie, the Lehigh Valley, the New York, Ontario & Western, and the West Shore.

This action is the outcome of a controversy growing out of a report made last year against the transportation companies by James M. Lynch, Commissioner of Labor, before his office was taken over by the State Industrial Commission. The last affidavit filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission bears the date of Sept. 24, 1915. Mrs. Marian K. Clark, chief investigator of the bureau, said yesterday that the railroad companies had been continuing their unfair treatment of immigrants, and that every steamship bringing to this port second-class passengers afforded instances of illegal practice.

The complaints, drawn by the attorney of the bureau, Miles O'Brien, Jr., have been taken under advisement by the Federal commission, and a representative of that body is expected here tomorrow.

Most immigrants before leaving their native lands buy tickets which include both ocean passage and the railroad fare to their destinations in the United States. The bureau charges that the foreign agents of the steamship companies and the railroads sell "third-class" railroad transportation, although there is in this country no such thing as it is understood in Europe. The second-class passenger on his arrival here finds that he has an order providing for his accommodation on a way immigrant train. Investigators of the bureau report that agents of the rival steamship companies are waiting for these immigrants and solicit them to buy first-class tickets. The orders for the "third-class" transportation are taken up, and the immigrant, according to the complaint, is obliged to pay a sum which, added to the original cost of the transportation order, is in excess of the regular first-class fare. The case is cited of an immigrant traveling to this country second class, who exchanged an order and paid an additional amount which made his fare $20.60. He found himself, it is charged, on the train in the same seat with a friend, an American citizen, who had paid $19.10 for the same service. It was said at the bureau yesterday that some of the recent cases ere those of immigrants who were going to San Francisco and that the unfair excess was considerable. The bureau submits that this action on the part of the railroad companies is in violation of the Interstate Commerce act, which prohibits "preferential rates for transportation service performed under like circumstances and conditions."

The matter had been taken up by the bureau with the Trunk Line Association, which, it is alleged, gave assurances that its agents had been instructed to discontinue the practice of collecting commissions on the exchange of third-class or mixed tickets. After months of negotiation, however, the investigators of the bureau say that they have not even been permitted to see a copy of these instructions to agents.

The attorney of the bureau intends to proceed on the lines of the original report, which said that "the only course open, in order to destroy this practice of extortion, whereby thousands of dollars are unlawfully taken from immigrants and aliens, is to refer the case to the proper authorities for prosecution."

At the offices of the Trunk Line Association it was said that the tariff published covered all that was to be said on the immigrant matter, and that the tariff for immigrants had been on file for months with the commission.

COUPLE HELD FOR ARSON.

Six Fires Set in Tenement Holding Twenty-two Families.

Charged with having started six separate fires in their apartment on the fourth floor of the six-story tenement house at 325 East Houston Street, which houses twenty-two families, Aaron Weintraub, 30 years old, and his wife, Sarah, 28, were arrested yesterday and held in $5,000 bail each for examination on Thursday in Essex Market Court. The specific charge is arson in the first degree.

Weintraub, a metal worker, was arrested in his home after he had been questioned for several hours by Fire Marshal Brophy and detectives. The police say Weintraub's wife and two youngest children went to a neighboring park on Sunday, and the other three children went to a motion picture theatre. Soon afterward tenants in the building detected smoke and an alarm of fire was turned in. Battalion Chief Walsh said he found six separate fires in different rooms, and strong odors of kerosene. The fires were extinguished after doing trifling damage.

WENT TO SAVOY TO DIE.

Abraham Aufses, in Poor Health for Years, a Suicide.

Abraham Aufses, 65 years old, retired, of 118 East Seventy-third Street, committed suicide yesterday in a room in the Hotel Savoy, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street, by cutting his throat and wrists with a razor. He had lived with Samuel and Mortimer Aufses, his brother and nephew, who are pawnbrokers at 279 Stanton Street. He had been in bad health for months and deaf for nearly ten years. According to Mrs. Samuel Aufses, he was more nervous and despondent than usual yesterday morning, but no one anticipated his suicide.

Mr. Aufses left his home about 8 o'clock, saying he was going for a walk. He went to the Hotel Savoy and registered under the name of H. Cohen. He obtained a room, from which he wrote a letter to his nephew saying he intended to kill himself and giving the number of the room in which his body would be found. After mailing the letter he killed himself.

The nephew received the letter about noon and went to the hotel, where he notified the manager, who found the body.

SECRETARY REDFIELD ON THE SEAMEN'S BILL.

Secretary REDFIELD publishes a letter on the shipping situation, taking the same position as Secretary McADOO, or perhaps rather supplying the basis for Secretary McADOO's position. Both are strong on theory and weak on facts. Secretary REDFIELD, for example, ignores the reports to his own department upon the operation of the law. A special report from Deputy Consul General KIRJASSOFF of Yokohama contains this passage:

> Examination of the papers of the Pacific Mail steamship Korea shows a monthly salary expenditure of about $5,000, while the average monthly expenditure for salaries on a Toyo Kisen Kaisha steamer does not exceed $3,000. If anything, this is too high an estimate. * * * Taking into account the subsidy which the Toyo Kisen Kaisha receives, it costs this company about $227,860 less per year to run one ship of its fleet of four than it did the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to run one of its five ships.

What business man can read the facts and contrast them with the theories of the lawmakers and administrators without losing patience? The company's President says he had to obey the law as written. The Secretary argues that the company is to blame for not obeying the law as he thought he would construe it, he himself then not being sure about his own construction. It is hard to teach business to our lawmakers. They can blunder, and blunder again in repairing their blunders, and excuse themselves by the beneficence of their intentions. When that excuse fails they can blunder on a new subject, without reference to their previous blunders. Business men learn more quickly because of the pains and penalties which speedily follow upon errors of judgment. In this case Secretary REDFIELD thinks that it was the duty of the Pacific Mail to try the law, and come to Congress with its tale of losses, seeking an amendment of the law. The company's position is that it was better to avoid loss, take a profit on the sale of its steamers, and leave the amendment of the law to those who blundered in passing it.

It is plain that the country suffers between the disputants. In a letter published yesterday, Mr. SCHWERIN remarks that the last cargo is now being loaded upon a vessel flying the American flag on the Pacific, the Minnesota. When that cargo is delivered there will not be one American vessel there. One Japanese line is working four steamers, and will work six more as soon as they can be obtained. That is only a beginning. Yesterday, also, Mr. ROBERT DOLLAR said that his company's headquarters will be at Vancouver until United States laws make it possible for him to return; and there was announced the voluntary receivership of what is described as one of the "oldest and best known" of the steamship lines on the great lakes. The reason assigned by the management is disturbance of credit through the withholding of financial accommodation by bankers who foresee the effect of the unfair competition between Canadian and American steamships on the lakes through the burdens placed upon the American lines by the La Follette law.

Senator LA FOLLETTE is no more convinced by such occurrences than Secretaries McADOO and REDFIELD by the reports from their subordinates. Senator LA FOLLETTE was quoted yesterday as saying that what the law needed is "strengthening," and the ending of the campaign against it by those who wish to discredit it. There is, it seems, a conspiracy in restraint of legislation. Also there is thought to be a conspiracy in restraint of trade, not by traders, but by lawmakers. There has been an appeal from the lawmakers to the people. Do they want the sort of lawmaking they have had? If so, they are entitled to it. If not, they have their remedy in checking the abuses perpetrated in their name.

THE BRYAN IDEA OF WAR.

Mr. BRYAN has been too busy with other things to observe the way in which nations make war. His idea that they courteously debate the question whether they shall fight each other or not, and that if one declines the game is declared off, is erroneous. He proposes that if, after the year of deliberation required under the Bryan peace plan, there is still talk of war, the question whether there shall be war or not shall be voted upon by the nation, women included. If any European Power shall challenge us, we shall firmly decline to fight, which should end the matter; but if the Power should be rude and refuse to abide by the rules of the game, then our workingmen must fight them; but for this our workingmen must not be prepared, for preparedness is what the jingoes want.

Let us endeavor to get into Mr. BRYAN'S mind and see a war as he sees it. From the outline of his ideas given at Grace Methodist Church on Sunday, and here summarized, it is not difficult. We are going peacefully about our concerns, having sternly refused to listen to the jingoes and prepare ourselves; we have no army or navy able to cope with any European Power. Suddenly one of them issues to us a challenge, something like what preceded a tournament or a duel in the Middle Ages. We invoke the Bryan peace plan and deliberate on the matter for a year, the enemy doing likewise. At the end of the year the enemy stubbornly renews his challenge, probably sending a herald over to Washington with a tabard, or something like that, though as to this Mr. BRYAN is not clear. We take a vote on the question whether to accept the challenge or not, and decide by a large majority to decline it. We then send a herald back to Berlin, or Lisbon, or Stockholm, or wherever the challenge comes from, and courteously express our regret that we cannot accept it.

This should end the matter. But in the improbable case that the enemy should be coarse and rude and destitute of finer feelings and should be actually landing an army on our shores while our herald is making his proclamation, then we should call on our workingmen to repel him. Of course they would not be armed, because preparedness is against the Bryan gospel; but they could repel him with their hammers and scythes and bolt-heads and rivets and such things. It would be easy, because, Mr. BRYAN says, we have a population of 100,000,000, and our frontiers rest on two oceans.

It makes lesser men envious to think what joy Mr. BRYAN must get out of his mind. It must be a well-spring of delight, constantly surprising even its possessor by its ever new and always unexpected products. Lock Mr. BRYAN in a cell, incommunicado, deprive him of his books and take away his writing materials, and he would still be a happy man, for he could delve into his mind, morning, noon, and night, and always bring up something which would astonish him. Mr. BRYAN'S mind is the Happy Valley, the Fortunate Isles. It is a wonderful possession, unique among the treasures of the world.

THE CASE OF CULLEN VS. ROOT.

EUCLID has been highly spoken of for the precision and finish of his demonstrations, but in all the thirteen books of his work he never surpassed the completeness of Senator ROOT'S reply to Judge CULLEN'S argument against the new Constitution, based on the ground that it left the way open to the establishment of military despotism.

Judge CULLEN set forth in his complaint the rejection by the Convention of a proposed amendment providing that when the regularly constituted State courts were open to administer justice no military tribunal should have jurisdiction over civilians unless engaged in military or naval service; and as evidence of the public peril he cited the case of NANCE and others sent to the penitentiary in West Virginia on the finding of a military commission.

Senator ROOT admits the rejection of the amendment. But he sets up that "the present Constitution contains and "the revision continues full, adequate, "and effective provision against trial "by military tribunal." The Federal Constitution contains a provision almost in the same words, and the Supreme Court has declared its sufficiency. In the 138 years of our experience of this constitutional defense of civil liberty no military despotism has been set up in this State.

Then, as to West Virginia. It is true that NANCE and others were tried and sentenced by a military tribunal. But the West Virginia Constitution contains the very provision that our Convention rejected, declaring that "no citizen, unless engaged in the "military service of the State, shall be "tried or punished by any military "court for any offense that is cog-"nizable by the civil courts of the "State." This bulwark of civil liberty, the omission of which from the proposed Constitution Judge CULLEN so deplores, is therefore no bulwark at all. The West Virginia military tribunal did try, did sentence, and did punish civilians. The Supreme Court of the State sustained the decision on the ground that the Constitution and all its provisions, in the district where the offenses were committed, had been made inoperative by insurrection. Mr. ROOT believes that the court was wrong, that the men tried by the military commission were deprived of their rights under the Constitution. But appeal and review were headed off by pardons.

To clinch his demonstration, Mr. ROOT adds that the adoption of the amendment proposed at Albany would have opened the way to the very abuse against which Judge CULLEN sounds his warning. If we say in the Constitution that no civilians shall be tried by military tribunal while the civil courts are open we necessarily imply that civilians may be tried by such tribunals when the civil courts are not open, that is, when martial law has been declared in a given district. So the provision the Convention rejected was dangerous, instead of a defense against military despotism it was an invitation.

Mr. ROOT has ended the discussion of the military despotism objection to the present Constitution.

NEW JERSEY TODAY.

New Jersey votes today on a constitutional amendment granting woman suffrage. Woman suffrage was imposed on Illinois, except as to officers under the State Constitution, by the Legislature, the suffragists taking good care not to consult the voters. For the most part it exists only in meagrely populated and radical States, some of them with a strong tinge of socialism. Nowhere has it been adopted in response to an unmistakable and insistent strong popular demand. It has won on account of the indifference of a great part of the electorate. In Oregon, for example, about a half, in California about a third, of the total vote was cast, and in each State suffrage was carried by a little over 3,000 votes. Wherever the voters have been stirred to a realization of the gravity of the proposed change they have rejected it emphatically; in Ohio, in 1912, by a majority of 87,000, in 1914 of 182,000; in Michigan, in 1912, before the electorate woke up, by 761, in 1913 by 96,000. In 1912 radical Wisconsin, so long the nursery of political experiments, voted down woman suffrage by a majority of 91,000.

A great responsibility rests on the voters of New Jersey. A Commonwealth of conservative traditions, of sober and steady political principles, she is utterly alien from the random plunges into the unknown, the blind acceptance of novelties, the itching to tamper with time-tested methods of representative self-government, to loose, half-baked theories that prevail in most of the suffrage States. Her verdict on woman suffrage will be likely seriously to influence opinion in Pennsylvania, New York, and Massachusetts, which are to make decision in November.

The friends of Votes for Women are sure to come to the polls. Their only hope of success lies in the inertia, the want of interest, of the majority. It is a reproach to the intelligence and patriotism of the qualified voters of New Jersey if they regard woman suffrage as a toy, a cockade which some women, in the mysterious unaccountability attributed to the sex, wish to wear, the perfume and suppliance of a moment, a passing feminine whim. It means, if it is not to be utterly futile and a mere excrescence and expense, a mighty change and deterioration in the conduct of public affairs, and, what is more and most of all, in the life of women and the family. On a matter so fundamental, so doubtful or dangerous in its potencies, no man can afford to be indifferent.

New Jersey should beat woman suffrage today, not perfunctorily and politely, but well and hard and on an ample vote.

PUBLIC OPINION AND DEFENSE.

It is reported that Congress will not be asked, as part of the defense program, to abolish any of the superfluous army posts. The explanation is that they may all be needed for the training of the new citizen soldiery of the proposed Continental Army, which is, to form, in time, the larger part of the reserve. That explanation is as good as any to account for an indisposition to stir up more political opposition than the other features of the plan may arouse. Perhaps some of the less remote posts may turn out to be useful as training camp sites, and we ought to be thankful that the attractive proposal to build a large number of military academies in various States has been ignored by the President and Mr. GARRISON in preparing for the consideration of Congress an elaborate series of plans for the strengthening of our land defenses. Nevertheless, with the greatly increased cost of army maintenance in the future, public opinion will slowly but surely be exerted against the retention of garrisoned posts which serve no good purpose and are extremely expensive.

In our national dependence in all such matters on public opinion the writer of a communication in Monday's TIMES may find the answer to his question why all our measures for defense are so freely discussed in public. Only through vigorous public discussion have we reached the point of prospective preparedness. The vigorous discussions of various societies and leagues were needed to impress the public mind with the need of means of defense. Iteration daily in all but a few of the newspapers has served to keep the subject alive. Plain and accurate statements of our military and naval deficiencies were necessary, and our requirements in the way of guns and ammunition and ships and our need of more men were inevitably dwelt upon until the knowledge became common property. Only public opinion has compelled the building of new submarines and the retirement of the defective ones, the development of military and naval aerial service. The politicians are the last to take note of such important matters. They know of enough ways to spend the public moneys without embarking on new enterprises. Our correspondent's irritation is understandable and not discreditable. But we cannot get anything done that is worth doing in this land of ours without a prodigious lot of public discussion.

BULGARIA HURTS HER THUMB.

The contest in the Balkans involves for the present not territory, but a thoroughfare, or, as the English say, a corridor from Berlin to Constantinople. The distance is 1,700 miles, about as far as from New York to Galveston, Texas. It is the path the Crusaders went. There is now a railroad all the way. For nearly 300 miles it runs in a southeasterly direction through Serbia. It goes in at Belgrade, passes through Nish, the Serbian capital and commercial centre, and emerges on the Bulgarian frontier, 35 miles from Sofia. Serbia is the open drawbridge in this international trans-European, Berlin-to-Constantinople railroad route.

It is the business of the Austro-German forces, assisted by their Bulgarian allies, first to gain possession of the railroad and then to keep it clear, which will require a large military force. It is the business of the Anglo-French forces to prevent this. Their only way into Serbia is by a railroad running north from Saloniki, in Greece, to Nish. So the Austro-German forces are down-pressing from the north and the Allies are uppressing from the south. The Bulgarians move obliquely. For one thing, they were expected to harass the Anglo-French allies moving north. The easiest way to do that was to attack the railroad rising from Saloniki to Nish. The action reported yesterday between the Anglo-French forces and the Bulgarians, in which the former captured Strumitza, was the first result.

A map of the Balkans is like a jigsaw puzzle. Every State sticks into another, one thrusts as a wedge between two, here and there a boundary line suggests fingers reaching out. That might seem symbolic. Bulgaria, on the extreme southwest, pokes a thumb into Serbia. In the end of the thumb, at Strumitza, troops had been gathered for an assault upon the Serbian railway from Saloniki to Nish over which the Anglo-French allies were moving. The railway has to run past the end of the thumb, so close as almost to touch it. The Bulgarians evidently pounced upon the railroad, were whipped back, and lost the end of their thumb. Strumitza and other points from which the railroad could be menaced have been occupied by the Anglo-French forces.

That is all that has happened there. The Anglo-French army is not going to invade Bulgaria; if it were it would never dream of doing it at this point, nor from this direction, for to march northward through Bulgaria across the Rhodope Mountains would be almost impossible. It is on its way to Nish, hoping to reach that point before the Austro-German forces can, and keep the drawbridge open in the Berlin-to-Constantinople railroad. That would save the day. And it will fight Bulgarians meantime only for getting in its way.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Happier Times in the South.

For months past we up here in the North have been hearing lugubrious tales of hardships imposed on the South with respect to the disposal of her staple products, especially cotton. First there were the appeals to "buy a bale," made to people who had no use for "bales" and were altogether unfamiliar with the methods of purchasing and handling them. That absurd campaign died a-borning, almost, and then came vehement demands from the Southern politicians—loudest from those with Presidential aspirations—that the Government do something to save the South from the instant ruin threatening it on account of her cotton having been shut off from the German market by the Allies in general and Great Britain in particular.

Now, upon these interesting phenomena an equally interesting commentary is made—quite unintentionally—in the course of a private letter just received here from an intelligent and well-informed resident of the State of Mississippi. The passage runs thus:

> Mississippi is a really beautiful State, and now that cotton and cottonseed are bringing such fine prices and the farms and plantations have supplied all living expenses, the people feel as if the seven lean years were over and the South was entering on happier times.

Already! And with the one market that we might have thought, from what we heard, to be the only one, still closed as tightly as ever! Oh, well, we are all of us more or less like that—passionately fond of our grievances and reluctant to "think on our marcies" as long as there is a single folded-over rose leaf in the bed on which we lie.

Deep down in its large, warm heart the South very well knows that of vastly more importance to it than the selling of cotton this year to the Germans is it that the war should be ended.

And who is it that wants the price of cotton to soar to two or three times its present level? Those who raise and speculate in it, and that, after all, is not quite everybody in the world or even in the United States.

His Cruelty May Have Been Kind.

Belief or disbelief in The London Daily Mail's Amsterdam dispatch describing the death of EDITH CAVELL, the Englishwoman convicted in Brussels by a military court of having assisted Belgians of military age to escape from the country, will depend a good deal on whether the reader of the story is eager to accept any, or to reject all, charges of barbarity that are made against the Germans. Assuming, however, the truth of the tale as told, does it necessarily follow that the officer in command of the squad detailed to execute the sentence was a barbarian?

It must be remembered that the task of putting the woman to death was one which, having been assigned to him by authority which he was obliged to recognize as competent, he was obliged, as any officer of his rank in any army would have been, to perform. Refusal would have been an intolerable criticism of his superiors and in effect mutiny, the ultimate military crime. As Miss CAVELL approached the place of execution she fell to the ground in a faint. To have revived her would not have been merciful, and probably would have resulted in a scene of the most dreadful sort, with frightful additions to the woman's sufferings. To have fastened her in an upright position before ordering the squad to fire on her, or to have directed the volley at her unconscious form as it lay on the ground, would also have been more deeply shocking than was what, according to the dispatch, the officer did—draw his own heavy service revolver and, after taking careful aim, send a bullet through the unconscious woman's brain.

This may have been, not an act of cold-blooded cruelty, but one truly compassionate—even one of generous self-sacrifice. It takes the latter aspect if the officer be credited with a desire not only to spare the woman as much suffering as he could, but also to save the men under him from obeying orders demanding of them more and worse than even military law is wont to impose.

As a matter of fact, the horror of the episode lies chiefly in the sentencing of the woman to death for what she had done, and not in the manner in which the sentence was executed. But with the sentencing the officer had nothing to do, and he had no responsibility for it. Let indignation, therefore, be directed where, if anywhere, it belongs—higher up.

Auto Horns Used and Misused.

Some readers of THE TIMES who are commenting on recent rather impassioned remarks about automobile horns that appeared in this column seem not to have observed the inclusion in those remarks of an admission that the automobile horn has its legitimate uses.

Of course it has, several of them, and important ones. Most of the commendable ends served by the horns, however, are attained in the giving by the motor folk of signals to each other, and, of course, as those of us who do not now at least occasionally ride in automobiles, hope to do so in the brighter future, we haven't the slightest objection—we consider distinctly commendable—the employment of horns to make such riding safer and more comfortable.

But many of us who have already attained to automobile ownership, or have established relations with those who are arrived there, realize that the horns lend themselves with a facility that seems fatal to uses not legitimate—to uses that express a wholly wrong and highly reprehensible theory of the automobilist's highway rights and privileges as compared with those of everybody on foot. And it is in urban streets, where the automobile horn is least needed and least defensible, that it is most often blown. There, too, it almost always sounds an order to "Get out of my way!"—an order the intolerable impudence of which lies in the fact that when given to pedestrians it is quite without authority in law or excuse in morals. It is then a plain, clear usurpation of power and more a threat than a warning.

If the automobilists would stop misusing their horns—as some never do, they all could—there would be never a thought of taking the things away. If they won't and don't, then they invite, and in time will compel, a deprivation from which innocent and guilty alike will suffer a somewhat serious—well, inconvenience, and an appreciable, though not great, increase of touring dangers.

Alien Newspapers Defended.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Says Miss Geraldine Millet, writing in THE TIMES on the subject of non-English newspapers in New York: "Who knows what seditious opinions, what disloyal criticisms, &c., may be generated in those pages of alien papers?"

For Miss Millet's peace of mind, let me assure her that there is little likelihood that Yiddish newspapers, for example, will exert themselves to foster in their readers any love and affection for Russia, the land of their fathers. And isn't it possible that these newspapers might be an excellent vehicle for interpreting America and its institutions? Or shall we deprive people of the privilege of reading unless they read in English? People who are compelled to spend the greater part of the day in the business of bread-getting might find that it took an extremely long time to master enough English to enable them to read an English newspaper with pleasure. When Miss Millet writes, "The Government, we hope and suppose, has an eye on what is printed," she says something which is of wider application, and which has a more ominous sound, an Old World, monarchical ring. But we will be kind and assume that she meant nothing thereby. The war has been responsible for many phobias.

THE AVIATOR.

Oh, I clamber up high to the vault of the sky,
Far above all the muck of the trenches,
Far above the quick ire of the maxim-gun fire,
Far above all the reek and the stenches.
There's a puff from below in the lines of the foe,
Where a gunner is seeking to harm me,
But I drop and I rise from his bombs in the skies
And I still am the Eye of the Army!

For it's my job to learn every sally and turn
Of the enemy right when they make it.
I'm a sentry whose care is a post high in air
And it isn't for me to forsake it.
So I duck and I dip and I dodge and I skip
From the aeroplane shells that would mar me,
While the gunner with zest does his Sunday school best
To put out the Eye of the Army.

Now there isn't much chance for the ancient romance
In these days of mechanical slaughter,
When we shed human blood in a horrible flood
On the face of the land and the water,
But I am not bound by the soldiers' dull round,
For in war's mighty drama they star me,
And it's still a great game full of glory and fame—
To the venturesome Eye of the Army!

THE EYE OF THE CAMERA.

It Sees Absent and Present Things Invisible to Human Eyes.

New York, Oct. 12, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If my communication of Sept. 2 presented new and startling facts regarding unusual photographic effects, permit me to add to the discussion such additional facts as have not been made public in this country before.

Mr. Hereward Carrington's reply to my previous letter in no way refutes the evidence I presented. In fact, Mr. Carrington, knowing, as he does, the value of scientific research, simply challenges me to apply the evidence to the phenomena reported in the "Proceedings."

The Ancient and Mystical Order of Rosae Crucis, as Mr. Carrington knows, is not a body of cold, prejudiced materialists. While sticking strictly to scientific facts, the workers in this old organization recognize some facts which the scientists, to which Mr. Hodgson referred, do not recognize. Among these is the fundamental fact that there is a force, power, condition, color or something else, which actually exists and may be photographed, although it is not visible to the average human eye.

Many years ago Mr. Carrington and I discussed the reports of the London Dialetical Society appointed by the London Research Society to determine the nature of this psychic or astral force. May I remind him now of the decision of the eminent men who composed the committee? It was to the point. It left no loop-hole. They found that this strange, weird force—strong, intelligent, and unseen—was not separate from or dissociated with the human body. This at once gives it a material element or association. This is the point which the Order Rosae Crucis has sought to establish and has scientifically proved.

For additional evidence let me cite a few established facts, likewise easily demonstrated in any photographic studio. There are vibrations and colors invisible to the human eye which can be registered on a common photographic plate. In the ordinary experiences of a portrait photographer, he is constantly confronted with the necessity of retouching the faces on the negative. The average rough proof of a portrait is startling to the sitter, who finds the complexion spotted with blots, lines, and seeming disfigurements. They are invisible to the eye, but registered on the plate because they actually existed in the skin. Likewise, some sensitive plates (peculiarly sensitive, though bought in the open market) have revealed in the background a haze or faint aura surrounding the sitter's head. Furthermore, if an ordinary plate be exposed against a neutral background of even tone, in front of which have recently been delivered the vibrations from an electrical discharge, the plate will reveal the even gray tones disturbed by various intensities of light and shadow in the form of scrolls, zig-zag lines, and even conventional designs such as squares, spheres, and on one occasion, a Maltese cross. In many of these plates seeming faces were easily distinguishable. Were they really faces and likenesses? There is one question for the Society for Psychical Research to answer.

Again, it has been found that common electrical discharges, such as the arcing of a street lamp, the arcing of a switch when the motor of an apartment house elevator or of a subway train is started, or the blowing out of a fuse, when occurring within 100 yards of a partly developed plate, has had an effect upon it. Mr. Carrington cannot be sure that there were no electrical vibrations anywhere near the partly developed plates. Nothing but careful "listening" at a delicately adjusted wireless receiving outfit would prove that.

So, the society found that articles which had recently been before the camera's lens, but now absent, were photographed. The Rosae Crucis Order made experiments of this kind in 1856 and 1857. Likewise have faces been photographed which were not present at the moment of exposure of the plate. To prove this, let any bright object be placed against a dark background and the lens of the camera focused sharply upon it. Then insert in the camera a plate holder containing a plate. Before withdrawing the slide from the camera, permit the lens to throw the object into the dark chamber of the camera. Then remove the object quickly and at the same time withdraw the slide from the plate holder and make a very short exposure. If conditions (still under investigation) are right, there will be implanted upon the plate a faint impression of the removed object, and at other times a slightly different form. How? Through the retention in the chamber of certain invisible vibrations from the object through the lens, which, while unseen to the eye, existed in a material way, and were of a nature to be registered upon the plate.

But all the tests prove that this unseen something which emanates from material things is not confined to departed spirits or so-called souls freed from material association. A photographic plate is not a register of psychic, immaterial things. What it registers must have a material quality, even though that quality be unseen to the human eye. For this reason the workers in our order, having learned the foregoing facts, seek for further material, natural explanations of this and other phenomena before attributing the causes to the supernatural, unnatural, or what is commonly understood by psychic. Yes, let science and theory clash and the truth will triumph. But first let the theorists study the laws of photography, chemistry, even alchemy, (as have the members of our order,) then electrical and human vibrations. Perhaps—just perhaps—they will find the true explanation.

H. SPENCER LEWIS, F. R. C.

Undeleted.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Thanking you for your publishing my letter of the 15th inst. in connection with the Armenian crisis, I beg to attract your attention that at least three important paragraphs were omitted. As I consider these paragraphs of the utmost importance in favor of my argument, I beg you to publish in extenso this letter of mine with its corrections, in justice to the claim of fairness you champion.

The second paragraph of my letter read:

> Before entering any further into the subject I want to express my surprise in seeing protests emanating from every quarter, though every nation has in its history similar black pages, and I want to remind in this connection that should the different nations follow the precept of the Christ, "Let he who has no sin throw the first stone," none of them would be in a position to raise any protest.

In connection to the expulsion "en masse" and the driving away of the Armenians, I said in explanation, not as excuse:

> In other words the Ottoman Government sees itself obliged to follow now the line of conduct the United States adopted in regard to the Indian reservations and its action is thus at least explained.

Finally my article ended:

> If they (the Armenians) are now suffering of the severity of the punishment, it is very deplorable, but they must not forget their previous actions: They were willing to take unnecessary chances, they failed, they must now take the consequences of their rebellious and treacherous actions.

These sentences were purposely meant to emphasize that the Turkish nation, as a race or as a Government, is neither better or worse than any other and I therefor have no doubt you will be kind enough to publish them.

To Abolish Fiction!

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One of the most ridiculous suggestions ever made by a member of a body empowered to act for the public is that of Robert McIntyre, head of the Bureau of Statistics and Investigation. This individual solemnly recommends to the Tax Budget Committee that the works of fiction in the Public Library be closed to the public in order to save money for the city. Except for his official position, McIntyre's suggestion, of course, could not be treated seriously. It is altogether surprising he does not go further, and recommend the abolition of schools and educational institutions in general.

THE LOUVAIN THAT HAUNTS GERMANY.

Singularities of Mr. McClellan's Apology for Putting the University Library to the Torch—Where the Missing Keys Were.

BY L. DUPRIEZ.

Professor of Law at the University of Louvain, now Visiting Lecturer at Harvard University.

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 11, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I should have unquestionably passed over in silence the numerous perversions of truth contained in Mr. McClellan's article published in your paper of Oct. 10, because it is not necessary to be acquainted with Belgium in order to see that the author merely reiterates the allegations of the German administration in Belgium without verifying them in person. But Mr. McClellan does not hesitate to reproduce a libelous accusation against men whom I esteem highly, and who, I know, have done their full duty. So I hope you will permit me to answer that bold and unjust accusation with a few words of defense.

Mr. McClellan affirms without any reserve that "at the University [of Louvain] the librarian and his assistants all deserted their posts, locking the library behind them and carrying off the keys. It was not possible to save either building or books, for when the doors were at last battered down the interior had been gutted." I wonder to see how a university man prefers such a libelous accusation without any other evidence than the allegations of Germans, directly interested to excuse their burning of the library. And Mr. McClellan, who does not hesitate to reproach the librarian and his assistants for not having saved some books, forgets to blame those who had set the fire at various places in the library. What a beautiful example of his impartiality!

The librarian of the University happened to be absent on regular leave ever since the appearance of the Germans in Louvain, hence it was quite impossible for him to have returned before the fatal night of Aug. 25. The assistants were not domiciled in library buildings, but some hundreds of meters away. What should they have done? Should they have come when the trouble began, or when they learned that the library was on fire? But people were forbidden, under severe punishment, to appear in the streets after 8 o'clock, and any one daring to run toward the library on that night would certainly have been shot. When the Rector (President) of the University, who lived closer to the library than the assistants, heard of the fire at 1 o'clock in the night he tried to go out and to ask the assistance of the German military authorities. He had made but a few steps into the street when he was arrested by two soldiers and brutally pushed back into his house with the threat of being shot if he ever dared to come out again. He made a second attempt at ¼ o'clock in the morning, and he underwent the same treatment and heard the same threats. The Rector told me so himself a few days later at Brussels.

Permit me, who have lived fifty years in Belgium, twenty-three of these at Louvain, who have been an eyewitness of the fire, who by a miracle have escaped death myself, to correct at least a few of the grossest errors which the German administration of Belgium tries to thrust on the American people through the agency of Mr. McClellan.

In his pro-German zeal, Mr. McClellan wants to make the readers believe that Belgium is a country of plenty, thanks to an unusually good crop and to the enlightened cares of a German administration. He especially mentions a large barley crop and he says there is apparently no lack of sheep. Now, in the part of Belgium which Mr. McClellan passed in a train barley is not raised, and barley is quite a trifling part of the Belgian harvest; and previous to the German occupation there could not have been found a single flock of sheep along the railways which the author passed through.

Mr. McClellan informs us that the Germans have struck off the French station names and have replaced them by the corresponding Flemish names. Thus, he says, Louvain became Löwen, Liége became Lüttich, Anvers became Antwerpen. But Louvain is in Flemish Leuven, Liége is Luik, while Antwerpen is both Flemish and German. Löwen and Lüttich are German names which the Belgian people do not understand at all. Besides, Liége is a French speaking city, where the French language is known about as much as it is in Paris.

According to Mr. McClellan, eighteen old and new newspapers are published in Brussels. Before the war they published fourteen political dailies. They all refused to print the papers in spite of the most urgent exhortations from the German authorities. Now the Indépendance Belge is published in London, and Le Vintième Siècle in Havre, (France.)

What shows how highly Mr. McClellan, without any verification, took in everything some German Sergeant told him—for I cannot believe the German administration would have been so bold and stupid in foisting on him such self-evident untruths—is the statement that the University of Louvain has been reopened. That is absolutely false. The University of Louvain has not been reopened. Not a single course is given. Not a single student has been registered.

The German administration seems to make believe that the fire that consumed the cathedral was accidentally carried there from neighboring houses and that the Germans had even dynamited some nearby houses to save the Town Hall and the cathedral. But I saw with my own eyes the cathedral on fire when not a single neighboring house was burning. Besides, the houses that burned around the cathedral were too far removed to transfer the fire to it. It has been proved that the fire was set at various places in the cathedral, especially on the tower roof. Besides, in October, 1914, the Germans admitted having themselves set fire to the cathedral, on the ground that machine guns had been placed in the towers.

Allow me to state once more that the Germans cannot give an explanation of the Louvain events without mixing up with it obviously false statements. Three days after those events the German military staff at Brussels still affirmed to the Dutch Professor Grondys that the attack of the civilians upon the German troops had been directed by the Burgomaster's son or brother. But the Burgomaster never had a brother and his only son died fifteen years ago. And now, a year after the event, they tell a new self-evident untruth. "Complete darkness followed immediately, caused by the cutting off of electric wires." I affirm that on that night the electric current was never turned off, numerous electric lights were burning in my house, and I never observed a cutting off of the current. My colleague, de la Vallee Toussin, who was with me at Harvard University and during the last semester, lived near the station, and none of his electric lights went out even for a few seconds. Besides, in 1914 the streets were exclusively lighted by gas; there were only four electric towers in front of the Town Hall, but these were reinforced by numerous powerful gas jets.

These few facts suffice to show what confidence the impartial reader may have in the allegations of the German authorities in Belgium and in Mr. McClellan's appreciation of the German rule in Belgium.

ENGLAND'S BATTLE MAIMED.

They Might Be Provided For on the Accident Insurance Basis.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have just finished reading an article entitled "On the British Battle Line." In the midst of his harrowing description of the wounded, the author lightly refers to the future of crippled soldiers in a way that makes one stop and think hard. He says:

> A few weeks later, his empty sleeve pinned across his breast, he walked down the gangway of the hospital ship which had brought him across the Channel onto English soil and set about finding work which a one-armed man could do. "Another shrapnel case," remarked a hospital attendant. "Both legs amputated, but he'll recover." I wonder what he will do for a living when he gets back to England. Perhaps he will sell pencils or bootlaces on the flags of Piccadilly and hold out his cap for coppers.

It can be assumed Great Britain will provide pensions, but granting this may be best for dependents of the soldier killed outright, would it not be infinitely better to guarantee compensation to the wounded on the accident insurance companies' basis—so much for loss of an eye, arm or leg, two eyes, arms or legs, &c.? Instead of maimed returned soldiers eking out an existence on a pension they would have a capital to at once embark as small tradespeople, and for lack of room in England go to the Colonies for these undertakings, confident of the inhabitants favoring those who had given up a physical part of themselves to maintain the integrity of their empire.

American Soldiers of Fortune.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We have at present some sixty-eight members of the "French Foreign Legion" in the hospital here, most of whom are Americans who joined the legion at the beginning of the war, and are serving for the small sum of "one sou" per day. As ordinary comforts are very scarce, and a good number of these wounded "soldiers of fortune" are without friends to send them comforts, and there are no civilian American or English residents in this town, I would be grateful if you would publish this appeal for a few comforts, such as tobacco, cigarettes, a few pipes, books or magazines, men's undergarments of any description, or money to purchase tea, fresh eggs and butter. Other extras would be gratefully accepted and distributed by me.

Why Disdain the Unemployed?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I called at an Employment Bureau the other day on a matter of information and during my few moments' stay I was struck by the attitude of those in authority toward those seeking employment. No doubt the female icicle at the head of affairs was herself an employe. Certainly her pert stenographer came under that head. Why then the freezing disdain with which they treated the unfortunate souls who were would-be employes? Their only difference lay in the fact that they happened to have a job while the others had none.

It would seem that the work of helping others, even if done solely for the financial reward, would awaken some human kindness in the doer. In this case there was delight in making the applicants for work cringe.

A PERENNIAL DUTY.

The Simple Art of Planting Trees for Beauty and for Comfort.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Tree planting is a perennial affair in city or country, and this is an invitation to property owners in the city to remember the Fall planting season, especially opportune for the setting out of deciduous trees in our city streets, wherever the conditions are favorable.

There never has been a time like this, when the planting of trees throughout the country could be so impressively urged. As a nation, we have yet hardly awakened to the deeper sense of our improvidence and neglect in dealing with nature's immeasurable bounty of forest and water. Not infrequently correspondents abroad, in their graphic accounts of war's wild havocs, have told the story of the wanton destruction of the ancient forests and innumerable historic parks and estates and the noble trees which for more than a century have made the old roads and highways so notably attractive, outliving till now the vicissitudes of war and pestilence.

In our city we have

The Dante Alighieri Had Also Been Forced by British Warships to Return to Gibraltar.

Giulio Gatti-Casazza, Enrico Caruso, Cleofonte Campanini, Giorgio Polacco, the new conductor for the Metropolitan Opera Company, and a score of other opera folk reached New York late yesterday afternoon from Italy, but after several hours of vain endeavor they abandoned the attempt to land last night and the steamship Dante Alighieri of the Transatlantica Italiana Line anchored in the bay below the Statue of Liberty.

No one seemed to know why no tugs met the liner when she steamed up to Pier B, Jersey City, at 8 o'clock, but none did, and after whistles had been blown frantically, but in vain, for assistance, her 738 passengers gazed wistfully and despairingly at the New York shore while the steamship steamed down the harbor again.

With them was a score or more of newspaper men, William J. Guard and Otto Weil of the Metropolitan Opera Company forces, and Mme. Alda, wife of Gatti-Casazza. They, too, looked yearningly toward the shore and joined in the rush on the wireless room, where dozens of messages were piled to practically every ship and towing company in the city asking that a vessel of some sort be sent at once to the marooned ship to take them ashore.

Reporters Rescued by a Tug.

Tug after tug steamed around the ship, looked it over, and steamed away again, and it was not until 10 o'clock that some one discovered that the well-meaning but Italian operator, not understanding English, had been notifying all New York that the Dante Alighieri didn't need a tug. Apparently every tugboat Captain who didn't have anything else to do had come down to look over the vessel which thus wirelessly boasted her complete independence.

Deputy Collector C. M. Sprague finally got the Government boat, the Immigrant, from Ellis Island, to take off the custom men, and the reporters got a tug, the British Consul Christian, and the Mallory Steamship Company, which put them ashore at the Battery.

Caruso waved them a sad farewell from an upper deck, and Gatti-Casazza kissed his wife and gave her a new Persian hat, which she wore ashore. Mme. Alda had her limousine waiting at Jersey City to carry Gatti-Casazza to their Summer home in Great Neck, L. I. The general manager of the Metropolitan forces had been as eager as any one to get ashore, but when Mme. Alda mentioned the waiting car and Great Neck the distance he declared that it was quite right that custom rules should be enforced and no passenger permitted to leave the ship except at the pier. As the Britannia departed he was joining Caruso in a Neapolitan song of farewell.

The unexpected ending of the voyage was quite in keeping with its earlier part, according to the passengers. First, they were a day late in reaching Gibraltar, having touched at Almeria for a cargo of grapes after leaving Genoa on Oct. 4, and it was 10 P. M. on Oct. 10 when the Dante Alighieri was challenged by a British cruiser using the Morse lamp. Captain Angelo Sturlese replied, telling who he was, and kept right on at full speed, being in a hurry. He was ten miles past Gibraltar when a destroyer awoke up alongside and, through a megaphone, a British Lieutenant asked:

"Please call at Gibraltar."

Mme. Alda's Movie a Failure.

Capt. Sturlese thought the Lieutenant was bidding him good-bye, and returned cordial words in Italian. Also he kept on at full speed, and had got five miles nearer the United States when the destroyer, which had evidently signalled back for instructions, overhauled him again, and this time made its order understood. Back to Gibraltar went the Dante Alighieri, where it was held up for three hours.

Then came fogs to combat, so that the steamship reached quarantine at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, more than a day late. Mme. Alda was to have been photographed for the moving pictures as she ascended the side to greet her husband. Captain Sturlese had feared that he hoped to be able to be in at 3:30, so Mme. Alda and a crowd of photographers were on the cutter which met the ship.

There are 370 in the steerage, 118 in the second cabin, and 249 in the first cabin, so many to examine that no one was allowed aboard the ship until 6:20. It was completely dark then, but the photographers had flash lights ready, so Mme. Alda mounted the ladder while the picture men frantically called for their assistants to set off the flashlights. The wind had blown the power away, however, and there were no lights. Mme. Alda hung between sky and sea, calling for haste and declaring that she could not hold on, while Gatti-Casazza above her directed that she come aboard at once. Finally she did so, and the pictures were a failure.

William Guard followed her up the ladder, and Polacco seized him at once and kissed him vigorously. Guard is used to it, but he broke away as quickly as possible and fairly ran when the new conductor showed an inclination to bid him adieu as he boarded the Britannia later.

Caruso Sings Merrily.

Others who were marooned on the Dante Alighieri all night were Gaetano Bavagnoli, who is to divide with Polacco the task of taking Toscanini's place; Gennero Papi and Francesco Romei, assistant conductors; Rosina Galli, a dancer, and Giuseppe de Luca, a new baritone, and Ida Cajatti, a new lyric soprano, who will be heard at the Metropolitan.

Caruso was in fine fettle, and his voice seemed excellent. The tenor said he was in perfect condition. He sang Neapolitan songs, and every one joined in the chorus. When the cutter drew alongside he threw his leg over the rail, exclaiming:

"Is that America at last? I want to go ashore."

Gatti-Casazza said he would issue a statement of his plans for opera this season when he reached the Hotel Knickerbocker today. Campanini said his season of ten weeks would begin in the Auditorium, Chicago, on Nov. 15. He said he intended to produce four operas new to Chicago, these being "Elektra," by Richard Strauss; "L'Amore del Tre Re," by Italo Montemezzi; "Dejanire," by Saint-Saëns, and "Cleopatra," by Massenet. With him was Rodolfo Ferrari, who is to conduct. Mr. Campanini said he would have Geraldine Farrar, Mme. Melba, Tita Ruffo, Lucien Muratore, and John McCormack with him this year.

STOWAWAY THE SHIP'S PET.

Boy with Classic Beauty Made Much Of on the Dante Alighieri.

One of the passengers on the Dante Alighieri who attracted almost as much attention as Caruso was José Gomez, a fourteen-year-old boy, who was a stowaway from Almeria, Spain, where the ship put in for a cargo of grapes. The boy's remarkable beauty of face won him the interest and favors of the passengers. He was petted all of the way across and sketched by Caruso. He was compared by many to the boy portraits by Murillo. He is only 4 feet and 4 inches tall.

José told the Ellis Island authorities that his home was in Alicante, Spain, and that, as his widowed mother was in poverty, he ran away to go to sea. By walking and stealing rides, he reached Almeria in eleven days, and while waiting for a ship met Rubio Camacho, another 14-year-old boy, living in Almeria. The two bought bread, sausages, and a bottle of wine and hid in one of the lifeboats of the Dante Alighieri.

They were not discovered until two days after the ship had passed Gibraltar. Both boys had thought that the vessel was going to Buenos Aires, where they wished to land, and were much disappointed when told by passengers that they were bound for New York. They were taken to Ellis Island last night and will be deported unless one or both of them is vouched for by persons here. The Camacho boy does not mind returning to his native town, but little José is heartbroken.

"INTERIOR" REVIVED.

Maeterlinck Play Restored to the Bandbox Program.

"Interior," the most beautiful and quite the most impressive thing done by the Washington Square Players in their preliminary season last Spring, was revived by them at the Bandbox Theatre last evening. The inclusion of this play by Maurice Maeterlinck perceptibly raises the level of the present program and so completes an entertainment which richly rewards the journey to this rather remote little playhouse in East Fifty-seventh Street.

"Interior" is staged and played with skill and imagination. The unusually fine voice of Ralph Roeder is of great service here, and he is ably assisted by Walter Frankl, Beatrice Savelli, Agnes McCarthy, Josephine A. Meyer, and others.

The other playlets on the program are "Fire and Water," by Hervey White; "The Antick," by Percy MacKaye, which is made specially charming by Lydia Lopokova, and "Helena's Husband," the brilliant little farce by Percy Moeller, which is one of the two brightest plays in New York.

MR. AND MRS. MANNES PLAY.

Sonatas by Beethoven and Locatelli and Brahms's Horn Trio Given.

For a good many years Mr. and Mrs. David Mannes have been giving annually three and sometimes more recitals of music for piano and violin, which have won for themselves a following, and have become one of the recognized fixtures of chamber music in the New York season. This year the concert givers have moved from the theatre in which the concerts were so long given, and which required that they take place on Sunday nights, to the somewhat ampler surroundings of Aeolian Hall. There the first of the present season's series was heard last evening. The program included Beethoven's sonata in G major, Op. 96; a sonata in F minor by Locatelli, and Brahms's trio in E flat for piano, violin, and horn. The trio is not often played; it is not often considered possible or convenient for chamber music organizations to assemble the combination of instruments needed; but this involves a considerable loss for lovers of chamber music, because the work is one of great beauty, and thoroughly characteristic of one side of Brahms's art.

Joseph Franzl, first hornist of the New York Symphony Orchestra, played the horn part last evening with certainty, good taste, and good tone. Much of the performance, and especially the first movement, seemed to lack something in vitality and spirit, which need not be excluded from it by the dreamy and introspective character of the music; and the last movement, whose theme might have served as a suggestion for some of Arthur Sullivan's patter songs, is overflowing with good humor.

HITS VAUDEVILLE "TRUST."

William Morris Alleges Unfair Tactics Against Him.

William Morris, of William Morris, Inc., testified yesterday in the Sherman law suit for triple damages which Clifford C. Fischer has brought in the Federal District Court against the alleged vaudeville trust, that in 1907, when the United States Amusement Company was organized, he was offered a guarantee of $500 worth of business a week if he would join it, but he declined, and then, he said, his troubles began. Baggage disappeared just as acts were to be staged, and features generally deserted him and appeared a week or two later for the "trust." So when he was driven from the independent theatres, he formed with others his present corporation.

After that there were a number of negotiations between the witness and the "trust" and in 1910, Mr. Morris said, Martin Beck and Morris Meyerfeld offered him $235,000 to stop fighting the "trust" in the Northwest. The witness went in detail into the history of the negotiations, but said they came to nothing.

H. B. Marinelli and Frank Bohn also gave testimony in the suit yesterday. It will continue this morning at 10:30 o'clock.

ARTHUR GREAVES, OF THE TIMES, DIES

City Editor Succumbs to a Sudden Hemorrhage at His Home.

HAD BEEN ILL SINCE JUNE

Was President of the Amen Corner and of the New York City News Association.

Arthur Greaves, city editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES during the last fifteen years, died at 12:05 o'clock this morning at his home, 220 West 107th Street. He had been ill since June last, and had believed himself to be suffering from diabetes. It was only a few days ago that his physicians informed him he had tuberculosis. It was a hemorrhage of the lungs which caused Mr. Greaves's death.

Mr. Greaves had abandoned his duties on THE TIMES temporarily and had intended to leave for the Adirondacks next Thursday. Last night he and Mrs. Greaves spent the evening out and had returned about 11 o'clock. Mr. Greaves was preparing for bed when the hemorrhage began.

His wife, greatly alarmed as Mr. Greaves rapidly weakened, summoned Isaac D. White, an old friend of Mr. Greaves, from his home next door, and Dr. Andrew H. Montgomery was called from 211 West 107th Street. Although he was summoned from only across the street, the physician found the patient beyond help. He was conscious, but in a stupor, so that he had not known Mr. White. Dr. Montgomery tried in vain to stop the hemorrhage. It continued until Mr. Greaves died.

Mr. Greaves was born in Cardiff, Wales, on March 12, 1868, and was brought to America by his parents in 1871. He received his education in the public schools of Hartford, Conn. His first newspaper experience was obtained on The Hartford Globe. After serving his apprenticeship there he came to this city and joined the staff of THE TIMES in 1888. When he left THE TIMES to go to The World in 1891 he had perfected himself in shorthand and he rapidly gained the reputation of being the fastest shorthand reporter in the city.

He reported the famous Brockway investigation at the Elmira Reformatory and was political reporter for The World for several years. He returned to THE TIMES on Jan. 29, 1900, as city editor and had served in that post since that time.

Mr. Greaves headed THE TIMES staff of reporters at all the Presidential conventions and the more important State conventions from 1900 to 1912. He had a political acquaintance and knowledge of politics not surpassed by newspaper men who specialized in this field. He was President of the Amen Corner, a club of political reporters deriving its name from the famous corner in the old Fifth Avenue Hotel where politicians gathered. He was also President of the New York City News Association.

It was Mr. Greaves who made nationally famous the utterance of Asa Bird Gardiner, "Do it with reform." He reported stenographically the speech in which Gardiner uttered this declaration when he was a candidate for District Attorney. He reported most of the big local events of the late nineties, especially trials and investigations where he could make use of his knowledge of shorthand.

Mr. Greaves leaves a wife, Mrs. Margaret Livinia Guerin Greaves, to whom he was married by the Rev. F. R. Morse, assistant rector of Calvary Baptist Church, on Aug. 16, 1903.

Two brothers, Charles A. Greaves of Piermont, N. Y., and Walter Greaves of San Francisco, and two sisters, Mrs. George Ross of Montreal and Mrs. Charles Hayes of Toronto, also survive him. Tracey Greaves, who died in 1904, was also a brother of Arthur Greaves, and, as a newspaper writer, was almost as well known.

INDICTED FOR FALSE CLAIMS.

Auto Exchange Officer Said to Have Sworn to Fraudulent Loss.

Hyman Rosenson, of 68 West 117th Street, treasurer of the Mutual Auto Exchange Company, at Sixtieth Street and Broadway, was indicted yesterday for making a false claim for damages on an insurance company. He was arraigned before Judge Nott in General Sessions and committed to the Tombs in default of $4,000 bail.

On May 20 an explosion, followed by fire, occurred near Rosenson's establishment, then known as the Mutual Auto Exchange Company, at 317-319 West Fifty-ninth Street. Several automobiles were destroyed. According to the indictment, Rosenson filed a statement with the committee of the New York Fire Underwriters claiming a loss of $9,165. It is charged that of the twenty-four automobiles he said were destroyed, some were not in the garage, and in many cases old cars were substituted for new ones. On his loss on painting and overhauling alone he is accused of having raised his figures from $500 to $3,140.

At the time of the fire Rosenson had $20,000 of fire insurance on his stock, $3,000 of which was in the Fire Association of Philadelphia, Penn.

At the Palace.

Continued for a second week, the Fall Fashion Show absorbs most of the attention in the present program at the Palace. The remainder of the bill is not notable, and is by no means continuously entertaining. Ray Samuels, who sings with great gusto, and the favorite Lyons and Yosco carry off most of the honors. Patrons at that vaudeville theatre this week can see Evelyn Nesbit dance with Jack Clifford and can hear her sing.

Movie Star from Coast in Auto.

Anita King, the movie picture actress, who is known to movie followers as the Paramount Girl, will arrive in New York this morning from a trip across the continent in a motor car. Miss King left San Francisco Sept. 2 and made the journey alone. She has stopped in the largest cities en route and talked about motion pictures in the theatres. She brings with her messages from the Mayors of eleven cities to Mayor Mitchel. Miss King will be met at the Fort Lee Ferry about 10 o'clock by an escort of men and women in automobiles, who will accompany her to the City Hall.

CHARLTON FAINTS AS HIS TRIAL STARTS

Postponement Refused, He Tells His Italian Judge the Story of His Crime.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COMO, Oct. 18.—Porter Charlton's trial, which may be said fairly to have started this morning, since the Judge refused to accede to a request for further postponement, is furnishing interesting material for psychological study.

Charlton has spent much of his long imprisonment in studying Italian, which he now speaks with considerable correctness, but in a slow, hesitating way which made a painful impression as he gave his testimony. This, together with the nervousness which the prisoner suffered, robbed his tragic tale of the effect it might otherwise have produced.

Charlton showed strong emotion as he described the happiness and exaltation of idyllic first love, the horror of his realization that the woman he had idealized was capable (as he asserted) of vulgar vituperation, insane and unfounded accusations and insults, the constant repetition of which filled him with a sense of hopeless abasement and disgust. Tears coursed down his cheeks as, clutching the bars of the cage in which he was confined, he gave his testimony.

When he finished his story, Charlton sank back pale and trembling, as though utterly worn out by the mental torture of recalling the memories of his crime.

COMO, Oct. 18, (via Paris.)—When the case of Charlton was called today, Signor Cataneo asked for a further postponement to give Miceli Picardi, Charlton's chief counsel, who is indisposed, further time to study the case.

Baron Sciacca, the presiding Judge, refused to consent to a postponement of the trial, saying that he considered the presence of Signor Cataneo, of Charlton's counsel, sufficient to protect the interests of the accused.

The court thereupon immediately proceeded to interrogate Charlton. The prisoner spoke for about an hour, giving an account of his life from the time he met Mary Scott, whom he married and of whose murder he is accused, up to the time the crime was committed.

Charlton spoke in Italian, but, owing to the difficulty he experienced in finding the proper words with which to express himself, the court frequently helped him out.

He was attacked with a fainting fit in the course of the interrogation, and was obliged to retire from the court room. When he returned, Baron Sciecca continued the inquiry.

The public is being excluded from the court room because of the nature of the testimony.

ROBT. B. WARD DIES; BASEBALL FINANCIER

Vice President of the Federal League Was Head of the Ward Baking Company.

BROOKLYN FEDERALS' HEAD

He Began His Career as a Boy Baker in His Father's Shop and Left About $5,000,000.

Robert Boyd Ward, Vice President of the Federal League and President of the Brooklyn Federal League team, who was widely known as President of the Ward Baking Company before he went into baseball two years ago, died last night of heart disease at Homewood, his estate on Quaker Ridge Road, New Rochelle, N. Y., in his sixty-fourth year.

He was born in this city and was a son of the late Hugh Ward, who came here from Ireland in 1850, after having learned the baking business there. His grandfather, James Ward, was at that time a grocer here, with an establishment at Eighth Street and Avenue D. Several years later the entire Ward family emigrated to Pittsburgh, where Hugh Ward started in the baking business.

At the age of eight years, Robert B. Ward, owing to the scarcity of labor caused by the civil war, went into his father's shop and until he was twenty-one did the actual work of preparing bread for market. A few years later, he went into business on his own account, and still later became associated with his brother, George S. Ward, in the firm of R. B. Ward & Co. This firm later became the Ward-Mackey Company, and finally the Ward Bread Company was organized for the manufacture and delivery of bread in this city.

At the time of his death Mr. Ward was said to be worth more than $5,000,000, and was interested in a number of other corporations, including the Ohio Bread Company of Cleveland, Ohio; the Ward-Mackey Company of Pittsburgh, and the Ward-Corby Company of Chicago, Providence, and Boston. He was also a Vice President of the Liberty Savings Bank, the Liberty National Bank, and a Director of the Franklin Savings and Trust Company of Pittsburgh.

Before leaving Pittsburgh Mr. Ward had served as President of the Common Council. He was a thirty-second degree Mason and a member of the Duquesne Club, the Press Club, and the Americus Club of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Ward took an active part in the establishment of the Federal League and rebuilt the old ball grounds of the Brooklyn National League in Brooklyn, now known as Washington Park. He had always been interested in baseball, and entered the Federal League in March, 1914, being the first prominent business man of the East to take an interest in the league.

During the last season he was said to have had more baseball players under contract than any other capitalist. For the last year Mr. Ward had also financed the Colonial League of New England, which consisted of six teams and which he used for recruiting and training players for his Federal League team. Last season he was elected a member of the Finance Committee of the Federal League also.

Mr. Ward is survived by his widow, who was Miss Mary C. Breining of Pittsburgh, and by five daughters and four sons. One of the former, who was Miss Martha Ward, was married two weeks ago to James Hinman, an attorney of Wilkinsburg, Penn. Two of his sons, W. B. and Howard B. Ward, are connected with the Ward Bread Company.

FIVE YALE ATHLETES DECLARED INELIGIBLE FOR PLAYING "SUMMER BASEBALL"—FOOTBALL

FIVE YALE ATHLETES BARRED FROM SPORTS

Football and Baseball Stars Admit Playing Summer Ball for Board and Room.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 18.—Five of the most efficient members of the Yale baseball and football teams were tonight declared ineligible to compete in athletics at the university in the future because they received their board and room free during part of the time they were members of the baseball nine at Quogue, L. I., last Summer. Their cases were investigated by the new Yale Eligibility Committee during the past month. The committee found that the players had violated a clearly expressed Yale eligibility rule.

The players are Harry Legore, football full back and baseball shortstop; Billy Easton, football half back and baseball left fielder; Robert Rhett, outfielder; Spencer Pumpelly, pitcher, and Arthur Milburn, second baseman and Captain of the baseball nine. Legore's withdrawal from the Yale eleven has struck a heavy blow to the chances of the team this Fall.

The statement made officially at Yale follows: "The following lester was made public by the officers of the Yale University Athletic Association, in order that it may receive the honorable recognition to which it is entitled.

Oct. 18, 1915.

Professor Robert N. Corwin, Chairman Yale University Athletic Association.

Dear Sir: We, the undersigned members of the Yale University baseball team of 1915, during the past Summer played with the Quogue Field Club nine, the club furnishing the board and room to the players. From the time we discovered the provision in the Yale rules that no man who has received the board for playing Summer baseball shall represent Yale on its teams, each of us paid in full for board and lodging, subsequently furnished him by the club. In view, however, of the fact that we did, although unintentionally and ill-advisedly, violate the rule, we hereby withdraw from competition in intercollegiate athletics.

ARTHUR MILBURN,
WILLIAM EASTON,
HARRY W. LEGORE,
SPENCER A. PUMPELLY,
ROBERT G. RHETT, Jr.

"It is, perhaps, superfluous for the officers of the Yale University Athletic Association to comment on the foregoing letter. It seems but fair, however, to the players signing it for the association to express publicly its regret that because of the carelessness of its officers and committees these men have inadvertently violated the rule mentioned. The officers of the association rely upon the continued interest and co-operation of these players in every way, and especially in making certain that none of their successors is through ignorance, ever placed in such a difficult position.

"For the Yale Athletic Association,
"ROBERT N. CORWIN, Chairman;
"GEORGE PARMLY DAY, Treas."

Although no official confirmation of the report can be obtained at Yale, it was stated tonight that "Ike" Iler and King the survivors. In the semi-finals, Iler defeated Dr. Tucker two sets to one at 4—6, 6—4, 6—3, and King won from Pianasani at 6—2, 6—3. The summary:

DON'TS FOR GUNNERS.

Another Season Has Come and Here Are a Few Precautions.

The Fall gunning season is about on, and every year the hunting brings with it its spoils in the form of human sacrifices. For the benefit of gunners who are planning to go after game this Fall, the following list of don'ts is given:

Don't take any chances. The function of a shotgun is to scatter shot, but be very careful where you scatter it.

Don't blaze away in haste and don't get excited. Many a shooter has filled his favorite dog full of lead just because he was overanxious.

Don't point a gun at any person in jest. It is always the gun that "we didn't know was loaded" that goes off and does the damage. The only time to point a gun is when you intend to kill.

Don't take every rustle of a bush or a bough to be a sure indication of game. Remember sometimes an inquisitive person has a penchant for being in strange places.

Don't carry a loaded gun through the streets or on cars, trains, automobiles, or any other kind of vehicle. Never leave it around farm houses to have some child playfully blow a head off.

Don't get excited and shoot without making sure that your object is game.

Don't shoot until you see the rabbit, and then be sure that he is clear of both man and dog.

Don't drag a gun under a fence with the muzzle pointed toward you.

Don't climb over fences with your gun or lean it against a tree until you get over. Put it through the fence and on the ground business end before.

Don't hunt with any one that you know to be careless. Carelessness with three and a quarter drams of powder behind and one and one-eighth ounces of shot is inviting "sure death."

Don't load your gun until you are actually ready for business. At all other times it should be empty. Keep your finger off the trigger until you are looking down the barrel at your game.

Don't use a cheap gun, as it is apt to explode when a heavy charge is used.

Don't borrow a dog or gun or loan either.

Don't rest on the muzzle of your gun.

Don't violate the game laws. It is not only criminal but sometimes very costly.

Don't "hog" all the game. Leave a little behind for the next fellow.

Don't rest the muzzle of your gun on the ground. A gun muzzle clogged with dirt or mud is a dangerous proposition.

State College Eleven in Trim.

STATE COLLEGE, Penn., Oct. 18.—The State College football squad celebrated its victory over Gettysburg by a long and hard drill this afternoon. State's exhibition as a defensive team against the Orange and Blue eleven shakes the faith of the coaching staff in the team's ability to stop the attack that will be directed toward it by its opponens in the four big games yet to come—Harvard, Lehigh, Lafayette, and Pitt. The line, ends, backs, and substitutes today got a thorough review of Saturday's performance. Coach Harlow apparently saw many defects, for he emphasized the necessity of bolstering the secondary defense. It was weakness in that department that gave Gettysburg nine first downs. There was no scrimmage this afternoon. In preparation for the West Virginia game here next Saturday, one or two workouts will be held about midweek. All of Penn State's players came through the Gettysburg contest without injury.

Union Eleven Not Disheartened.

Special to The New York Times.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Oct. 18.—Union's defeat at the hands of New York University on Saturday has in no way disheartened the Garnet team. It is generally felt here that N. Y. U. deserved to win. Today a larger squad turned out for practice than has appeared on Alexander Field in weeks. Fred Dawson, head coach, put the men through a hard drill in the fundamentals of the game. "Corky" Moynahan and Captain Jennings, who distinguished themselves in the game at New York, reported in good condition this afternoon. "Pete" Starbuck, Captain of last year's 'Varsity, has taken over the coaching of the second team and will direct its work in the future.

J. S. Draper Sells Show Horses.

J. Sumner Draper of Boston yesterday sold to Valentine Crane of Chicago the three high-stepping harness horses Baronet, Satire, and Rillington Nimble to exhibit at the National Horse Show. The price paid is said to have been $15,000. Dissatisfied with the judging, Mr. Draper declared after the last National Horse Show that he would never exhibit his hackneys again in this country, and sent them to England where they won many prizes. After their return last Spring he issued a challenge to show them in a match against any three harness horses in the United States for $5,000 a side. His horses have been at White Plains in charge of J. M. Smith of Boston ever since they returned from England. Their new owner entered them yesterday in the National Horse Show.

Schoolboy Golf Tournaments.

Schoolboy golfers have arranged for a series of team matches, three on a side, for decision at Van Cortlandt Park during the month of November. The Interscholastic Golf League is the name of the association, and eight high schools are represented. This has nothing to do with the individual championship, which starts at the public links on Saturday, although the same officials are in charge. The list of matches follows:

Oct. 30, Townsend vs. Yonkers, Morris vs. Stuyvesant, Erasmus vs. Richmond Hill, De Witt Clinton vs. Commerce.

Nov. 2, Richmond Hill vs. Townsend Harris, Erasmus vs. Yonkers, De Witt Clinton vs. Morris, Commerce vs. Stuyvesant; 6, Yonkers vs. Richmond Hill, Townsend Harris vs. Erasmus, Stuyvesant vs. De Witt Clinton, Morris vs. Commerce; 13, Richmond Hill vs. Clinton, Erasmus vs. Commerce, Townsend Harris vs. Morris, Yonkers vs. Stuyvesant; 20, Commerce vs. Richmond Hill, De Witt Clinton vs. Erasmus, Stuyvesant vs. Townsend Harris, Yonkers vs. Morris; 26, Morris vs. Richmond Hill, Erasmus vs. Stuyvesant, Townsend Harris vs. De Witt Clinton, Commerce vs. Yonkers; 27, Richmond Hill vs. Stuyvesant, Morris vs. Erasmus, Commerce vs. Townsend, Yonkers vs. De Witt Clinton.

New Manager for Baltusrol G. C.

Heber H. Robertson, who has been connected with other golf and country clubs, especially in the South, yesterday assumed the position of manager of the Baltusrol Golf Club, to succeed Adolph Bentz, who has resigned. The latter has held the position for the past four years. Mr. Robertson has been assistant to Bentz since last April, and he has worked out several radical changes to be made. He will have charge of the entire club, working under the supervision of the Board of Governors. Mr. Robertson has had twenty-seved years' experience as manager of clubs and has been proprietor of several hotels in Florida and South Carolina.

To Lengthen Canoe Brook Links.

The Canoe Brook golf course at Summit, N. J., is to be lengthened from 5,700 feet to 6,500 feet, according to a decision reached by the Canoe Brook Country Club stockholders. Six new tennis courts also will be built.

No Knights of St. Antony "Pros."

The Knights of St. Antony have explained satisfactorily to the Amateur Athletic Union their connection with the new professional interstate basketball league, in which they were supposed to have entered a team, and the matter has been dropped by the governing body. In an official explanation to President Rubien of the Metropolitan Association, the club stated that none of its regular members was engaged to play in the professional league, but that their court had been rented for the season to a team of Brooklyn all-stars, who will be known as such and not as the Knights of St. Antony. There are several former representatives of the Knights on the Brooklyn quintet.

Devon Beats Aiken at Polo.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 18.—The Devon polo team defeated the Aiken Tigers, 7 goals to 6, in an extra-period game for the Autumn tournament cup today at Bryn Mawr. The winners earned all of their goals while the Tigers received one by handicap and scored five. At the end of the regulation eight periods the score was tied at 6 to 6. Collins scoring the winning goal after 2 minutes and 25 seconds' play in the ninth period.

LOVIBOND'S TENNIS TITLE.

Dr. Waite Forces New York L. T. C. Champion to Five Hard Sets.

The annual tournament of the New York Lawn Tennis Club was won by Arthur M. Lovibond, who, in addition to capturing the club championship, also obtained a second leg on the cup donated by T. R. Pell. Lovibond met strong opposition in the final round from Dr. Waite, and triumphed only after playing fifty-six games at 6—1, 6—8, 6—8, 7—9, 6—4. The new champion took the first two sets in somewhat easy manner, but Dr. Waite rallied and took the next two sets after each had gone to deuce several times. The fifth and deciding set was closely contested. A clever get and a pass that just clipped the side lines gave Lovibond the victory. The final match was the best of the tournament, and was enjoyed by a big gallery which surrounded the club courts at Columbia Oval, Williamsbridge.

Play in the handicap singles reached the final round with Iler and King the survivors. In the semi-finals, Iler defeated Dr. Tucker two sets to one at 4—6, 6—4, 6—3, and King won from Pianasani at 6—2, 6—3. The summary:

Wood, 6—3, 7—5; Dr. Waite defeated W. Brennan, 6—4, 6—1; Van Eltz defeated Ver Kerk, 6—2, 6—2; McAllister defeated Quimby by default.

REFEREE ADMITS HE ERRED IN YALE GAME

Bankart Disqualified Jim Sheldon and Penalized Elis Unjustly.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 18.—An hour's signal rehearsal was ordered today for the Yale football squad. Seven elevens reported, and special attention was devoted to tackling, which has been poor. End Rush Allen and Tackle "Chub" Sheldon were detained by recitations, Blodgett playing right end and Schmidt left tackle.

In the absence of Harry Legore, Neville was at full back. Otherwise the eleven maintained its line-up of last Saturday, which is expected to be retained against Washington and Jefferson next Saturday. Tackle Baldridge reported in uniform, his ankle, which was injured ten days ago, having almost entirely recovered. He will begin scrimmaging this week, but indications are that Black, who it was expected would be able to play by next Saturday, will be kept on the side lines until next week.

Jim Sheldon, who was dismissed from the game Saturday, was at right guard again, and it was stated tonight that both Referee Bankart and Umpire Okeson admitted that a mistake was made in disqualifying him and in penalizing Yale 65 yards, half the distance to the Yale goal. Sheldon merely tackled high in trying to block a Springfield player who was trying to crawl along after being tackled. Referee Bankart ordered the penalty, which was not concurred in by Okeson. After the game Bankart admitted that he had been wrong in ordering it. Sheldon is the first Yale player to be sent from a game in several years.

CORNELL HAS A PROBLEM.

Right-End Position on Eleven Bothering the Coaches.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Oct. 18.—With only four days of real work awaiting them before the trip to Cambridge, where they will play Harvard on Saturday, the Cornell football squad entered upon the usual routine this afternoon. All of the most important players were pronounced in good condition by the coaches, except Bailey and Welles, tackles, but Jameson and Gillies are coming along so well that no anxiety is felt over their conditions. One of the two, Jewett and Fischer, Cornell has two good substitutes for the tackle position, but if Jameson continues to get back his true form, there will be no need for substitutions against Harvard.

At present it would appear as if the Ithacans would send against the Crimson a rush line which from tackle to tackle weighed 192 pounds on the average, Cool, at centre, who weighs 168 being the lightest man on the line.

Special attention was paid today to the ends, particularly Shelton, who was way off form Saturday. Ray Vanorman is convinced that his star will return to form by next Saturday, but there is considerable doubt as to Eckley and Zander, right end candidates, being fit. It is feared that the right-end problem is one of the most important to solve.

There is no fear that the Cornell line will be unable to hold Harvard at least even. In the race for substitute half backs, Schlachter and Hoffman have the call, Dr. Sharpe planning to use all three Saturday. Barrett and Shiverick practiced punting this afternoon, and both kicked a few field goals.

The coaching staff was increased today by the arrival of Jack O'Hearn, right end on last year's eleven, and a crack player. O'Hearn has been watching Harvard all year, and his report to the coaches is of great value.

Ballin to Coach at Lafayette.

Special to The New York Times.

EASTON, Penn., Oct. 18.—To take charge of the Lafayette line and to add strength to this failing department of the team, Harold Ballin, the famous tackle at Princeton, is coming to Easton tomorrow to coach the Maroon and White line for the remainder of the season. Ballin is one of the greatest masters of line play that the game of recent years has produced. He saw the game at Princeton on Saturday, and will know from the very start of his work what to do. Despite the fatigued condition of the Lafayette players, Coach Crowell put them through a vigorous scrimmage this afternoon. Several of the 'Varsity men who were badly bruised were excused. "Bull" Lowe and Scott were out of the game on account of injuries received in the game with Princeton. Martin and Diamond played in the 'Varsity backfield, and both played well. Maxfield has so far recovered that he will be able to play in the game which Lafayette will have on Wednesday with Delaware State. This midweek game is to be played in honor of the inauguration of Dr. John Henry MacCracken to the Presidency of the college.

No Letup for the Middies.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 18.—With a changed back field, the Naval Academy team had a spirited line-up against the scrub this afternoon in spite of the custom which has confined the work on Mondays after a Saturday's game to signal work and other light practice. Craig was at quarter back, and the other backs were Dashiel, Davis, and Mullinix. Though Hardwick and H. L. Ingram of the coaching staff played the ends for the scrubs, honors were with the regulars, who scored a field goal, kicked from placement by Blodgette just as the practice ended. The advantage was gained largely through the snappy work of the line, which has improved greatly during the last week. Lieutenant W. A. Richardson, who played in the back field of the Academy team for four years, reported today, completing the regular coaching staff. "Big Bill" Hollenbach helped drill the linemen today.

Boy Dies of Football Injuries.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 18.—Because of the death here last night of Pierre Ducos, 17 years old, a half back of the Jefferson College football eleven, the Faculty of the college announced today that all remaining games of this season's schedule had been canceled.

CRIMSON HOPES BRIGHTER.

Return of Cripples Indicates Strong Team Against Cornell Saturday.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 18.—All of the Harvard regulars who played against Virginia on Saturday, with the exception of left Tackle Joe Gilman, were out on Soldiers Field this afternoon, and the coaches had the satisfaction of seeing a lot of cripples out to witness the practice or to run about the field. Within another week the Crimson expects to have its full playing strength out. The return of Parsons, the 1914 'Varsity tackle, even though he worked with the substitutes, indicated a considerably stronger rushline than that which played against Virginia, while Enwright was about and able to run around the track during the practice.

Gilman was allowed to take the day off, but is all right, while Soucy, who banged his knee Saturday, was out, although not dressed to play. There is considerable doubt whether he will be able to play against Cornell, but the coaches hope that Enwright, or at least Horween, will be available. McKiniock is still on crutches, and probably will not do much work until Harvard begins preparation for Princeton. The other cripples who appeared on the field were Quarter-back Boles, End Rush Coolidge, and Thatcher, a half back.

The drill today was harder than usual on a Monday, the scrimmage bordering on real football. The work was between the regulars and the substitutes who were not allowed to try for scores, but were sent through their plays fairly hard and were followed closely by the coaches, who were liberal with individual instruction on offensive and defensive details.

Matters are surely looking brighter than they did, and unless there are more injuries this week Harvard will put up nearly its best team on the field against the Ithacans. The scrubs already are wording out the Cornell attack and will put this on against the 'Varsity tomorrow or next day. Wilcox was again at quarter back, although Watson was out working with the substitutes. Mahan, King, and Whitney comprised the backfield, while the temporary changes on the rush line were L. Curtis for Soucy at left end, and R. Curtis for Gilman at left tackle.

Lehigh Has Good Practice.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, Penn., Oct. 18.—Lehigh started work today for the Muhlenburg contest on Saturday, and it was the first good day's practice in a week. The Albright game did not injure any of the men, and all the veterans, except Jim Keady, were in uniform. The first part of the afternoon was devoted to limbering up stints, the linemen going down the field under Cahall's and Kennedy's long punts, with the backfield men receiving the ball. After this Resident Coach Keady pointed out where the man failed at times in Saturday's games, and then for the first time this season ordered the field cleared for secret practice, during which a lot of new plays and signals were rehearsed. Coach Keady was well satisfied with the manner in which the men worked. There was a constant changing of half backs and in all five quarter backs were used during the afternoon, Cahall, Allowell, Shafer, Tomlinson and Barrett.

Fordham to Develop Punters.

As a result of the strong showing made by Fordham against the Connecticut Aggies last Saturday, and in order to give his players a chance to rest up before the hard work planned for this week actually starts, Coach Vaughn dispensed with the usual scrimmage yesterday. Instead over two hours was devoted to practicing new plays, and it is on a varied use of several new plays that Fordham is banking all its hopes for a victory over the Holy Cross team next Saturday. That Fordham means to strengthen its kicking department was further demonstrated yesterday when Bud Wymard, last year's Captain, showed up to assist Dr. Cusack in getting the Maroon punters into trim. Fordham's punters are strong enough, but the lack of a dependable field goal kicker has cost the Maroon several opportunities to score during the last few years. The reports that New York University and Fordham could meet in a practice scrimmage at Ohio Field tomorrow were confirmed by Physical Director Billy Lush yesterday. The meeting will be duplicated a week from tomorrow on Fordham Field, and it is also probable that a regular post-season game will be arranged between the two Bronx rivals. Negotiations have also been opened for a series of practice scrimmages with Columbia.

COACH RUSH WILL DRIVE TIGERS HARD

Offensive Power of Line Weak and Practice with Scrubs Disappointing.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 18.—Princeton began today the working preparation for the Dartmouth game next Saturday. The afternoon's work-out was devoted to an effort on the part of Coach Rush to remove from the minds of his charges any confidence that may have resulted from the large score of the Lafayette game. His success in that line was wonderful. The day's practice was one of the most disappointing of recent times. With nearly all of the stars taking part in the scrimmage, the regulars required very nearly half an hour, with continuous possession of the ball, to score on the second team.

The offensive power of the line was at a low ebb, and very seldom could the backs get their plays well started before some ambitious substitute nailed him. Finally Shea managed to shoot off tackle for the dash that scored. It was the only really clean-cut play of the advance.

The day was in marked contrast to previous Mondays. Instead of the usual light work-out, the men started at 3 o'clock and were not excused until half an hour after dark. Secret practice consisted almost entirely of the usual drills on interference, with the rehearsing of a few plays included. Kicking came in for a share of attention, and the final hour was devoted to scrimmage.

It looked a blue Monday in regard to more things than the play. Semmens, looked upon as the best centre man in Princeton, returned to scrimmage practice this afternoon. On one of the first plays he slipped and fell, and the field house for an indefinite rest. Bob Nourse, regular guard, was kept from the field by laboratory work, his place being taken by Love, while Kaufman, regular tackle, had a rest. With Captain Glick at quarter back, Shea, Tibbott, and Driggs composed the back field. Tibbott's appearance today was his first for a week, but he needs more work before he returns to star form. Shea outclassed him today and played what stellar rôle there was.

"Buzz" Law, playing with the second-string men, furnished the real feature of the afternoon, for he alone proved capable of piercing the opposing defense. Twice he made the 'Varsity look cheap by making long gains on a lateral pass play, and on simple end runs he outclassed the other backs.

Coach Rush indicated that he would continue to drive his men at full speed throughout the week, and that every effort would be made to dispel any overconfidence for the game Saturday.

Indians Take a Day's Rest.

Special to The New York Times.

CARLISLE, Penn., Oct. 18.—Coaches Kelly and Welch gave the Carlisle Indian 'Varsity players a complete rest this afternoon, only requiring them to take a walk in the country in order to loosen up the stiff muscles. As no player was injured to any extent, regular practice will be resumed tomorrow afternoon.

The scrubs and reserves came in for the attention of the coaches and they were sent through their paces by Coach McGillis. Wellmas was in the Pittsburgh contest for a short period but was not up to his standard on account of his injury. Flood will be in condition to play against Bucknell on next Saturday, but unless he is greatly needed the coaches will not risk using him for another week, saving him for the West Virginia Wesleyan contest.

Stevens Has Light Practice.

The Stevens Tech eleven had an easy day yesterday, only thirty minutes of signal practice being allowed them, and a blackboard talk lasting about an hour. Coach Rodgers pointed out the more serious errors which were made last Saturday, and demonstrated several changes of plays which he deemed advisable. The team is in excellent shape, considering the gruelling battle which they went through Saturday, and despite the fact that a number of men have been dropped from the squad lately, the coach hopes to take a team to Schenectady Saturday which will score more points against Union than the N. Y. U. team did last Saturday.

LOCAL TEAMS TO CLASH.

N. Y. U. Will Play Practice Football Game with Columbia Today.

Students of both New York University and Columbia, who have been eager for a football game between the Violet and Blue and White football teams, will in a measure have their hopes realized this afternoon, when Coach Reilley's proteges go down to South Field for a practice contest with the Morningside Heights eleven. Although the latter has yet to play its first game, the University Heights team is expecting a strong resistance, and because of the natural rivalry between the two institutions will make every effort to come away with a creditable record. After New York University's victory over the Union eleven last Saturday, the Violet coaches permitted a relaxation for the entire squad yesterday and gave both regulars and scrubs an opportunity for a much-needed rest.

Prospects never looked brighter for the New York eleven than at the present time, and the fact that followers of the team have noted a decided improvement in the playing in the Union game shows that Coaches Reilley and Gorsch are gradually whipping the men into shape for the bigger teams which follow on the Violet's schedule. The local eleven showed surprisingly strong at the defensive game last Saturday, but the coaches still feel that the team could stand further improvement in this respect and on that account have arranged for practice contests with outside elevens as the work for the week.

The line, from its style of playing in the tussle with the Union eleven, shows a great improvement over its earlier games, but at the forward passing game the Violet's efforts have been rather disappointing. Speed is another problem that has still to be met, as Reilley is not satisfied with the general playing of the team in this particular. The development of substitutes for the regular backfield will come in for considerable attention.

BRACING THE DEFENSE.

Columbia's Greatest Weakness Calls for Much Tackling Practice.

Football practice at Columbia yesterday was almost entirely devoted to drilling the defense, the admittedly weak part in the Blue and White team. Coach Metcalf kept the 'Varsity men and substitutes at tackling runners for an hour before the daily signal drill was ordered. There was no scrimmage because of the work-out this afternoon on South Field with the New York University squad.

Captain Francis M. Simonds, Jr., was on the field for the first time in more than a week. He has been confined to his bed by a slight attack of blood poison, and his weakened condition makes it doubtful whether he will start in the first game of the season Saturday with St. Lawrence University. Simonds will be called upon to do most of the punting this season, and his absence from the opening game would put Columbia at a serious disadvantage.

Ecky Calder, the left end, was absent from practice, and Kornsand and Fairfield alternated at this position. Healey and Kennedy remained at their positions on the left side of the rush line, and Noble and Brown again worked at centre. Coach Metcalf will probably not make a choice for this position until the end of the week. Wilber was put in at right tackle, and his consistent work during the past week may give him a victory over Donaldson for this position. Stover and Miller again changed off at quarter back, and the regular back field of Donoho, Littauer, and Mansbach worked together like a clock on the interference.

Arrangements were completed yesterday for a scrimmage game between the freshman eleven and the Horace Mann School team on Friday afternoon. The first game for the Columbia cubs is still two weeks away.

A number of boxes are to be constructed at the foot of the bleachers and will be allotted for the season to prominent Columbia alumni. At least one will be for city officials. Others will be used by President Nicholas Murray Butler, George Ruppert, and Edwin Gould.

PEACE IN BASEBALL BEFORE NEXT SPRING

Negotiations Under Way, with Gilmore of Federals Left Out of Conferences.

Despite emphatic denials from the Federal League, there is positive proof available that negotiations have taken place pointing to a settlement of the baseball war before another playing season begins. One of the conditions of these negotiations was that the Federal League would cease to exist as a major organization. Organized baseball is firm in its original stand that there is no room for a third major league, and this was undoubtedly known to the men of the youngest organizations, who had a conference with the National Commission in Philadelphia after the first game of the world's series. That the conference was sought by the Federal League is known only in so far as is indicated by the conditions which existed at that conference, and they held the implication that some of the Federal League club owners at least were willing to eliminate James A. Gilmore, the league's President.

The Federal League President was at the conference with several of the club owners, or, rather, he intended to be, but before Ban Johnson would come into the room he insisted that Gilmore leave, and he made the request in a way that left no doubt as to the way in which organized baseball regarded the Federal League President.

"Tie a can to him and send him out," was the way Johnson indicated that Gilmore should go. The best proof that some of the club owners were anxious for peace is found in the fact that Gilmore went while they remained to talk over the situation. It is inconceivable that American League club owners would have stayed on at any such meeting if the same remark had been applied to Johnson.

It is known that several of the Federal League club owners who have not been so emphatic in their public utterances as has Gilmore would be welcomed into the ranks of organized baseball, provided they were free from the Federal League or that organization ceased to exist. That the Philadelphia conference may be the means to that solution of the baseball war is more than mere imagination.

The Philadelphia conference laid the foundation for a further meeting apparently, although nothing specific was done in this direction. However, the best terms that the Federal League will receive will be an unconditional surrender, mitigated for some in that they will have their place in organized baseball.

When he was asked about the peace conference yesterday, Gilmore was in one of his unsatisfactory moods. He did say that he would not approve of any Federal League owner having stock in a club of organized baseball. To all other questions he answered, "That's my business," which was a back-handed way of saying, "It's none of your business." Gilmore was plainly nettled when the subject of peace was broached.

What peace would mean for the Federal League players is questionable, but they would not be blacklisted, it is believed. Some are said to favor returning them to the original clubs to which they belonged, while others say that they should go to the minors. For the clubs which would be dropped out there would perhaps be some adjustment whereby the moneyed interests in the Federal League would assume some of the burden. Organized baseball could give no relief, as it would not want the circuit or the plants.

For those men who would be welcomed into organized baseball there are several clubs in each of the leagues which would be available for entire or part purchase. The Cubs are not in this category, however, unless, of course, there was a very big price paid. Charles P. Taft is well satisfied with his investment.

INTERNATIONAL'S NEW MOVE

Will Try to Admit Springfield and Hartford Into League.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Oct. 18.—E. W. Wicks, President of the Jersey City Club of the International League, was in Springfield today looking over conditions here with a view of getting this city and Hartford into the International League for next year. Mr. Wicks said his league had not decided what franchises would be shifted if Springfield and Hartford were taken in, but it is probable they will be Jersey City and Harrisburg, formerly Newark.

After a long conference with W. E. Cary, President of the Springfield Athletic Association, which operated the Springfield club in the Eastern Association before that league suspended operations, Mr. Wicks said he would report favorably on Springfield to President E. G. Barrow of the International League. He said he had come to this section as the personal representative of Mr. Barrow and would go over the situation in Hartford tomorrow with James H. Clarkin, who was the owner of the Eastern Association franchise in that city.

Mr. Wicks stated that it was the intention of his league to go to the meeting of the National Association in San Francisco next month with a proposition that the International League receive permission to place clubs both in

BILLIARD TOURNAMENTS—BOXING

DE ORO DEFEATS SLOSSON WITH CUE

Cuban Takes First Block in 250 Points Three-Cushion Billiards Match.

Alfred De Oro defeated George Slosson last night at Doyle's Academy in the first 50-point game of a 250-point match at three-cushion billiards by a score of 50 to 43. In addition to the play being for a purse of $500, it also serves as practice competition for the Cuban billiardist, who is the challenger of William Huey of Chicago for the three-cushion championship. It has been announced that Huey will default in the championship, but De Oro last night doubted the report from Chicago.

The match of last night gave the large crowd of spectators an exciting game. It was the play of the expert balk-line billiardist against the three-cushion expert, and Slosson until the very last few innings was within striking distance of victory. Even though he has played but one other three-cushion match in all his years of billiards in this country, Slosson displays an adaptability to the three-type of game that is remarkable, and his skill worried De Oro in the latter innings. After Slosson's turn at the table in the eighty-sixth inning, when he ran three, the game stood a tie each having 42 points. Thereafter De Oro counted consistently in low figures with only two misses, while Slosson could gather in but one more count for his total before his opponent ran out.

Neither of the contestants was quite in stroke, but each played a game that was pleasing and daring. There were few times that safety play was attempted, both Slosson and De Oro scorning such methods, and it was in large part due to this feature that the game was so keenly interesting. Spectators filled the small academy that is set aside for championship games and were crowded deep around the railing. Among those present were John K. Tener, President of the National League, and James A. Gilmore, the leader of the Federal League, but the two did not meet, Gilmore leaving just before President Tener came into the academy.

Slosson gained a lead at the start, but he could not maintain the advantage, and the Cuban expert went to the front in the middle game. At one time he was leading by sixteen points, but Slosson played better from the fifty-fourth inning and began to draw up. He evened the match in the eighty-sixth, but that ended the rally and De Oro ran out in the ninety-first inning.

Other Winners with the Cue.

H. Lewis defeated Judge Vermilyea in a closely contested game last night in the amateur handicap three-cushion carom billiard tournament at the Morningside Academy, 125th Street and Lenox Avenue, by the score of 15 to 13. Lewis was playing for 15 points, while his opponent only had to score 14 to win, and from the start until the final point was tallied in the forty-seventh inning the contest was close, with the lead alternating frequently. The winner's highest run was 2 points, while Vermilyea tallied 3.

G. Gardner showed flashes of consistent playing in his game with R. Sulzer last night in the amateur handicap three-cushion carom tournament at the Audubon Academy, which the former won by the score of 40 to 22, in eighty innings. Gardner was on the 40-point mark, while Sulzer was playing for 84 points, and, although the latter showed to advantage in the early innings, Gardner's stroke improved as the game progressed, and he made some difficult shots in the latter part of the game. Gardner made a high run of 5 points and tallied 4 points.

Charles E. White demonstrated his ability last night in the amateur handicap 18.2 balk-line billiard tournament at the Knickerbocker Academy in Brooklyn by the score of 250 to 167. White is the scratch man of the tournament, and to win it was necessary for him to score 250 points before Spear could tally 190, the mark from which the latter plays. White led from the start and completed his string in thirty-four innings, making an average of 7 12-34.

HANDLING THE HOOKED FISH

A Few Hints on How to Make "Catches" with Rod and Line.

Holding the fish after it is hooked, and successfully tiring it out so that it can be landed, is a subject that is not given half enough attention by anglers, for the novice will often get as many strikes as the veteran fisherman, sometimes more, but if he does not know how to "play" the fish under all conditions he will lose many. The manner of hooking the fish is usually a quick twitch of the rod, being a movement of the wrist and forearm only, but this depends upon the kind of fishing, for in still fishing the fish either hook themselves or the act of hooking and lifting from the water is all done in one movement. When reeling in an artificial bait, using a short rod, the rod should be held at an angle of about twenty degrees. If held higher you may break the tip when you hook the fish. Even in still fishing there is no need of roughness, and it is not necessary to yank the fish up into the tree top or fling it back into the field above the bank. All that is needed is to keep a steady, taut line and a quick twitch to set the hook. A steady lift to draw the fish from his element is sure to yield a larger catch of fish.

In still fishing the large ones are often lost by an unnecessarily hard yank of the rod, which breaks or springs the hook, or tears it out of the fish's mouth. But it is only the heavy, strong tackle used in still fishing that will allow of lifting the fish bodily from the water. The light tackle used for fly or bait casting could not be used this way, and this fishing would not be nearly so enjoyable if the fish were pulled out by main strength. The pleasure of such fishing is mainly in endeavoring to tire the fish by the action of the rod and reel, and in circumventing the fish's efforts to escape, so that it can be safely landed. The lighter the tackle used the more enjoyable this is, and the more sport it affords, but there is always a limit to the lightness of the tackle when safety and practical use are considered. Fishing in lakes and other quiet, clear waters, where the fish has plenty of room to run, can use lighter tackle than in a place where you must hold the fish away from snags, weeds, &c., and where the strong current helps him out.

When using a very light tackle and open water a long line and a large reel must be used, for a large fish may make a long run or a deep sound before the drag grows tiresome and he decides to go back. But no matter what kind of tackle, you should always give line graduingly and take it in at every opportunity. You may have more chance when the fish is near you and you know that he is in clear water and more line with which to check a run. If the fish is a big one you may lose line and recover it again many times before you tire your catch out, and you should never try to use a landing net or gaff until your fish is tired out and gives up the fight. Some kinds of fish fight entirely beneath the surface, others break water frequently, and sometimes leap a foot or more out of the water. The black bass is one of the latter kind.

When handling the rod when a fish breaks water, it is best merely to lower the tip of the rod when the fish leaps if the line is long so that he will not fall on taut line, but the line must be recovered instantly after he strikes the water. When fishing from an anchored boat, don't forget the rope, and when the fish goes under the boat, swing the rod to the other side and the line around the end of the boat, the same end under which the fish has gone with your line. If you can keep this up long enough, you are sure to tire out the fish sooner or later, and when the fish grows tired and shows his side you can reel him in and with a landing net or gaff lift him into the boat.

Large sea fish are handled the same as fresh-water fish, except that being larger and stronger, it is more difficult to check their rushes, and a large fish like the tarpon or tuna will sometimes take out several hundred yards of line before you can stop him.

COLLEGE WATER POLO.

Plenty of Good Material Available —Rule Will Be Close.

Unusual activity has been noted this Fall among college water polo players, and the reason is to be found in the wealth of good material available for almost every squad in the league. All teams have developed championship aspirations, but realize that the race for honors will be hard and close, so are making early efforts to bring the candidates to the highest pitch of efficiency by the time the title tournament is started.

Columbia and Princeton have decided to hold interclass contests so that positions on the 'Varsity sextets may be earned in actual competition, and most of the men are already rounding into shape. Yale and Pennsylvania expect to draw on the football squads for some of their players and will not have their teams in working order until later.

Princeton appears to have the best chances at the intercollegiate pennant. Captain Nourse and Selby, the two greatest scoring forwards of 1915, are again on hand, as are also the veterans Kahn, Rutherford, Latrobe, Gennert, and Scudder, and great things are expected of N. Nourse, Helm, and Warden, who played a star game on last year's freshman team. The Tiger defense line, none too strong in 1915, promises this season to be extremely hard to pierce, so that on paper the team looks almost invincible.

Columbia, nevertheless, feels confident of making a telling bid for supremacy, and the confidence is not unwarranted. In Captain Mouquin, Cooper, Stevenson, Vander Water, Noble, Rogers, Herbert, Gibson, Rosen, and Cleveland the Morningside coaches have sterling material which only needs good handling to furnish a winning aggregation. Individual play has been Columbia's chief fault in the past. If the present men can be taught the secrets of team work they need fear no rivals.

Yale will undoubtedly have the strongest backfield in the league, but must develop more able, versatile scorers than last year if they expect victory. Steiner, the best forward, is too light to be as successful in attack as big, fast men like Nourse and Selby of Princeton. Still, the necessary timber is not lacking. Miller, Brophy, Galt, Farrar, Black, Durfee, Kent, Scovil, and Landstreet have the qualifications and only require hard work and competent coaching to be up to the standard.

Prospects at Pennsylvania are not especially bright just now. Captain Shryock and Russell unquestionably have the leading forwards, but the only other experienced players which can be counted upon are Swan, Ratner, Walsh, and Treadwell, so that rather green recruits may have to be called upon. There are a number of promising new men in training, however, and it is probable that a few stars may presently come to light and considerably improve the outlook for the Red and Blue.

The College of the City of New York squad is composed almost entirely of players lacking the weight to prove effective in a hard fought contest. Their speed may give them the advantage for a while, but the heavier teams will eventually wear them down. The 'Varsity sextet will probably be made up of Clendenin, Babor, Rudinsky, Kerekes, Schulman, and Auerbach. They have exhibited the best work so far.

WAR ON "SUBMARINE" FISH.

Sharks and Dogfish, Destroyers of Food Fish, to be Exterminated.

When James J. Condon proposed that the 2,000 members of the United Anglers' League begin war upon those wolves of the sea, the dogfish and all members of the shark family, he started something.

Maine fishermen believe that the scarcity of game and food fish in salt water is due to the voracity of the predaceous members of the shark family, and to the dogfish in particular. These undesirable denizens of the sea, who swarm in the Summer at just the time when food fish are spawning and when fingerling fish of a previous year's hatching are the most toothsome of morsels, devour more of the desirable edible fish in one Summer than are caught for food during an entire year. That is the conclusion of C. A. Davis of Portland, Chairman of a Maine State Commission appointed to make war on sharks and dogfish. That has been Mr. Davis's contention for many years and has earned for him the nickname "Dogfish" Davis.

"Perhaps the members of the United Anglers' League are wrong in campaigning for restocking of our ocean food farms and have failed to see that the cause of this scarcity of fish in salt waters is the prevalence of sea monsters that devour all the fish our Fish Commissioners plant," said Mr. Condon to the Anglers' League. "If we are on the wrong tack, and if we should be fighting dogfish and sharks instead of working for more hatcheries, would it not be wise to acknowledge the fact and start a crusade against the dogfish and shark?"

War on the dogfish has been waged by the Canadian Government off the Nova Scotia Coast for many years. Nova Scotia pays a bounty of 40 cents a hundred pounds for all dogfish caught off Nova Scotia shores and delivered to the rendering plants, where these scourges of the sea are converted into oil and fertilizer.

Maine's commission is "authorized and empowered" to interest the authorities of all the Atlantic States and the national Government in its proposition to rid the ocean of predaceous fish, which, it believes, are causing more havoc among the food fish than all the fleets of menhaden steamers in existence and more than all the nets that can be planted in the waters where netting is not prohibited. It is believed that the cry of 'Chuck in the young fry and they will escape their enemies and give us plenty of game and food fish" is wrong; that something to save the artificially propagated youngsters should be done to aid the Government in its work.

Teams with No Leaders.

Captains and managers of several athletic teams at Columbia have not returned to college this Fall, and their successors will be chosen in a few weeks. Gilbert H. Higgins, Captain-elect of the gymnastic squad, has not returned to take up graduate work, and the manager, V. C. Constant, failed to register again this fall. F. C. Bowers, the assistant manager, will act in both capacities until the vacancies are filled. The fencing team is also without a leader, since no one was elected to succeed Louis Mouquin, last year's Captain. Another open captaincy is on the tennis team, and A. H. Gedney, assistant manager, has left college, leaving another vacancy.

Columbia's crew has been without regular managers for two years. Early last year Manager Philip Cobden left college, and for several months the work was carried on by William F. Walker, the assistant manager. He in turn left college in the Spring, and then R. F. Griffen, who had been track manager the previous year, was elected to conduct the business affairs of the oarsmen. Walker returned to college again this Fall, but his eligibility has not been decided, and in the meanwhile L. S. Scofield, the new assistant manager, is doing the work. E. R. Winslow, manager of the freshman crew last Spring and in line for promotion, failed to return, making the situation still more intricate. Howard Dilman, freshman tennis manager, also did not resume studies on Morningside Heights this Fall.

Elementary Schools Basket Ball.

There will be no city championship decided this year in the elementary schools basket ball tournaments, but the championship of each borough will be decided and medals will be presented to the first, second and third teams in each borough tourney. In addition, the Vanderbilt Basket Ball City Championship Trophy will be presented for two months to the school winning the championship in each borough. The teams entered in the tournaments will be divided into districts and the games will be played until the district winners are decided. Then interdistrict games will be played to decide the borough championships. One hundred and five teams have already entered the tourney in the two classes, the junior 95 pounds and the senior 125 pounds.

Cooper Cup Won by Laverty.

BOXERS MUST NOT TAKE OTHERS' NAMES

Confusion as to Al McCoys and Frankie Callahans Causes Commission Order.

In order to do away with the practice of boxers adopting the names of men whose reputations have already been gained in the ring, the Athletic Commission at its weekly session in 41 Park Row yesterday passed a resolution to the effect that no boxer shall be permitted to usurp a name in current use by another ring performer. To accomplish this end, the committee, after first consulting the Attorney General's office to ascertain whether it has power to enforce the rule, will compel all boxers competing in this State to register their family names and their assumed names with the Secretary. The committee has taken up the task of a Solomon, for already it is confronted with the task of solving whether Al McCoy, so-called middleweight champion, or New Al McCoy, formerly Al Thiel, is entitled to use that name. Also whether Frankie Callahan, the Brooklyn lightweight who has been boxing under this title for years, shall have precedent over Frankie Callahan, a Manhattan featherweight, who boxes under his proper name.

The McCoy question is practically settled, because the New Al McCoy some time ago received permission from Brooklyn Judge to change his name from Thiel to McCoy and apparently there is nothing for the commission to do but permit both to employ the title. Their decision in the Callahan mater will be announced at next week's meeting at which both boxers have been requested to appear.

Complaint was received by the athletic board that, in spite of the rule against boxers selling tickets for clubs, this practice is flagrantly carried on at present. The commission made a formal request for any evidence of this nature to be presented at its next meeting and promised drastic action against any club or boxers found violating the rule.

Chairman Wenck officiated at the open meeting yesterday, and announced that as yet he had nothing definite to say regarding decisions. Whether referees will be permitted to render verdicts in New York depends on the attitude of Governor Whitman, whose position is expected to be reflected by the man who will be appointed to succeed James R. Price, who resigned last week.

The license of the Vanderbilt A. C. was renewed, and the Sharkey A. C. received two weeks' grace to produce a year's lease on its present clubhouse.

MORAN AND COFFEY READY.

Fans Believe There Will Be a Knockout in Garden Tonight.

Frank Moran and Jim Coffey will battle tonight at Madison Square Garden for the right to box Jess Willard for the heavyweight title. Interest in the match is keen on account of the general belief that a knockout will be scored before the end of the tenth round. Both Coffey and Moran finished their training yesterday, only indulging in light work and saving their hands by eliminating boxing and bag punching.

Coffey tipped the scales at 202 pounds, while Moran is a pound lighter, although he expects to weigh in at 205. The Dublin Giant has the physical advantages of height, reach, and youth in his favor, but the experience of long distance fights and meeting higher class men than Coffey has made Moran an equal choice with the fans who speculate on boxing contests.

The records of both men stamp them as good heavyweights, Coffey having disposed of twenty-seven of his opponents by the knockout route in thirty-eight battles, while Moran has stopped nineteen men in thirty-nine engagements. Moran has not appeared in America since he beat Al Palzer in seven rounds almost two years ago, but since then he has stood off Jack Johnson for twenty rounds and stopped four men, including Bombardier Wells.

Benny Leonard and Johnny Drummie will box in the semi-final for ten rounds, while Young Ketchell and Jem Mace will go six rounds in the curtain raiser. The first bout will start at 8:45 o'clock and the main event at 10 o'clock.

Allie Nack Wins Broadway Bout.

Allie Nack of the Bronx, defeated Josh Matthews of Ridgewood in their ten-round final at the matinee boxing show at the Broadway Sporting Club yesterday afternoon. Nack was the aggressor throughout and he pounded Matthews at will, but the rugged Ridgewood boxer took lots of punishment and despite the hammering he received finished strong. Nack showed a lot of cleverness, and his ability to duck Matthews's swings was almost uncanny. In the other ten-round bout, Chick Sinsler of Scranton, defeated Al Doc Schumacker of New York. The results of the three-round semi-professional bouts follow: Tony Astor defeated Kid McCoy; Jack Dempsey defeated Young Bloody Yerkes, three rounds; Young Charlie Chaplin defeated Young Rose, three rounds; Young Bernard and Joe Cullen, three rounds to a draw; Teddy Lewis and Young Colloty, three rounds to a draw; Leo Curtin knocked out Jack Coyle in the second round; George Sharkey defeated Young Earle, stopped in the third round by the referee; Battling Joe defeated Young Kehoe, three rounds; the Yankee Kid defeated Johnny Hawley, stopped in first round by referee; Young Martin defeated Jimmy Austin, three rounds.

Colored Boxers in Brooklyn Ring.

The Vanderbilt Athletic Club in Brooklyn and its immediate vicinity presented a dark spot on the horizon last night when the ebony-hued advocates of the gentle art of hit and get away had their inning. The principals in all the bouts were colored, and every variety of boxing known to the enthusiasts was witnessed. Negro Chink and Battling Gans were the principals in the main bout, and at the final bell honors were about even. Chink had an advantage of six and one-half pounds in weight, but Gans's cleverness enabled him to hold his heavier opponent to a draw.

In the semi-final ten-round bout Wee Wee Barton and Joe Gans, a Brooklyn colored boxer, also boxed to a draw.

Astey Knocks Out Holt.

Willie Astey, the west side boxer, last night added another victory to his list when he knocked out George Holt in the third round of their scheduled ten-round contest, which was the main attraction at the Olympic A. C., in Harlem. Astey assumed the aggressive at the beginning of the bout, and in the opening round he sent his opponent to the floor with a right to the jaw. Again in the second session he floored Holt, and in the third round, with a right cross to the jaw and a hard left to the stomach, he finished his opponent.

Carey Phelan and Joe Grady boxed ten interesting rounds to a draw as the semi-final attraction.

Sweeney and Chick Draw.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 18.—Knockout Sweeney of New York and Joe Chick of Gloucester, Mass., fought a ten-round bout to a draw at the Knickerbocker A. C. tonight. Both contestants cleverly avoided extending themselves and the contest was devoid of any real action. Sweeney doing most of the leading, his blows apparently lacking any force. Chick held his own and did not back ground at any stage of the battle.

MRS. T. MORSE NAMED EX-HUSBAND IN WILL

Harry S. Black Appointed Trustee, and Tyler Morse, the Widower, Executor.

ESTATE WORTH $4,000,000

$250,000 Left to Mr. Black Under Compact Made Before the Testatrix Divorced Him.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., Oct. 18.—Harry S. Black, Chairman of the Board of the United States Realty and Improvement Company, and the divorced husband of Mrs. Tyler Morse, who died last Oct. 10 in Morse Lodge, her summer home at Westbury, is named as trustee in Mrs. Morse's will, which was filed here today, and which disposes of an estate estimated at $4,000,000 to $6,000,000. By an agreement mentioned in the will Mr. Black also receives $250,000 "in lieu of all claims against the estate."

Tyler Morse, whom Mrs. Morse married on Jan. 17, 1906, little more than six months after her divorce from Mr. Black, is named as executor of the will and as trustee should Mr. Black cease to hold this post.

There are few specific bequests mentioned in the will, and the residuary estate is divided between Tyler Morse and Fuller Chenery, a nephew of Mrs. Morse. The items specified are $5,000 outright to Mrs. Almira Fuller, Mrs. Morse's grandmother, who lives in Baldwinsville, Mass.; $250,00 to Mr. Black, a trust fund divided between Mr. Morse and Fuller Chenery, and Morse Lodge, which goes to Mr. Morse.

The agreement providing for the payment to Mr. Black of $250,000 was signed on Dec. 6, 1904, about six months before the divorce and at about the time Mr. and Mrs. Black separated. Its terms provided that the money was to be paid to Mr. Black provided Mrs. Black, as she then was, died prior to April 1, 1920. In the event of Mr. Black dying before his wife and of her surviving until April 1, 1920, the money was to revert to her estate.

Under another agreement made at the same date, and subscribed to also by the New York Trust Company, one-third of a fund held in trust by this company was to go to Fuller Chenery if he lived on April 1, 1920, though under certain conditions, not specified in the will, he was not to get the money until April 1, 1925.

The balance of this trust fund, all other moneys subject to Mrs. Morse's check, and much jewelry and personal property enumerated in the will go to Tyler Morse, including the property in Westbury and all personal property there, except such jewelry as is bequeathed otherwise. But Mrs. Morse stipulated in the will that her husband should forfeit all right in Morse Lodge should he marry again. Another clause provided that Mr. Morse might sell this property, prior to any other marriage, and should not be required to account to any one.

Lawyers said yesterday that this would open only a doubtful means for Mr. Morse to realize on the property should he desire to remarry, since any purchaser would take the property with a clouded title due to the original clause in the will which, they thought, made quite clear Mrs. Morse's intention not to let her husband have the lodge and another wife at the same time. Should Mr. Morse remarry, Morse Lodge was to go in trust to Fuller Chenery, now a student at St. Mark's School. Mr. Black is to hold in trust all that is eventually to go to Fuller Chenery. The will was dated on Jan. 17, 1911.

Mrs. Morse was about thirty-seven years old and was the only daughter of the late George A. Fuller, head of the Fuller Construction Company, from whom she inherited $2,500,000. Mr. Black was comparatively a poor man when he married Miss Fuller in 1895. She was said then to be only 17 years old. He soon organized the realty company. John W. Gates, James Stillman and other wealthy men joined the project and Mr. Black made a fortune for himself, and, when he and his wife separated before her suit for divorce, he was enabled to return to her $6,000,000, representing her fortune and the profits he had earned for her. They were divorced on May 31, 1905, and Justice Keogh in the Supreme Court at White Plains ordered the papers sealed so that the details of the suit never were made public.

Daughters Get Estate of Baptist Church of Christ Pastor.

Rev. Edward Judson, who was pastor of the Memorial Baptist Church of Christ when he died on Oct. 24, 1914, left a net estate of $25,587, according to the appraisal of his estate, filed yesterday by Transfer Tax Appraiser Berwin in the office of the State Controller. The total estate amounted to $45,494, but there were debts, the largest of which was $10,300 due the Bank of the Metropolis. The two daughters, the Misses Sarah Elizabeth and Margaret Judson, were the beneficiaries.

The assets included land and building at Hamilton, N. Y., appraised at $2,100; bank deposits of $394; personalty and jewelry, $617; stocks and bonds, $21,160; and notes and mortgages amounting to $20,014.

CHANGED HIS SON'S NAME.

Wife Says Dr. Birch Had Boy Christened in Secret.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Oct. 18.—Mrs. Maude Kimball Birch testified in the Supreme Court today in her action for separation against her husband, Dr. Francis Abbott Birch. They were married on Oct. 21, 1908, and separated last March, because, as Mrs. Birch testified, her husband was very cruel to her and once pulled her out of bed, and when she crawled beneath the bed he pulled her out by the hair.

Dr. Birch denies all the acts of cruelty alleged by his wife, and asserts that she was jealous of his women patients, that she frequently sought to learn the nature of their visits to his office, and spied on him.

Mrs. Birch testified that her husband had taught their four-year-old son to call her a liar, and that after the boy had been named Francis Kimball Birch her husband one day took the boy in his automobile, without telling her anything about it, and had him christened Francis Abbott Birch after him. She declared this was a cruel blow to her, and she to d her husband he was driving her from him as fast as he could. She continued:

"My husband would return home invariably between midnight and 4 A. M. He would invariably come to my room, light the gas, and awaken me and the baby. When I remonstrated with him he would say that the house belonged to him. Some mornings when he awakened me he would say: 'You have an easy meal ticket and You are having a soft time, ain't you.'"

Mrs. Birch also declared that her husband had a fondness for kicking over chairs, which made the maids so nervous they couldn't work. She said Dr. Birch had an income of $6,000 a year. She asks for a separation decree, alimony, and custody of the boy.

Shot by Cartridge Put on Track.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Oct. 18.—Jacob Piscodlas of 208 Geneva Street is in General Hospital here, suffering from a bullet wound in his head as the result of the prank of a fifteen-year-old boy, who placed a .38-calibre bullet on the trolley track in Elizabeth Avenue, near Spring Street. Piscodlas was walking along the street with a child in his arms when a trolley car exploded the bullet. He dropped to the sidewalk. Charles Godfrey of 819 Elizabeth Avenue, who is said to have put the bullet on the track, could not be found by the police. It was said that he jumped on a train and left the city.

READ BIBLE, KEPT SINGLE.

Woman Suing Waite Says Scriptures Changed Him.

A few of the details in the $100,000 breach-of-promise suit begun by Mrs. Mollie Koswick, a wealthy widow, against William A. Waite, President of a storage warehouse company, came to the surface yesterday when Mrs. Koswick tried to get from Justice Philbin of the Supreme Court permission to substitute another attorney for Benno Loewy. The latter refused to surrender any of the letters or other exhibits in the case until paid a fee of $100. Decision was reserved.

In an affidavit Mrs. Koswick said that Mr. Waite promised to marry her at the Hotel Gramatan on June 14, 1914, and that when he changed his mind he said he had been reading the Bible and was sure St. Peter would not open the gates for him if he took another wife. He told her, also, that he could not marry again in this State because he had been divorced.

Mrs. Koswick said that before this determination was reached Mr. Waite was very eager for a speedy marriage, and even wanted to hurry on the marriage of her eighteen-year-old son, Alexander, to a Miss McKenna. To accomplish this, she said, Mr. Waite had induced her to give her son the diamond engagement ring she had received from the defendant. Mr. Waite, according to Mrs. Koswick, gave Alexander Koswick a job at $17 a week, with the view of hastening his nuptials. Then came the reference to the Bible and the expressed fear that if he married he would never be able to get into heaven.

CAUSTIC TO A MOURNER.

Seligman Banking House Reminds Mr. Ridder of Lusitania.

Publication by the Staats-Zeitung of the names of four banking firms within a mourning border, as German-American houses which had helped the enemies of the Fatherland to obtain a loan of $500,000,000 in this country, brought a caustic answer yesterday from J. & W. Seligman & Co., one of the four named. After calling Herman Ridder's attention to the fact that the members of the firm "are not Germans, nor yet German-Americans, but unqualified, unadjectived Americans, the firm says in a letter sent to the Staats-Zeitung:

"While the readers of the Staats-Zeitung, we are under the impression that there was no mourning border in the middle of your front page when American children and American women entitled to the sympathy and protection of every American were, together with their fathers, husbands, and brothers, deliberately and heartlessly murdered by the sinking of the Lusitania.

"That black mourning border you seem to have reserved for American bankers seeking to render a disinterested service to their country by helping to keep its industries going through credits to its foreign customers."

TO SEEK OUR GOOD-WILL.

Women of German Descent Incorporate a Society Here.

Supreme Court Justice Erlanger granted a certificate of incorporation yesterday to American women of German descent who desire to create a society for the promotion of sentiments of esteem, love, and respect between America and Germany.

The incorporators are Emma Ruppert, 5 West 86th Street; Edith A. Reiffert, 451 Convent Avenue; Lydia Arnold, 468 Washington Avenue, Yonkers; Emma Schwartz, the Hotel Majestic; Bertha Hauth Lawrence, 1,121 Madison Avenue; Josephine Stork, 533 West 111th Street; Stephanie Neu, 41 Convent Avenue, and Helen Soljer, 269 Seventy-eighth Street, Bay Ridge. The purpose of the incorporators is to begin work in this State and then to extend it into the other States.

Justice Ford granted a certificate of incorporation to the "Tadenzy Kosciuszko Polish and Lithuanian Political Union." Its purpose is to promote patriotism and to teach loyalty to the United States. The President of the society is the Rev. Dr. Joseph Letanzat.

DOG COMMITS SUICIDE.

Valuable Pet Leaps from Roof of the Hotel Netherland.

A dog committed suicide at the Hotel Netherland the other day. A Toronto family, in which there is an 8-year-old girl, has been stopping at the hotel. A much-prized pet of the family was a Boston terrier, which cost $150. The other morning the little girl was insistent that her pet be taken out for an airing and summoned a bellboy to the room.

It was against the rules, but, not scorning the possibility of a tip, the bellboy consented to take the dog up to the roof and give him his exercise in that rarified atmosphere. As the boy and the dog reached the roof the dog spied the parapet, which is more than two feet tall, and made a spring at it. He went over it. The first thing to be met on the other side is the roof of a building some five or six stories below. There the dog landed.

RETURNS WASHINGTON WILL

Fairfax County, Va., Gets Document Back—Morgan Suit Dismissed.

FAIRFAX COURT HOUSE, Va., Oct. 18.—Martha Washington's will, which was taken from the court house here by a Union trooper during one of the battles of Bull Run and later found its way into the collection of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, was returned to the county archives today with elaborate ceremonies.

Recently the State of Virginia sued J. P. Morgan in the Supreme Court of the United States to recover the historic document. Mr. Morgan suggested that it be placed in Mount Vernon. Fairfax County folk, however, claimed it as part of their court records, and today it was restored to its place beside the will of General Washington. The case against Mr. Morgan has been dismissed.

Short Circuit Blocks Tube.

The Hudson and Manhattan tube system was blocked for nine minutes at 9:37 yesterday morning by a short circuit in a field coil of a main generator in the power house at Henderson and Steuben Streets, Jersey City. The trains carry storage batteries for such emergencies by which the trains in the tubes were lighted until the power returned.

CANNON BURIED IN SAND.

Turks Use Secret Spots in the Desert to Store Supplies Also.

In Egypt there is a widespread belief that Turks and Germans have hit upon a novel method of hiding their cannon, rifles, and ammunition in the desert, and that it is this which has enabled them to produce arms and munitions as if by magic when they are needed in crises, according to Charles C. Goodfellow of M. Melachrino & Co., who has just returned from Cairo.

"The Turks are said to have turned certain spots in the desert into well equipped war stations by digging deep beneath the surface of the sand and burying that they need in an emergency, from huge guns to canned foods," Mr. Goodfellow said yesterday. "The dryness of the desert keeps the buried articles in good condition and ready for instant use. So persistent have the reports to this effect been that English officers have made several searches in the territory that has been occupied by the Turks and Germans, but, of course, they have found nothing, for to bury a thing in the desert is like sinking it in the ocean.

"To find the things that they have buried themselves, in fact, according to the generally credited reports, the Turks sink them at spots which can be located thereafter only by the use of elaborate charts and astronomical instruments, and are able to determine the secret spots again by the location of the stars, as a mariner determines his exact location at sea. Landmarks by which the hidden war supplies might be found are out of the question, as the sand dunes are shifting continually and changing the appearance on the surface.

"In many of their engagements the Turks have managed to get even the large seven-inch guns into action in the middle of the desert with almost lightning-like rapidity, and this fact is accepted as strong support for the reports regarding the hidden war materials. Heavy arms have also been known to disappear as quickly as they appeared, and it is argued that they were buried for later use in case the Turks should recapture the territory in which they are hidden."

SOLVES BASEBALL PUZZLE.

Student Corrects Professor on Ownership of Pitched Ball in Air.

Who possesses a baseball after it has left the hand of the pitcher and is traveling toward the batter is no puzzle to David Schnur of 94 Nassau Street, South Orange, N. J., a student in New York University, though Professor Galvin Mc Clelland of the New Jersey Law School put it to his pupils recently as a difficult test of their knowledge of law. Incidentally young Mr. Schnur says the professor errs when he asserts that the pitcher is the possessor.

Mr. Schnur says the pitcher not only is not the possessor, after the ball leaves his hand, but actually never is the possessor, being only a servant of the baseball club which legally owns the ball. In an opinion such as he might hand down from the bench if he should be elevated to it in later years, Mr. Schnur says in part:

> It has often been decided and is now the well-settled law that goods in the bare charge of custody of a servant are legally in possession of the master (Oxford v. State, 33 Ala., 416; Reg v. Samways, 26 Eng., L. & Eq., 576; People v. Belden, 37 Cal., 51.)
> Now when the pitcher throws the ball, thus releasing it from his custody, does the possession still remain with his club or does it pass into the possession of the opposing club while still in the air on its way to the batter and catcher?
> Possession in law is most usually understood as associated with possession in fact. This is the normal aspect of the right. The law would be much simpler than it is if it were held that actual control or custody invariably gives legal possession, whether the custodian exercises control on his own account or as the servant or otherwise on behalf of the owner. But no system of law has gone that length.
> Possession in law follows invariably upon a complete taking, whether rightful or not. Indeed, it is more correct to say that any power to use and exclude others, however small, will suffice, if accompanied by the animus possidendi, provided that no one else has the animus possidendi and an equal or greater power. (Terry, Princ. of Anglo-American Law, p. 268.)

Mr. Schnur, declaring a jury not free to hold that having nearly taken fish will do as well as taking fish, asserts that in the present case the opposing club cannot be said to have taken possession of the ball because it might do so, and concludes:

> When possession is changed without consent not only must the newcomer have at least as much actual control as would be evidence of possession if there were nothing to the contrary, but he must effectually exclude the former possessor. Since this has not been accomplished by the opposing club, the possession of the ball while still in the air continues to remain legally with the club of the pitcher who threw it.

Baseball fans contend that some pitchers have no actual control whatever, and that the balls they pitch are not even "accompanied by the animus possidendi."

PAUL LAMBERT & CO. FAIL.

Buffalo Brokerage Concern Has Liabilities Exceeding $400,000.

BUFFALO, Oct. 18.—The assignment of Paul Lambert & Co., stock brokers, of this city, with many offices throughout this country and Canada were announced today. Herbert B. Butterfield, an attorney, was named as assignee. The liabilities are reported to range from $400,000 to $500,000.

Assignee Butterfield will begin at once to make up a list of the creditors which the general assignment does not attempt to give, that document being the ordinary assignment in blanket form without any statement of liabilities or creditors' claims.

William C. Van Antwerp, Chairman of the Quotation Committee of the Stock Exchange, issued this statement when news of the failure was received from Buffalo:

> The public announcement from Buffalo that Paul Lambert & Co. have announced their suspension following the suspension of J. L. Holland & Co. on Wednesday last should be very gratifying to every friend of law and order. The New York Stock Exchange has done what it could to help to rid the country of bucket shops and the total number closed since Jan. 1 is 236, operating in thirteen States and in Canada.
> Now that they have been driven out, the important thing is to keep them out. In this work the Exchange asks the support of public opinion, the courts, the legislatures, the public service commissions, and the press. Meantime we shall continue to do our share, prompted by nothing more nor less than a determination to prevent this peculiarly repulsive form of lawbreaking and to carry out in letter and in spirit the recommendations of the Hughes Commission.

Mr. Van Antwerp said that so far as the Exchange's investigators could discover all the independent wire houses had closed their doors, including the members of two systems extending from Montreal to St. Louis. All told, more than 130 branch offices of the systems have gone out of business in two weeks.

Jersey Railroads' Rate Hearing.

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 18.—The contest of the Pennsylvania and Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Companies before the State Public Utilities Commission to prove their own valuation of their lines in New Jersey as a basis for obtaining from the State board a ruling that their proposed increased passenger rates within the State are just and reasonable and should be permitted to stand, opened today. The hearing is a continuation of the one on the proposed increases which were to have been put into effect on Dec. 15 last, but which the Utilities Board refused to sanction until their reasonableness had been demonstrated.

Brothers Held on Arson Charge.

Max Raynes and his brother Louis, 14 years old, of 704 Newark Avenue, Jersey City, were held on charges of arson by Judge James J. Dolan in the First Criminal Court yesterday. Max for the Grand Jury and Louis for the Juvenile Court. Louis Raynes was arrested early Sunday morning on a charge of having tried to burn the stationery and cigar store of Samuel Barber at 498 Summit Avenue. The police say he confessed and implicated his brother. Max Barber bought the store recently of the Raynes boys' father, and the transfer is said to have caused the resentment of the boys.

MAKES MOUNTAIN RECORD.

New Canadian Northern Sends Heaviest Train Over Rockies.

Special to The New York Times.

LUCERNE, B. C., Oct. 18.—The train carrying eighty members of the Canadian Parliament, who are formally opening the third and newest of the Dominion routes to the Pacific, crossed the Rocky Mountains through the Yellowhead Pass at 7 o'clock tonight, Washington time, incidentally establishing a new record in railroad transportation through the mountains of the continent.

It is not only the first train over the new linked Canadian Northern Railroad, but it is the longest and heaviest that ever passed through the Rockies, and it went up and through the pass and is now descending the western slope drawn by a single engine of the ordinary Canadian Northern 35 per cent. classification (the heaviest used by the road is classified at 50 per cent.) at an average speed of forty miles per hour. The grade is the lowest of any transcontinental line, only one-half of 1 per cent. westbound and seven-tenths of 1 per cent. eastbound. What this means in railroading can be imagined when it is said that the Canadian Pacific grade through the mountains is 2.02 per cent., the Canadian Grand Trunk's 1 per cent., and the grades of the United States railroads across the Rockies vary from the Santa Fé's 2.6, the highest, to the Northern Pacific's 1.06, the Union Pacific coming in between with a grade of 1.08.

The train which established this record is exactly eight feet short of a quarter of a mile in length, and weighs with engine, and exclusive of its human freight of upward of 200 persons, more than 1,200 tons. It is a very distinguished train, with two dining cars sandwiched in among the eight sleepers, along with a Pullman entertainment hall, in which every evening railroad men and their guests entertain each other with songs and stories, to the accompaniment of a piano; with a baggage car, and the private car of Sir William McKenzie, President of the Canadian Northern; Vice President D. B. Hanna, and Secretary W. H. Moore. As it rounds the mountain curves passengers at the end of the train see the engine far ahead on the next curve, and marvel at the huge length.

The last stop before entering the mountains was at Tollerton, centre of a newly created and now first approachable group of hamlets. The total population of the whole region is less than a thousand, but it was all out, to wonder and rejoice, with a silver band of nine pieces to play "Canada."

"We are building up the West," said the leader of the delegation to Sir William. "That is our part for Canada and the Empire. We have sent fifty men to the front, and more will go when needed. This has been a great day for Western Canada."

ORDUNA BRINGS BIG MAIL.

Cunarder, with Three Other Ships, to Transport Canadians.

The Cunard liner Orduna, due to arrive from Liverpool late tomorrow or early Thursday, has 5,342 sacks of mail, the largest number ever landed here from one ship apart from the annual Christmas mail. It includes the mails of Saturday, Oct. 9 and Oct. 12. She has 30 first, 118 second, and 57 third class passengers, and immediately after discharging cargo will leave for Halifax to embark 3,000 Canadian troops for England.

Other steamers already left for transport service are the Cunarder Saxonia and the Anchor liner California. The White Star liner Lapland leaves today from this port. The four steamers, with two Leyland steamers, will convey 15,000 Canadians to war service.

SHORN OF HER PANTALETTE.

Girl's Ruffled Finery Arouses Hostility in Amiable Bulldog.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Oct. 18.—A young woman whose high-crowned Puritan hat, Copenhagen blue velvet dress, and cream-colored silk ruffled pantalettes were the last word in fashion stepped out of the North Avenue station of the New York, Westchester & Boston Railway this afternoon and started to cross the sidewalk to a waiting automobile. She stopped to speak to a young man who was leading a bulldog by a leash.

As they were talking, the dog, after wagging his tail in greeting to the young woman, suddenly saw the pantalettes. He backed off, growled, and with a spring attacked the ruffles. The young man tried to pull him away, but he did not let go until one pantalette was wrecked, disclosing a Copenhagen blue silk stocking underneath. The young woman retreated to the waiting automobile, and the young man, after boxing the dog's ears, made the animal apologize.

DEPLORES PUBLIC HANGING.

Jackson County Affair Arouses the Ire of Governor Dunne.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Oct. 18.—The hanging of Joe De Berry, a negro, at Murphysboro, on Saturday, to which more than a thousand persons were admitted by the Sheriff, was referred to as a "scandal and disgrace to the State" by Governor Dunne today in a telegram to Sheriff James A. White, of Jackson County, who had charge of the execution. In his message the Governor asked that the hanging of Elston Scott, a negro, set for next Friday in Jackson County, be conducted with "decorum, decency and privacy."

De Berry was hanged for the murder of a white woman. Scott is to die for the killing of his sister-in-law.

MURPHYSBORO, Ill., Oct. 18.—Sheriff White, of this county, replied to the message of Governor Dunne regarding the execution of Joe De Berry, saying:

"Execution which took place here Saturday was conducted with solemnity, decency and with as much privacy as any other legal execution which ever took place in Southern Illinois. Press reports greatly exaggerated. I am in no way responsible for their misrepresentations. I have not brought disgrace or scandal on the State or my county and regret certain things were reported by the press as being true which in fact never occurred."

THREE CALL SHORING WEAK.

Subway Workers Tell of Timber Lack in Seventh Avenue.

More evidence of the insufficiency in the timber used in the subway cut in Seventh Avenue, where an accident occurred, in which seven were killed, was given yesterday at the adjourned inquest before Coroner Feinberg. Celestino Cuchelli, a timber foreman, and Luigi Conetti and Charles Zerna, two timber men, testified that they had thrown up their jobs with the contractor because they were afraid to continue without more timber.

John R. Healy, Chief Inspector of the Bureau of Combustibles, said that too much dynamite had been used, considering the abnormal condition of the rock and that the structure was weak.

The inquest will continue at 10 o'clock this morning.

Twice Charged with Murder.

For the second time since last April James Bovina, known also as "Jimmy Bennett," was charged yesterday with the murder of Frank Misrendino, who was shot in a saloon row in Newark on April 21. The first charge was not taken to the Grand Jury, as it was said the evidence was flimsy. Under Captain Thomas Connell the Detective Bureau got new evidence. Some women have admitted, it is asserted by the police, that they saw Bovina fire the shot. The police also have witnesses, they saw, whom Misrendino told when he was dying that "Jimmy Bennett" shot him. The wounded man refused to tell the police who had shot him.

NEW SUIT ENJOINS SHOE MACHINERY CO.

Forbidden to Enforce Tying Leases by Temporary Order in St. Louis Federal Court.

UNDER CLAYTON TRUST ACT

Supplemental to Sherman Law Suit Pending in Supreme Court—Permanent Injunction Sought.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Oct. 18.—The first important Government suit under the Clayton Anti-Trust act was begun here today against the United Shoe Machinery Corporation, its subsidiaries and a score of individuals. The petition, filed in the Federal District Court by direction of Attorney General Gregory, alleges unlawful practices that substantially lessen competition and tend to monopoly.

The Government asked for an order restraining the company from enforcing the contracts by which it binds lessees of its machines not to use the machines of competitors. Judge Dyer granted a temporary injunction against the enforcement of the contract clauses complained of, and set Oct. 27 as the date for a hearing. The Government asks also for a permanent injunction against these clauses as illegal and void.

Suit was brought particularly against the United Shoe Machinery Company of Maine, but the United Shoe Machinery Corporation, and the United Shoe Machinery Company of New Jersey, are made defendants, as are also these individuals: Sidney W. Winslow, Louis A. Coolidge, Harold G. Donham, Edward N. Chase, Edward P. Hurd, Elmer P. Howe, William Barbour, George W. Brown, George E. Keith, John H. Hanan, Henry P. Endicott, Edmund Le B. Gardner, Joseph C. Kilham, Rudolph Matz, Charles G. Rice, John H. Connor, Alfred R. Turner, Wallace F. Robinson, Samuel Weil, and William Woodward.

A Supplementary Suit.

The suit is distinct from that begun against the same concern under the Sherman Anti-Trust act several years ago, in which the dissolution of the company as an unlawful combination and monopoly in restraint of trade was sought and which now is before the United States Supreme Court. That suit was tried in Boston. The present action does not seek dissolution, but asks the court to enjoin the company perpetually from further engaging in alleged unlawful practices. There also is the usual prayer for such other "general and further relief" as the court may see fit to give.

One of the unusual features is that the petition contains a request for a temporary order restraining the shoe company from resorting to the practices complained of until determination of the suit. This request was granted.

The new suit was brought because the shoe machinery officials refused to allow the Government to file a supplemental complaint in the Sherman law suit covering the same ground. The fact that St. Louis is an important shoe manufacturing city led to its selection by the Government as the place for filing the new suit. The case has been in preparation at Washington for many months.

The Government's petition charges:

That the United Shoe Machinery Company is a monopoly controlling 98½ per cent. of the trade in shoe machinery in the United States, its principal business being the making and leasing of these machines.

That in certain instances it has fixed and is fixing the prices of such machinery on the condition that the lessee or purchaser shall not use the machinery, supplies, or other commodities of its competitors.

That it grants rebates on prices fixed in some instances in consideration of the use by a lessee of other of its machines; that other leases contain clauses the effect is to establish prices 10 per cent. less to those who agree not to use the machinery supplied by competitors than to those who do not so bind themselves.

The "Unrestricted" Lease.

The petition alleges further that some machines are leased under what is called an "unrestricted" form of lease, which allows lessees in certain cases to use other machines obtained from competitors on payment of "initial premiums." These premiums are in addition to the usual royalties.

"The amounts of these initial premiums," says the petition, "are so large as practically to prohibit the choice of the unrestricted form. Upon the machinery in a factory having an output of from 25,000 to 30,000 pairs of shoes daily the premiums would amount to about $250,000. This sum represents a discount, or rebate, which the defendants grant the manufacturer if he is willing to take his machinery from them upon the illegal condition or understanding that he will not use machinery supplied by competitors of the defendants."

These clauses and others with the same purpose and effect, according to the petition, are being enforced by the shoe company, which has written leases with such clauses executed not only before the passage of the Clayton Act in October, 1914, but since that time as well.

The petition sets forth that there are more than 1,500 manufacturers of shoes in the United States, who annually produce more than 300,000,000 pairs of machine-made shoes, and that "with all but a very few of these the defendants have business relations."

The growth of the United Shoe Machinery Company, which makes machines used principally in preparing and attaching the soles to the uppers of shoes, is declared to be the result of sixteen years of consolidations, bringing together fifty-six concerns at one time in this business.

The petition sets forth that the United Shoe Machinery Company of Maine has a capital stock of $8,000,000 and is owned by the United Shoe Machinery Company of New Jersey. The New Jersey company, it is said, has a capital stock of $20,800,000, owned by the United Shoe Machinery Corporation. The New Jersey company is named as the operating company, and the United Shoe Machinery Corporation, with an authorized capital of $50,000,000, as the holding company for 98½ per cent. of the stock of the other companies.

The new suit is the third anti-trust action begun against the same concern by the Department of Justice in the last few years. Not only is the civil suit to dissolve the concern under the Sherman law now pending in the Supreme Court, but suit under the criminal provisions of the same statute still is pending against some of the officers and Directors.

For his left hand, which was cut off at the wrist by an automobile truck belonging to Montgomery, Ward & Co., Brooklyn branch, George W. Powell, a dock worker, of Himrod Street, Ridgewood, received $12,000 from a jury in the Queens County Supreme Court in Long Island City yesterday. Powell, who is 48 years old, with a wife and six children, sued both the Ward Company and the New York Dock Company for $50,000.

PASTORS TO SEE GARY PLAN.

Will Visit Catholic Adjunct to School 45 Today.

Thirty clergymen of different denominations have been invited to visit the schools in the Bronx this morning where the Gary plan has been inaugurated to study the plan by which Superintendent William Wirt proposes to combine daily school with religious study. The suggestion that this plan be adopted met with some opposition among clergymen who fear the introduction of religion into the public schools would lead to widespread proselyting.

A modification of the Gary plan, by which it is proposed to instruct the children in religion, is being tried out at Public School 45, 189th and Hoffman Streets and Lorillard Place, the Bronx, and this school will be among those visited by the clergymen. Most of the children at this school are Catholics, and children whose parents have asked that they be instructed in Catholic beliefs are sent daily to a class in a building near the school where the Rev. Joseph Cafuzi, of the Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, has agreed to conduct the religious instruction. One Episcopal church is said to have offered its parish rooms not only for Episcopal children, but for children and teachers of other denominations if the plan is approved.

The Board of Education is said to be unwilling to go ahead with the religious instruction plan unless all denominations approve it, and the decision reached by today's visiting committee probably will have a great deal of weight in helping the board to arrive at a definite conclusion in the matter.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Upward Movement Is Resumed, with Better Distribution of Gains—New Credits.

The new week opened auspiciously for the stock market, with a recurrence of much of the old-time enthusiasm over the probable values of stocks affected by the war business. Although the activity did not equal that of previous big days, the undertone was much better, and the dealings were distributed more evenly over the list of railroads and industrials. The railroad issues were in much better favor. Wall Street has at last begun to pay attention to the reports of better traffic prospects.

The war-order specialties were again very strong and showed the largest net gains. American Car and Foundry, American Steel Foundries, Bethlehem Steel, common and preferred, and Studebaker all had net gains at the close of the session of more than four points. What was considered of more importance, however, was the surprising strength of United States Steel, which, on an immense volume of dealing, rose in the last few minutes of the session to 85¾. It closed with a net advance of 3⅛. Republic Iron and Steel was sympathetically affected, and closed at 54⅞. The whole market had a better appearance, and the diversion of interest from stocks of those companies making munitions to issues like Steel, Pressed Steel Car, and the railroads, was considered a good sign.

Bond dealers reported yesterday that the early response to the offering of the new Anglo-French 5 per cent. bonds had been very encouraging, and indications are that the offering will be absorbed by investors without difficulty. The loan of $25,000,000 to Italy led to an expectation that similar financing may be done here for Greece and Holland. Both countries have made tenders for credits in the United States. Arrangements for the creation of large banking credits as supplementary aids to the big two-power loan for the foreign exchange situation have been practically completed, and it is expected that a definite statement of their terms will be made soon after the arrival of Lord Reading and his party in London. It is proposed to open an initial credit between European banks and the institutions in this country for about $100,000,000, which amount would be increased as needs develop to two or three times that sum. In anticipation of some such arrangement sterling exchange rates were much firmer yesterday.

NEW HAVEN ROAD PRUNES EXPENSES

By a Reduction of $5,000,000 It Increases the Net Operating Revenue $3,851,000.

ELLIOTT SAYS IT IS SOLVENT

But He Adds That $150,000,000 Ought to be Put Into the Property in the Next Five Years.

The annual report of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad makes its forty-fourth appearance today in much more modest form than its predecessors. It is about half the size and half the thickness of recent annual statements, which, Howard Elliott explains in his introduction, were costly to issue, and the company believes that a large number of the 26,517 stockholders would prefer a smaller one if they knew it meant a considerable saving.

The New Haven's gross earnings last year were $65,379,000, a decrease of $2,073,000. The expenses were decreased by $5,106,000. The net operating income of $18,502,000 represents an increase of $3,831,000, but there was a loss of $1,966,000 in non-operating income, mostly accounted for by lessened dividends from subsidiaries. After paying rentals of $6,228,000, bond interest of $9,380,000, and other fixed charges there remained a net income for the year of $2,307,000. This is an increase of $2,039,000. The ratio of operating expenses to gross earnings was reduced from 73 per cent. in the previous year to 67.5 per cent.

A sidelight on the change in operating methods under the new management is given in the cost of injuries to passengers. This was $792,000 last year, a decrease of $389,000, and of the sum paid out $485,000 was on account of accidents which occurred prior to July 1, 1914. The estimated amount of unpaid personal injury claims on June 30 was $697,000, as compared with $1,042,000 a year earlier. The amount spent for loss and damage, injuries to persons, and clearing wrecks was $1,412,000, as compared with $1,966,000 in 1914.

Chairman Elliott says in his general remarks:

"The last two years have been the most critical in the history of the company, and there has been difficulty in maintaining its integrity. The settlement with the United States Government was confirmed Oct. 17, 1914, and the securities were transferred to the Trustees appointed thereunder. Since then these Trustees have been in exclusive control of the respective properties, namely, the Boston & Maine, the Connecticut trolleys, and the Rhode Island trolleys.

"Since July 1, 1913, there has been a widespread depression in business, affecting adversely the earning power of your property. This depression has also affected all of the subordinate properties in which your company is interested. This decrease made it necessary to retrench in every way.

"The first three months of the current year show marked improvement in earnings, both gross and net, but the Directors cannot consider the declaration of any dividend until they are assured of the permanent financing of the company.

"It is not too much to say that at least $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 should be spent in the next five years over and above ordinary operating expenses and fixed charges. Part of this money should be taken from earnings and part from the sale of property and securities. The road is solvent, and its next most important problem is to adopt some comprehensive plan for handling its debts and providing funds for making those improvements which are essential."

A classification of the New Haven's stock shows that of the 26,517 stockholders 12,230 live in Massachusetts, 5,578 in Connecticut, 4,271 in New York and 814 in Rhode Island. Nearly 90 per cent. of the stock is held in States traversed by the company's lines.
